This story is one of Guy de Maupassant's last. It was found in his study after his death. From this fact it derives a peculiar psychological interest, entirely outside of its literary merit. It is a striking example of that probing into the black, hidden abysses of life; of that brooding over the horrible, which finally drove the great Frenchman to his gloomy, madman's death.

THE warm soft night was falling slowly

The ladies had stayed in the salon of the villa. Outside, seated in a circle on the garden chairs, the men were smoking. The cigars gleamed in the deepening gloom. The conversation had been of a terrible accident that had happened the day before. Two men and three women had drowned in the river, right in sight of the guests.

"Yes," said General de G——, "such things are terrible, but they are not horrible.

"That word 'horrible' means much more than 'terrible.' An accident like this one alarms, frightens, moves to pity; it does not madden. To feel horror there must be more than the emotion of the soul, more than the spectacle of an awful death, there must be, besides, a shudder of mystery, an abnormal, supernatural sensation of fear. The death of a man even in dramatic circumstances does not cause horror; a battle-field is not horrible; blood is not horrible; the vilest crimes are rarely horrible.

"But I will give you an example. I will relate to you two events in my life that made me understand the meaning of that term 'horror':

"It was during the war of 1870. The army—twenty thousand men in rout, disbanded, demoralized, weary to death—was trying to reform itself on Harvre

"The earth was white with snow. Night was falling. We had eaten nothing for two days. We were fleeing; the Prussians were not far away.

"Beneath a black, heavy, sinister sky, the Normand plains spread in an expanse of livid white spotted with the shadows of trees. In the dull twilight, nothing was heard but a confused, mushy tramp of a driven herd mixed with a vague clashing of sabres and guns. The men, bowed, dirty, ragged, dragged themselves on in a long, weary stride. The skins of their hands stuck to the butts of their weapons, for it was bitter cold that night. Often I would see a young conscript take off his shoes and then at each step he left the imprint of his foot in blood in the snow. A few minutes after, he would sit down by the side of the road to rest awhile, and he would never rise again.

"How many we left thus behind us, of those poor, exhausted soldiers who thought they would rest a moment and then start on again! No sooner had they stopped, ceased to make their clotting blood circulate through their frozen flesh than an invincible torpor nailed them to the gronnd, closed their eyes, paralyzed in a moment this overworked human mechanism. They dropped forwards a little, their foreheads on their knees, without collapsing entirely, for their backs and arms and legs suddenly became rigid, hard and unpliable as wood. And we, the others, more robust, we went on and on, frozen to the marrow, advancing from the mere force of acquired momentum through that snow, that gloom, that desolation, weighed down with sorrow, defeat, despair, penetrated with an abominable sensation of emptiness, and death.

"Two gendarmes came to me. They held between them a singular little man, old, beardless, weazened. They thought he was a spy.

"The word 'spy' spread immediately among the stragglers and a circle formed about us. Somebody cried, 'shoot him!' a hundred voices took up the shout; and all those soldiers who were falling from exhaustion, who remained upright only because they leaned on their guns, were suddenly thrilled with that shudder of animal rage which impels mobs to massacre.

"I tried to speak; I was then major. But superiors had ceased to be obeyed; they would just as soon have shot me myself.

"One of the gendarmes said to me:

"'He has followed us for three days. He is always asking questions about the artillery.'

"I tried to question the captive.

"'What are you doing? What do you want? Why do you follow the army?'

"He mumbled a few words in unintelligible patois. He was really a strange creature with narrow shoulders and roving eye, and so disconcerted before my scrutiny that I did not doubt for a moment but that he was a spy. He seemed very old and feeble. He watched me with an averted face, with an air of mingled humility, stupidity and cunning.

"The men about us were crying 'Shoot him! Shoot him!'

"I said to the gendarmes, 'Guard him; you are responsible for his safety.' I had hardly spoken when a formidable lurch of the crowd hurled me to the ground, and, in a second, I saw the man seized by the infuriated troopers, struck down, dragged to the edge of the road and thrown up against a tree. He sank on the snow, half dead already.

"And the soldiers began shooting at him. They would fire, reload, and fire again. They fought for their turn, filed past the body, discharged their weapons as mourners file past a coffin to sprinkle holy water. Suddenly a cry arose.

"'The Prussians! The Prussians!'

"And I heard the immense report of a whole army running.

"The panic aroused by these shots had seized the executors themselves, and understanding nothing, mad with fear, they ran off and disappeared into the night. I remained alone before the body with the two gendarmes, held there by their sense of duty. They raised the mangled, bloody flesh. 'You must search him,' I said. And I gave them a match-box which I had in my pocket. One of the soldiers lighted the other. I stood between them.

"'A blue blouse, a white shirt, a pair of trousers, a pair of shoes,' enumerated slowly the gendarme who was searching.

"The first match went out; a second was struck. The man went on, while turning the pockets inside out:

"'A knife—horn handle, a bandana handkerchief, a snuff-box, a string, a piece of bread.'

"The second match went out. A third was lit. The gendarme shook the body and then said:

"'That's all.'

"I said:

"'Undress him. There might be something against the skin.'

"And, so that the two soldiers might work together, I lighted them myself. In the momentary flashes of the matches, I could see them take off the clothes one by one, leaving naked that heap of bleeding flesh, yet warm.

"And suddenly one of the gendarmes straightened up with a spring. 'Good God, commandant,' he said hoarsely, 'it's a woman!'

"I cannot describe the singular and poignant feeling that seized my heart then. I could not believe it and I kneeled in the snow, before the shapeless pulp, to see. It was a woman.

"The two gendarmes stood there, paralyzed, waiting for me to say something.

"But I did not know what to say, what to think.

"Then one of them said slowly:

"'Might have been a mother—looking for her son, who was in the artillery, of whom she had no news.'

"'Sure, that might be,' said the other.

"And I, who had seen many terrible things, I began to weep. And, in the frozen night, in the center of the black plain, before this mystery, before this unknown, murdered woman, I learned the meaning of that word—'Horror.'"

* * * * *

"I had the same sensation last year, while getting the story of the Flatters' expedition from an Algerian 'tirailleur.'

"You all know the details of this atrocious tragedy. There is one, however, of which you may be ignorant.

"Colonel Flatters was traveling across the desert, through the territory of the Couaregs—those pirates of the immense ocean of sand which spreads from the Atlantic to Egypt, from the Soudan to Algeria.

"The guides who led the column belonged to the Chambaa tribe.

"One day camp was struck in the middle of the desert, and the Arabs explaining that the spring was a little further on, said they would go there with all the camels and get water.

"One man warned the colonel that he was being betrayed; but Flatters did not heed him and, with the engineers, the surgeons and most of the officers, he accompanied the guides. They were all massacred at the spring and the camels were captured.

"A captain took command of the survivors who had remained in camp, and a retreat was begun. The baggage and provisions were left behind from lack of camels to bear them.

"They began to march back in the shadowless, limitless solitude, beneath the devouring sun which burned them from morning to night.

"A tribe over whose territory they passed offered their submission. They brought some dates into camp. The dates were poisoned. Nearly all of the Frenchmen, and amongst them the last officer, died.

"There remained but a few 'spahis' and some native 'tirailleurs' of the tribe of Chambaa. They had two camels left; these disappeared one night with two Arabs.

"Then the survivors saw that they would have to devour each other. They separated and, in the soft sand, beneath the penetrating flame of the sun, began to walk in a long file, each at a distance beyond rifle shot of the other.

"They marched thus all day, and when a spring was reached, each man drank from it in turn, as soon as the one ahead had regained his distance. They marched thus all day and here and there, in the flat, burning expanse, little columns of dust told of their coming.

"But one morning, one of the travelers turned obliquely in his course, approaching his neighbor. And everybody stopped to look.

"He toward whom the famished soldier approached did not flee; he flattened himself on the sand, put his rifle to his shoulder and took aim. When he judged his adversary near enough, he fired. He missed, and the other, still advancing, brought his gun to his shoulder and shot him dead.

"Then, from all parts of the horizon, the others came running to get their share. And he that had killed quartered the body and divided it.

"And they separated, these irreconcilable allies, separated to come together again at the next killing.

"For two days they lived off the human flesh. Then, famine having seized them again, he that had killed first killed again. And again, like a butcher, he cut up the body and offered the pieces to his companions, keeping for himself his share.

"And thus continued this retreat of cannibals.

"The last Frenchman, Pobe'guin, was massacred at the side of a well, the day before the arrival of the rescuing party.

"Do you understand now what I mean by 'horrible'?"

Translated by James Hopper.

"The Soldiers all About us Were Crying 'Shoot Him! Shoot Him!'"

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

WHAT a week we have had! my dear Diary. It has been marvelously exciting, wonderfully thrilling and tremendously good fun. But, Diary dear, the week of sports is only fun for one crowd. We formed a crowd, and we ate, drank and were merry together. We were the people. We were watched and talked about and envied by all those who were not of us. Why those others object to our enjoying ourselves in our own way, I cannot understand. But they do. Every other crowd has the same advantages, the same choice of friends, the same amount of money, the same education, about the same percentage of good blue blood in their families, and yet they say we run things with such a high hand that Monterey is detestable during our sojourn. Those who enjoy Del Monte are the San Mateo County people. They fetch down their drags, their polo ponies, their baseball team, their best clothes; they, in fact, contribute all the amusement that makes Del Monte worth while during the week of sports. This is a jealous world. Still it cannot hurt us, and we did have a glorious time.

When I wrote to you last, I mentioned that the crowd was coming. When it arrived on the scene I was amazed and bewildered. I had never seen people so apparently out for a gay week. Cart loads of trunks followed in the wake of the 'bus, and that night at dinner I picked out the dressmaker that was getting the trade this year. Of course, most of the gowns were cut low—too low in the back. Girls, girls, I warn you now, and I am married, your gowns are not so pretty cut so low. How many of you have nice shoulder blades? Alas! but three girls in San Francisco, and only one of those was at Del Monte. She did not show them. The men guy the low-backed gowns. I felt like saying beware! but girls resent that. You know none of our crowd are stout. We cannot be stout, for we exercise so much, and are so careful of our diet, so we naturally have somewhat thin necks, and even my arms, little as my bones are, appear a trifle scrawny, so Robert insists that I wear gloves always. Some of the girls did not. Their arms were tanned and their necks red and their skin so rough that I decided to wear a thin gimp whenever my complexion is not in perfect condition. It looks dressy, too, if it be as perfect a fit as those Helen Hopkins wears. Robert awards her the palm of being the handsomest girl at Del Monte this year. From her golf suit to her evening gown she is always quite correct. Her two sisters are pretty and receive a great deal of attention, but she is the flower of that flock. The most charming of the girls is Caro Crockett. I have only heard complimentary remarks of her all this summer. She is graceful and well bred. Diary, dear, even Robert spoke of the girls who were perceptibly well bred. Fancy that being a palpable detail in society. People of our position in other parts of the world look upon breeding as a thing that cannot be separated from them, but here, when it exists, it is always perceptible, and a subject of conversation. I heard two Eastern men say, Saturday evening, that California men seemed so infinitely surer of their positions than did the women. I did all I could to explain, but explanations invariably lack conviction.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

Now that I have found fault with my fair friends let me tell you what we did. You know all the men took turns in driving the coach "Del Monte" around the seventeen-mile-drive. Whoever wished to pay the fare could go. It was lots of fun watching the people who are not accustomed to coaches get in, really anticipating a new sensation. One day Robert was driving, and they got it. There was a bicycle lying on the road and Robert in his anxiety to avoid it drove right over it crushing it to pieces. He felt pretty angry, especially as a facetious woman in one of the back seats said, absolutely for Robert's benefit:

"Now wouldn't that jar you, why don't he learn to drive?"

The laughter from the piazza was appalling. Though it was annoying, I had my own little laugh about it when I got papa off in a corner after dinner. As for Robert, he went into every rut and made the horses go like the wind all that drive. He did it in a remarkably short space of time. That night over at the clubhouse he was speaking of having broken the record; bragging of it, Arthur said, but Arthur is terribly obvious in his remarks. Walter Hobart, who really gets more out of life than any fellow I know, said he could make it in less time than Robert. He has capital horses, so next day he tried. I sat beside him. I don't want to repeat the experience—"He did not care a rap for the road, it was only just in his way." I heard two of the men, who were afraid, say that. We did fly around the corners and tear through the forest and up and down hill but not once did Walter lose his hold over those horses nor did they seem too much for him. Walter Hobart, Peter Martin, Charlie Dunphy and Raoul Duval are the pluckiest men I have ever seen. There is never a risk too dangerous for them to dare. I wish Arthur had some of their sand in him. He paralyzed me by his behavior. That boy was at the clubhouse every night drinking until he was absolutely intoxicated. There were eight in his crowd doing the same thing night after night. Yet the girls were nice to them next day. Arthur and I quarreled vigorously over it, and I threatened to tell papa, but I really hated to spoil his visit. Of course, I should never have known had not Robert told me, but just think how terribly the girls who marry these fellows will feel when they discover that a really good time with them consists of being so drunk as not to have the capacity to go to bed without assistance. Of course, the fellows who do that sort of thing, cannot ever attain perfection at any sort of game, and I notice too that they are among what Walter Hobart calls "The lobsters."

THE GOLF TOURNAMENTS.

I do not know what man I liked the best. Ernest Folger was the most distinguished looking at the hotel. It was a treat, too, to see him playing golf. He is a wonder at it; so is his friend Mr. Fitzgerald, of Oakland. I honestly had put up money on the latter. His game is so strong, and he never becomes in the least rattled. Mr. Lawson is a wonder on the links, and he did use judgment in his handicaps. The woman's contest on Tuesday was most exciting. It really occasioned more general enthusiasm than all the rest of the affairs during the week. Nine out of ten people thought Caro Crockett would be victor. She had more friends than any of the other players. I had seen Mrs. Gilman Brown play in San Rafael, where she was the champion, but with these links she was not so familiar. Nor did she play so very well at Burlingame on the Fourth, so I feared a little for her success. Maud Mullins I had noticed frequently working and making wonderful drives and splendid approaches, but I feared for her in a contest. Ella Morgan, Edith McBean, Mrs. Henry Scott, Bertha Dolbeen, Helen Wagner, Therese Morgan, entered, but I did not fancy any one of them as victors. It was a great sight. There was a great crowd standing about the first "tet" and the ninth "green," and the playing was only fairly good. When Maud Mullins and Caro Crockett each came in with a score of a hundred, the excitement was great. But when, later in the day, 99 was given out as being Mrs. Gilman Brown's, San Rafaelites were so proud, there was no holding them. She played a beautiful game, and as I heard some of the girls, and Burlingame girls too, say, "Mrs. Brown is one of the few really honest golf-players, and she scores correctly."

WOMEN WHO DO NOT SCORE ACCURATELY.

It seems women are inaccurate in their games. I can't tell you how frequently mama has returned from a card party to tell us how some one at her card table absolutely cheated, and then won the prize, and accepted it too. I hate to hear that about women. Fancy, a man is thrown out of a club if he does such a thing, but a woman is simply considered a little inaccurate Diary dear, is it not a good thing there are compensations for being a woman, for is she not terribly full of faults! But her "good time" is not to get drunk.

The men's golf contest was great fun, too, for ever so many people thought Mr. Byrne would beat Mr. Folger, but Mr. Folger was eventually the winner of the cup. I believe sport etiquette demands that the winner one year presents a cup the next, so we shall have a Gilman-Brown ladies' cup and an Ernest Folger gentleman's cup next August.

The greatest fun in all this world is watching polo. First of all, everyone puts on her swellest gown and appears at luncheon, and then the coaches, drags and traps of all kinds assemble, and everyone watches everyone else start off for the polo grounds. Ruth McNutt looked best that afternoon. Edith Preston, Therese Morgan, Mrs. George Pope, Mrs. Downey Harvey, and Mrs. Avery McCarthy were all particularly attractive. I wish I could remember who was on each coach, but, Diary dear, there has been so much coaching, I can't recall which girl was on at one time and which at another. It is such fun watching the expression of delight on a girl's face when she is invited to ride on a man's coach or drag, beside him. There is a great deal of manipulating. It is almost like a political campaign. As a rule, girls are much nicer to the men who have coaches and money, but the men are not duly appreciative, and I often notice the nicest girls and the most striking looking frequently drive out to games, etc., with members of their own family. I noticed this particularly this year at Del Monte. Were I going into society again, I would, just for fun, have two or three well-known men rush me bard—that would be sufficient. I should be considered popular, and the others would fall over each other in a vain endeavour to know me. A great many girls, I have discovered, do not care a straw for masculine attention. Robert says the men are not sufficiently clever, but I think that most of them are really worth while. I make it a rule to have as nice a time as possible with every fellow, irrespective of the fact that he may not be smart. I think if the other girls would assume that stereotyped expression, that has made me so wildly popular—of perpetual interest in my fellow-beings, there would be fewer wall flowers, and many more cheerful faces and dispositions.

THE LATEST ENGAGEMENTS.

Now, about the engagements, Diary dear. Of course, the two sisters of one of our handsomest girls have sealed their fates. They are both pretty, but I think should be sent east for a year before papa gives his consent. Then, rumour says that a fine golfist is also taking very seriously a young man who spends much of his time in Ross Valley. In Redwood City the eldest daughter of an eminent lawyer has sent her heart east. It is funny to watch the girls who have announced their engagements, and those who are engaged but have not quite received papa's consent. I think the latter have the greatest fun. When one knows one can have a man, he invariably becomes a bore. That was my experience, but now I am married, it is a case of the inevitable. It is so easy to be philosophical about inevitables.

Now, Diary dear, I think I've told you all that was interesting about Del Monte. The music was fine, the table, as usual, excellent, and I consider it the most successful of all the years I've been going to Monterey.

Most of the crowd departed on Monday morning, and as it is quiet I think I shall go t Burlingame for a few weeks. In San Rafael last week a good number of people left—Mrs. Casey and Katherine Dillon, the Kips, the Kanes, and the Harringtons; but I believe the latter are returning there again. Mrs. Green, Mrs. Buckbee, Mrs. Dean and Helen, Mrs Landers and Pearl are all still there, having card parties, picnics, and a great deal of golf. There is no doubt about it, the San Rafael golf links are the best on the coast.

* *

Dr. George Preston Wintermute returned from Europe Monday last after an absence of twelve months spent in the hospitals of London and Paris. Dr. Wintermute has made a specialty of nervous diseases.

The Struggle for College Athletes.

THERE is something exceedingly amusing to the outsider in the struggle in which the colleges are at present engaged to secure the services of certain valuable athletes. The latter must enjoy the situation immensely. Every Stanford man, every Berkeley man, feels it his duty to show the vacillating "prep" how superior Stanford is to California, California to Stanford. Now, the infallible method used by a college man to demonstrate the superiority of his institution is to show what a good fellow he is, what good fellows his brother collegians are. So the "prep" athlete, or the man-who-left-a-greater-university, suddenly finds himself whirled into an exuberance of conviviality. He is dined and wined and danced and treated; he is admitted to the heart-to-heart talks with the great lights of the college, the football captain, the poet, the editor. He is slapped on the back and introduced and re-introduced perpetually to the men who gaze at him in discreet admiration and whisper hoarsely behind him, "Look at that shape!" and, "We're all right now, you bet!" or, "Won't he make that 'Berkeford' line look like pancakes!" Every few days his picture appears in one of the morning papers, with an article announcing his final, unshakable, irrevocable determination to enter California, or Stanford, according to the previous nationality of the enthusiastic reporter. Mothers and sisters join in the great effort. The "available" man is invited to "our country house" for a few days, or to a cruise "on our launch," or to a garden party. Ah, the life of the "available" athlete is indeed a happy one—till his availability is converted into actual use.

* * *

For, that is the amusing part of it all; ninety-nine times out of a hundred the imported athlete proves a flat failure. He enters with a head like a balloon—only not a dirigible one—drinks beer, tells of his former exploits, and that is all. He finds that young athletic genius at the university is hampered by a thousand and one ridiculous restraints. He is supposed to follow regular rules of training. He is supposed to sink his soaring individuality in grinding team work. He suddenly awakens to the fact that he is being treated suspiciously like the other freshmen. The big men don't seem fully alive to his presence in college. The football captain calls him Smith, while his name is Jones. And then—O climax of disillusion!—he finds that his professors expect him to do some studying. If he has not been irretrievably spoiled already, he "gets on to himself," adapts himself to the circumstances and becomes a really valuable college man. This happens sometimes. In the great majority of cases, the man rebels, is pronounced "no good" by the coaches, acquires the scorn of the college for his lack of true college spirit, and, at the end of the year, receives a little note from the faculty apprising him politely that his presence at the university is unnecessary.

Continued on page 18

A MILLIONAIRE FOR FIVE MINUTES.

Continued from page 4.

"One night—it was the fifth since she had come—Masalie (that was her name) was sitting on a rock just outside the cave. I went up and began talking to her.

"'Mlungu,' she said, 'do you want diamonds?'

"'Diamonds?' I said. 'What do you know about diamonds?'

"The girl's words had taken me quite aback. I'd never even heard of diamonds being found anywhere within six hundred miles of where we were, and I was astonished to find that she so much as knew that such things existed.

"'I don't know anything about them, but I can take you to a place where there are as many as you would be able to carry away.'

"I just laughed, thinking that she had seen felspar or rock-crystal in some cave or other. All the same I kept puzzling to know how she came to call them diamonds.

"'Mlungu,' she said, as I was mocking her, 'I know what I am talking of, and if you want diamonds I can take you to where they are.'

"It was a strange tale that I then heard. It appeared that for years past numbers of Secocoeni's men had been in the habit of going to the diamond fields to work, and the law was that each man, on returning, had to hand over to the chief one or more diamonds of a certain size which he had stolen from the man he worked for. These diamonds, of which there was a very large quantity, were buried in a cave deep in among some very high rugged mountains, not more than a couple of days' walk from where we were. The cave was in the side of a cliff, and only could be got at by climbing into the branches of a tree which grew in front of it.

"A chief in a small way lived in the valley just below the cave, and it was his business to guard the treasure. Masalie was one of this chief's wives, but she had only lived with him for a few weeks. What had happened between them she would never tell, but she was just burning to be revenged on him, and her object of putting me on the lay was to have him killed for allowing the diamonds to be stolen. She became so wound up with the idea that all her fear seemed to pass away, and she was willing to go back and risk being caught and killed herself, just on the off-chance of getting her husband's neck twisted—which proves that there is great sameness in the nature of women all the world over.

"'The two of you must take away the diamonds,' she said, 'and when we get out from among the mountains we will kill the man of the fighting alligators, and I will carry his load.

"She could not understand why I would not consent to kill Billy. Until this evening I'd never guessed what a wild cat the woman was. However, I believed her story. We must have talked until past midnight; then I went and woke Billy, and told him all about it.

"Billy jumped at the notion. Of course, I did not say anything about the proposal to kill him on the quiet after we had collared the swag. He hated Masalie bad enough as it was, and I did not want to make things worse between them. Billy got so excited that he would not let me sleep a wink, all night long he kept asking me questions. When I wouldn't answer him any more, he got, as usual, talking to himself in Roosian-Finn.

"At length day broke. After eating a good breakfast we started. Masalie took us along the top of the range. She made us walk in front, she keeping close behind, ready to take cover if we came in sight of anyone. After traveling all day, we reached a high ridge covered with big boulders. Here, Masalie said, we should spend that night and the next day, as it would not be safe to go any farther by daylight.

"Next evening, just as darkness fell, we made a fresh start. Masalie led us away to the left. She must have known the country well, for she hurried us along the winding, forking footpaths without ever seeming to make a mistake. Just before day broke we reached a ridge overlooking the gorge in which the cave was situated. We took cover in a patch of scrub, alongside a spring, and here we spent the day. Masalie showed us where the cave was, on the opposite side of the valley. You could not see it, the mouth being hidden by a tree. About half a mile below was the kraal of the chief, Masalie's husband, whose neck she was trying in such a roundabout way to get twisted. There were no other kraals within sight.

"Billy was tremendously excited; he hardly seemed to hear when spoken to. All day long he sat on the edge of the scrub, with his eyes as if glued on the tree in front of the cave, and muttering to himself in Roosian-Finn.

"There was no moon, but the night was calm and clear and the stars gave enough light to enable Masalie to find her way down the mountain side and across the head of the valley, giving the chief's kraal a wide berth. As we descended, the cliff seemed to climb up before us like a black wall. The only sound we heard was the barking of dogs in the distance.

"At length we reached the fringe of bush at the foot of the cliff; here we left our swags. I had made a sconce out of a tin 'billy,' and into this I stuck a candle-end which I fished out of the 'odds-and-ends' haversack, such as is carried by every prospector. I left my rifle with the swags, and slung a shovel in its place on my back. Billy kept his revolver, slinging his pick through the holster-strap by the head. Each of us had a small gunny-bag tied around his waist. Masalie guided us to the foot of the tree which grew before the cave, and then returned to the place where we had left our swags, where she was to wait for us.

"We had no difficulty in getting into the cave—the tree was nothing to climb; and then all one had to do was to jump downwards from one of the upper forks to a ledge close alongside the mouth. We groped forward into the darkness, feeling carefully ahead. We found, after going a few yards, that the cave turned sharply to the left. After getting around the corner, we struck a match and lit the candle, carefully turning the back of the sconce toward the entrance.

"It was a strange sight that we saw. The cave was only about three paces in breadth at its widest. From the mouth it ran in for about ten paces straight, then it made a sharp elbow to the left, from which it extended for another fifteen paces more. The roofs and walls were bright white, with long, dropping shafts here and there. The clay floor was littered with human bones. Skulls grinned at us from every ledge and from the spaces between the shafts; I should say there must have been over fifty in sight. The place was full of big bats, hundreds of which flapped and squeaked around our heads.

"I spoke softly to Billy, and when he turned and the light fell on his face his looks fairly frightened me; he was as white as death, his lips worked, and his eyes were blazing. I gave him a shake and told him to pull himself together. Then we unslung our tools and began to take soundings in the floor.

"After a while we struck a spot which seemed to give out a hollow sound, and there we dug, Billy picking the ground loose and I shovelling it out. The ground soon became so soft that I was able to dig without waiting for it to be loosened by the pick. Then my shovel struck something hard, which gave out a clear, ringing clatter, and I knew that we had found what we had been seeking.

"Billy stood, breathing hard and shaking all over. I called to him to hold the sconce closer, but he let it drop and it went out. After I had lit it again I cleared the loose ground from the hole, and there I saw, lying at the bottom, a large leather bag such as the natives use when they bury milk under the floor of the cattle-kraal. I caught hold of one end and could feel a lot of lumps inside, which seemed to slide over one another like greasy marbles. I gave a strong tug, hauled the bag out, and dumped it, ringing, on the floor. It must have weighed nearly forty pounds.

"In an instant my knife was out and the side of the bag slit open. What a sight met my eyes! Out on the floor rolled a shining mass of diamonds, some of them smaller than hazel nuts and some bigger than pigeons' eggs. There they lay, winking in the light of the sconce—a sight such as no man had ever seen before.

"Billy just gave a moan and lay down on the ground, rubbing his face in the heap and running his fingers through it. I spoke to him, telling him to untie the gunny-bag from his waist; but he took no heed. Then I loosened my own bag, and began to shovel the diamonds into it with both hands. In doing this I gave Billy a shove. He sat straight up and looked at me; and the sight of his face made me sit up too—for stark, staring madness was written on it in the devil's biggest type!

"For a few seconds we sat stock still, he showing his teeth in a wicked grin, his eyes boring into mine like steel gimlets. Then I saw that his hand had stolen round to his revolver-holster, so I sprang up and dodged round the corner. I happened to have, without knowing it, six diamonds in my hand, and these I slipped into my trouser pocket.

"Here, thinks I, is a pretty kettle of fish! Billy, to my surprise, did not come after me; I held myself together, ready for a grip, in case he should do so. After a few seconds I stole back a pace or two and looked round the corner. There sat Billy, with his back to me, chattering Roosian-Finn to himself, and rolling the diamonds about on the floor.

"The revolver, full cocked, lay before him. A moth must have flown into the sconce, for the candle was flickering and spluttering away, so that it lit up the whole cave. The bats were flying thick at my face, squeaking fit to set one's teeth on edge.

"Billy suddenly stood up; and I drew back, thinking he was going to attack me, and crouched ready to grip him should he come round the corner. But that was not his game. After listening to him moving about for some little time, I once more crept to the corner and looked round. He was again sitting on the ground among the diamonds; but he had taken down a number of skulls from the ledges and was busy fitting the largest stones into the eye-holes. Then he began to sing a Roosian-Finn devil-song in a voice that made my flesh creep.

"From the way the candle was flaring I knew it could not last much longer. I puzzled my brain to know what to do. Had Billy been unarmed I should not have hesitated to tackle him; but there lay his revolver, full cocked, within reach of his hand. I had no weapon; even my knife lay where I had thrown it after ripping open the sack. There were no loose stones in the caves and nothing heavy enough to defend myself with. However, I felt it was necessary for me to do something, so, screwing up my courage, I stepped round the corner again.

"As bad luck would have it, Billy turned his head at the same instant and saw me. In a moment his revolver was up and levelled, and as I leapt back to shelter a shot rang out, and I heard the bullet smack against the wall just beyond me. Even then Billy did not follow. I made up my mind that as soon as his back was turned I would rush in and grip him, and just as I was on the point of doing this I heard a sound that made my blood run cold.

"From the kraal in the gorge rang out the blare of a cow-horn, which, as you know, is the war-cry of the mountain tribes; and I knew that the game was up. I did not stop to think, but just leaped into the fork of the tree, swarmed down the trunk, and stumbled along the pathway to where we had left the swags. There was no sign of Masalie; she had evidently bolted—and small blame to her—scared by the blaring of the horns. I just picked up my gun, my cartridge-belt, and my coat, and bolted too.

"I found myself on a footpath leading up towards the saddle. What with the steepness and the fright I had with Billy, I lost my wind after I had gone about a hundred yards, and felt quite faint; so I staggered to one side and sat down in the long grass. It was fortunate that I did so.

"Soon the blood stopped thundering in my ears, and I listened intently. Horns were now blaring away in every direction, but mostly far away. Then I heard the thud of running footsteps coming along the footpath I had just left, and a party of about twenty men, going Indian file, passed me. Had I not turned out of the path to rest I should have run right into them. I could hear the 'huh—huh—huh' of the party from the chief's kraal as they breasted the steep hill side. Some of them carried firebrands, which looked like big fire-flies dancing along.

"When the men from the kraal reached the foot of the cliff they lit a flare of some kind. Then they climbed, one by one, into the tree. After this I saw nothing more; but a lot of shots rang out, and were followed by a dreadful screech, and I knew that it was all up with Billy Nuts.

"I took my boots off and got up quietly, listening so hard that I seemed to be all ears and nothing else.

"Then I stole along the pathway, stopping now and then to make sure of not walking into the middle of a kraal in the darkness. On the top of the saddle I found two paths forking, and I happened to take the right one, for I got safely away. I never saw Masalie again.

"I stuck to my six diamonds, and never said a word to a soul as to what had happened. When Secocoeni was attacked by the Boers in 1877 I joined the commando as a volunteer, and it was a bitter disappointment to me when it turned tail. Then came the expedition under Sir Garnet Wolseley.

"I joined 'Buller's Horse,' and went through the campaign. Immediately after the fighting was over, and Secocoeni a prisoner, I took my discharge. Then, with a couple of mates whom I could trust, I went back to the cave. We found the bullet splodges on the walls, and the bones still lying around in heaps. We dug up the whole floor, right down to the bed rock, but found not a single diamond. The hole Billy and I had made had been enlarged, and Billy's body buried in it.

"When things got bad at 'Pilgrim's,' and no more alluvial could be found anywhere about, I tramped down to Kimberley. My six diamonds were sewn into my belt. I meant if I could manage it, to take them to Europe and sell them there. At Kimberley I got a touch of fever, and before I got well enough to work I had spent my last shilling. Then I tried to sell one of the stones to a Jew; but, because I would not take less than a quarter of its value, he split on me to the police. I was arrested and searched. Of course, the stones were found on me. I was tried before the Special Court, and sentenced seven years for I. D. B. They let me off a year of my sentence for good conduct in prison; I was discharged three weeks ago.

"Yes; I came up to Port Nolloth by the last boat. Thanks, but I have a pound or two in my pocket—quite as much as I will require. I'm a bit of a rough carpenter, so was able to earn a little at the Convict Station. I came up this way, hearing it was a new country and that there were a few likely looking reefs which had not been prospected.

"Yes, if I don't make a strike, I mean to cross the river and go north."

From Cassell's Magazine for August.

* White man.

The Bluefields Mining District

WHILE the mines of the frozen north have drawn their tens of thousands of miners and settlers from the United States, ready to brave the terrors of an Arctic winter and the heavy expense of northern transportation for the chance of gold-hunting in an already over-crowded country, another mining district of almost unknown wealth lies closer to hand, in a country of pleasant climate and surroundings and to be reached for a sum which is only a fraction of the small fortune needed to take the prospector to Dawson or Nome. This is the district of the Bluefield mines, situated in the pleasantest and most healthful part of the State of Nicaragua, and reached by steamer from New Orleans at a cost of only $55, first class.

This mining district lies about two hundred miles from Bluefields, going by way of Prinzipolca, Bluefields being only a four-days journey from New Orleans. The mines, both placer and quartz, have been only partially opened. Capital is scarce in Central America, and the citizens are not especially enterprising, so that a comparatively small amount of development work has been done, and that by Americans. But it is noticeable that this work has paid in every case; not an American dollar or day's work has been put in that has not returned manifold rewards. The main reason for this is the fact that the Nicaraguan country has gold everywhere. It may not run so rich as in other mining countries, although some remarkably heavy placer yields are reported, but it lies in all the soil, and generally in quantities well above the productive limit. To settle a bet, it was proved a short time ago that the red soil in the roads of Bluefields, which lies, as before stated, two hundred miles from the scene of actual operations, have more than a trace of gold.

General Jose S. Zelaya, President of Nicaragua.

A few figures will show something of the richness of the placer mines. Paul Rener, now a prosperous and wealthy mining man, came to the country "broke" and staked a placer claim. In one day, he took sixty-four pounds, not ounces, of placer gold out of a pocket on his claim. One of the nuggets weighed twenty-seven ounces. The money gained in this manner he turned over into quartz-mining, working with low-grade ores, and has made heavy profits from it ever since. Another claim in the district yielded $18,000 in one day, and proved that it was not a "single pocket" mine by turning out $50,000 in three months. The El Dorado, which has been a consistent and steady producer, record's one day's output of 348 ounces. All these mines are in the Suma district, only two days by water from Bluefields.

Quartz mines, however, are the properties which insure the stability and permanence of any mining disirict, and in this respect the Bluefields mines are especially favored. The Constancia will serve as a fair example. This mine has been in operation for ten years, and has been a steady producer, yielding 100 ounces a week with a force of sixty men. Operations have been restricted by lack of capital, this amount of ore having been worked all these years by a three-stamp protecting mill. At present a five-stamp 750-pound mill is being built to replace this dwarf. The Siemper Viva, also hampered for lack of capital, has been working since 1891, and has sent its regular 400 ounces a month to Bluefields. Others, which are doing as well with their limited means, are the La Luz, Los Angeles, Neptune, Atlas, Santo Domingo, Hidden Hand, and Jumbo. These have only dipped into the quartz-bearing districts; with capital and expert management, their number may be multiplied infinitely.

One special advantage possessed by these mines is the fertility of the surrounding country. In almost every other mining country on earth, nature has chosen to deposit the precious veins in a hard and inhospitable country. But in Nicaragua, they lie in one of the garden spots of the continent. Scratch the earth with a stick, anywhere around the Bluefields region, and it smiles in fruit and flowers. The unusual spectacle is presented, all through the placer claims, of miners combining their vocations with ranching, tilling little market gardens for their tables. The larger mines very generally operate plantations. It may not be amiss to mention that the soil of this section of Nicaragua holds riches in tillage as well as in precious metal. The rubber industry, for example, offers the brightest inducements. Eight hundred acres of rubber land sells, at present, for $300. Upon this area, 16,000 trees can be planted and brought to maturity in eight years for $5,000. After that, each tree will yield, on an average, four pounds of rubber each year, at a market price of of 43 cents. It takes no expert to calculate the tremendous returns of such an enterprise. There are also handsome profits in banana culture, in vanilla, cocoa, ramil, cocoanut, mahogany, vegetables, rice and sugar. The cane of Nicaragua is comparable for richness with that of Louisiana.

Carlos Lecayo, Consul of Nicaragua.

A mistaken idea prevails in this country that all Central America is infested with fevers, the yellow scourge in especial. Such an opinion is erroneous as regards the Bluefield region, which is absolutely devoid of all tropical fevers. No case of yellow fever was ever known within hundreds of miles of the mines. The climate is an equable and temperate one, the nights being cool enough to make blankets comfortable all the year round and the days cooled by a refreshing sea breeze.

In conclusion, it may be said that Nicaragua in general and the mining regions in particular are looking for immigrants. They want men—young, energetic live men, to build up the country and develop its resources. And, while capital is in demand, capitalists are not the only men desired. On the contrary, poor men with the desire to work—not tramps or loafers—are wanted and are encouraged by the present liberal administration.

New Verse and Good.

If I Should Win.

By Louis Rudolph Gillette.

STRIVING in the race of life,
We are runners all;
And some will win, and many lose,
And I may fall!

Quaking as I do, from fear
I may the loser be,
My heart beats quick when I think the prize
May come to me.

I wonder what my friends would say
If, after tears and shame
At repeated falls, in the end I should rise
And gain a name!

The fair one who in vain I loved
In the name of Love, the Good—
Would she fall at my feet and, smiling, say
"I knew you would."

Friendships, for whom my heart has ached
In those dark days agone,
Would they laud me then, forgetful of when
I walked alone?

Yet in the race I must hurry on,
For we are runners all;
Till I win at length I shall pray for strength,
For I may fall.

A Social Coincidence.

WILLIAM DUNBAR VINCENT.

WHEN I was ten and she was six, we played at being wed,
And started light housekeeping in a corner of the shed
That harbored tools and kindling wood—but childhood made it seem
A veritable palace filled with elegance supreme.

Her mother used to say she liked to have her play with me,
Because we always managed with each other to agree;
And I was heir to Lyndhurst, while her father tilled the soil—
But not a thought of what was meant our playdays came to spoil.

When I was twenty, she sixteen, Dame Fortune fixed it so
That she was rich and I was poor—the way of life, you know;
And though our hearts were just as close as loving hearts can be,
Her mother bade her never speak nor write a word to me.

Another decade now has passed—what Fortune once denied
I've wrested from her, inch by inch, and something more beside;
And now her mother smiles on me, as strange as it may seem,
And says our marriage will fulfil her very dearest dream.

Of course, I'd not insinuate, or even hint, you know,
But that this order of affairs just happened to be so;
And yet it seems peculiar—has it not occurred to you?
How often, when the mothers smile, Dame Fortune's smiling too!

In the sick room or on your sideboard, Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey is indispensable.

Agriculture by Electricity.

Professor Selim Lemstrom of the department of physics of the University of Helsingfors, Finland, has carried on a series of experiments on the influence of electricity on growing vegetables and plants, and states that as a result of the action of the electricity an average increase of forty per cent in the yield was obtained. The experiments were made by carrying wires terminating in sharp points about the field. The wires were connected with one pole of an electrical machine, while the other was in contact with the earth. The electricity was found to accelerate the ripening of fruits, berries, and roots, and also tended to develop sugar. The current was given during three or four hours in the morning, and during a like period in the afternoon, care being taken to avoid the time of the highest sun when the sky was clear.

This cause of increase in the growth cannot be ascribed to any change in temperature in the stalks, as such an increase in heat would be only trifling, and the effect of the electricity decomposing the air and supplying such fertilizing agents as ozone and nitrous oxide is believed to be only one of the minor consequences. The chief influence is the action of the electricity in causing moisture in capillary tubes to ascend on the inner surface. As the plant is composed of a number of fine tubes, its juices climb in a similar way, and serve to enrich the leaves and fruit. The experiments seem to indicate that the method is possible on a commercial scale, where a central station several miles distant would be used to supply electricity for a large number of fields.

The Pen in the Hand is worth two in the Mind.

If you have "a good mind to write to Dr. Pierce" take pen in hand and begin. Then you'll avoid the experience of Mrs. M. P. Davis, of Honaker, Russell Co., Va. She writes:

"For seven years I was confined to bed most of the time. I had ulceration of internal organs and female weakness. I had four doctors and they said I could not be cured.....After the doctors said I could not be cured I wrote to Doctor Pierce for advice.....I followed the advice he gave.....I feel better than I ever did. My friends say I do not look like the same woman. I am sorry I did not take Dr. Pierce's medicine when I first began to have poor health. I could have saved what I paid to humbugs."

No one ever regretted writing to Dr. Pierce for advice. Many have regretted not writing sooner.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free, and so obtain the opinion and advice of a specialist in diseases peculiar to women. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, is sent free on receipt of stamps to defray expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for paper covers, or 31 stamps for cloth. Address as above.

Electric Supplies
CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS
California Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

Will You Have a

Club Cocktail

Before Your Dinner?

You can offer this polite attention to the guest who dines with you at your home if you have a bottle of the "Club Cocktails." They are home Cocktails. They are on the sideboards of thousands of homes.

Are they on yours? It's the proper thing to have.

The age of the "Club Cocktails," the pure liquors used, the perfect blending, make them better than you can mix; better than any cocktail served over any bar in the world. Send home a bottle of Manhattan, Martini, Whiskey, Holland or Tom Gin, Vermouth or York, to-day.

For sale by all Fancy Grocers and Dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO.
29 Broadway, N.Y. Hartford, Conn.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS,
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
— BUY —

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.
Get full information and handsome folder at

628 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

Dat-So-La-Lee, Basket Maker.

Continued from page 13

work are willows grown in particular locations and cured for several years by a process known only to the Indians, and the roots of a peculiar kind of fern. Beads and feathers are also used. No pigments enter into the coloring of the baskets. Where a design is contemplated, the black core of the root of a peculiar fern or brake that is grown in the swamps at the foot of the Sierra Nevada mountains is woven in. This color is absolutely imperishable. The willow from which the body of the basket is constructed is split into from twelve to twenty-four parts with the teeth and finger nails. The only part utilized is the fibre under the bark and immediately over the pitch. This thread is made of uniform thickness by scraping with a piece of glass. For warp two small willows are stripped of their bark.

The beads used in ornamentation are of Indian manufacture. Some of the choicest baskets have festoons made from the vertebræ of the rattlesnake. One small basket in the Carson collection, not over six inches in diameter, has woven into it 700 small red tufts, each tuft being the crest of a woodpecker.

These tufted and beaded specimens, however, are not the most valuable examples of the art. The best work is the simplest, and the specimens owe their great value to their perfect symmetry, the artistic beauty of the fern-root designs, and to the infinite patience required in the extraordinarily fine weaving.

College Athletes.

Continued from page 16.

And it is best that things happen so. For if there is anything injurious to true amateur sports, anything fatal to true college rivalry, it is this habit of importing ready-made athletes. If intercollegiate contests are to mean anything, it is to show the superiority of one university over another in the faculty of developing athletic organization from their own material. It is the institution that can take raw men, train them by intelligent exercise, teach them the value of grit and self sacrifice and discipline, the beauty of abnegation, and the sinking of one's personality for the common weal, that is the superior. Understood thus, athletes lose their puerility, for understood thus the athlete becomes more than an acrobat; he becomes a soldier fit for the battle of life.

To Cure a Cold in one Day

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

The Rubaiyat of Ali Bazan.

TOWN TOPICS.

OLD Omar sat beneath the purple vine,
And sang his tipsy praises of good wine;
The modern poet needs a sharper spur—
And so I'll take some absinthe, please, in mine.

One night, as late adown Broadway I strayed,
I ventured to reprove an erring maid:
Quoth she: "Of sin the wages may be death,
But then, you're pretty certain to be paid."

Each season brings a new soubrette, you say:
But where are the soubrettes of yesterday?
Go—seek ye in the ballet's hindmost rows,
And ye will find them withering away.

A throng of people, sitting row on row
A stein of beer, a cigarette, and thou
Before me singing coon songs in full dress
Roof gardening were good enough, I trow.

One day I met a genuine dead-head,
Who opened wide his fleshless jaws and said:
"Enjoy this life, my bucko, while you may,
For you will be a deuced long time dead."

During the summer season cramps come upon us unexpectedly; you should be prepared for an emergency of this kind, as otherwise you will suffer agony for hours. Keep a bottle of PAIN-KILLER handy and go by directions on the wrapper, it will surprise you how quickly relief will come. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Zoological Politics.

The Bronco and the Jelly Fish.

THE Imperial Jelly Fish was gasping in a lemonade bowl on top of the Family Bible on the Piazza, when the boisterous Bronco bucked himself up the steps and kicked three delegations of patriotic parasites into the green sward of Ohio.

"Hello, my soft and silky sardine," whooped the Bronco, with a loud neigh. "Are we in it? Or does the silver serenader of Nebraska bust our slats? Speak up, sweet William."

"Theodore," murmured the Jelly Fish, plaintively, "you shock me. Why are you not in Oklahoma or Arizona? Do you realize that your obstreperous strenuosity is straining vested interests? You are too loud, too gory, too expansive for timid industry. You convey the impression that the tail is wagging the dog, that you are the main guy, the whole shooting match."

"Willie," snorted the Bronco, kicking a hole in the platform; "you are a wise guy; but you stick to your weeping and I'll attend to the whooping; you ladle gush, I'll sprinkle gore; you distribute your platitude and expression, and I'll unload patriotism and expansion. I know my place, my gentle gazelle, and I know yours. I'm the wicked partner, and you're the Y. M. C. A. That's all right, but don't ever let it escape your mutable mentality that I am the only star in this imperial combination and good for a full house every night."

"Hush! Theodore," the squirming Jelly Fish whispered. "We may be overheard and the contribution box switched. I know your value, but I don't want to be lost under your hat. I may be mild and yielding, and may be sat upon, but I will not hire out as a door mat. The Octopus is annoyed and the Horse Leech alarmed. I pray you be more temperate in speech; give yourself a rest; go to—Oyster Bay; you are getting on to my nerves."

"Willie Walloo," roared the Bronco, "the Octopus and the Horse Leech are peaches, but they have a yellow streak It's my business to stir up the menagerie Prosperity, prayer, platitude, pathos, and all the ps and qs are yours; mine is the gusty, gory, galloping, garrulous, get-up-and-git role; you squirm and salve, I scare and scalp; you bleat, I blather; and we are a corking good team. When I am buck-jumping on the prairie, you are posing on the piazza; you are a sad and solemn saviour of the land, while I 'sick' on the dogs of war. We make music, Willie, but you're the pianola and I'm the hurdy-gurdy. You lack humor, my weeping, wavering Willie, but keep your eye on me. The Octopus understands me. I may buck and bound, and bump and bounce and rattle the band wagon; but you will notice that, no matter how high I kick, I never jump out of the harness. Have you observed that little peculiarity of your wicked partner, fair Willibus?"

The Jelly Fish sighed and said, "Perhaps I have misunderstood you, Theodore." And as Boisterous Bronco bounced from the Piazza and bounded into the scarlet sunset of the wild west, he added, "But we'll put you in the Philippine paddock safe enough, my roystering rough rider, in the sweet by and bye."

JOSEPH SMITH in Life.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, price 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases
Sold by All Druggists.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey—that's because you have signed the pledge.

HALF FARE !!!

TO SAN FRANCISCO AND RETURN
FROM ALL POINTS IN CALIFORNIA, ON THE OCCASION OF THE GRAND SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF CALIFORNIA'S STATEHOOD
TICKETS WILL BE GOOD ON ALL SOUTHERN PACIFIC TRAINS ARRIVING IN SAN FRANCISCO SEPT. 8, 9, 10, 11, AND WILL EXPIRE SEPT. 16.
Inquire of
S. P. CO AGENT, FOR EXACT PARTICULARS

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:
For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.
For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. August 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Sept. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka (Humboldt Bay):* 2 p. m. August 1, 6, 11, 16, 21, 26, 31, Sept. 5, and every fifth day thereafter. *Freight only.
For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. August 3, 7, 11, 15, 19, 23, 27, 31, Sept. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. August 1, 5, 9, 13, 17, 21, 25, 29, Sept. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.
For further information obtain company's folder.
The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.
TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.
From San Francisco at 10 A. M.
Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.
DOUBLE DRAWING ROOM SLEEPING CARS. Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.
THE BEST OF EVERYTHING
R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel),
San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company
Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia
S. S. Mariposa for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday September 5, at 8 p. m.
S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday September 19, at 2 p. m.
Line to Coolgardie, Australia and Capetown, South Africa.
TICKET OFFICE, 114 MONTGOMERY ST.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account, Jan. 1st 1900 $2,166,429.59

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier.
Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Union National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank, St. Louis, Merchants Bank; Kansas City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Dis. conto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus . $2,938,372.13
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash . 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President ..... B. A. Becker
First Vice-President ..... Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President .... H. Horstmann
Cashier ..... A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier ..... Wm. Hermann
Secretary ..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary ..... A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hobte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900 ..... $29,020,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218,993
Contingent Fund 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS: James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

1875 CALIFORNIA 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.
General Agents.

Restaurants at the Exposition

By Etienne Marcel

IT was an unfortunate error my entering the Restaurant Russe des Boyards on the Exposition grounds. It looked inviting with its graceful decorations, its spread of snowy tables and its shining silverware. Besides, I had a fine appetite developed by an enthusiastic investigation of the "sights." No warning token admonished me that I was in a "restaurant a la grande carte" frequented only by millionaires and spendthrifts. I might have guessed the possibilities from an investigation of the bill of fare, on which there were marked no prices. However, I ordered—ordered a truffled fowl and a bottle of fairly good Bordeaux, a cress salad and an ice. My bill was $20. It took my breath away. There was nothing to do but settle, however, and I met the emergency.

My experience with the costly feeding places of the Exposition is by no means unique. There are several of these "Restaurants a la grande carte" and the form of extortion practiced therein is oppressive. An average dinner at the Restaurant Roumain costs 100 to 150 francs. No expensive vintages enter into this charge. It is nothing to be assessed 120 to 150 francs extra for a fine Burgundy or an '89 champagne. Nor is there a fixed tariff. Let the proprietor recognize in one of his patrons, a millionaire of note, the bill is in proportion to the estimation of his wealth.

Champion Extortionists.

Baron Edmond de Rothschild dined with some friends a few nights ago at the Restaurant D'Iena. It was an admirable dinner, but in no sense extravagant. The bill was for $700. He refused to pay and sent for a policeman. Then he offered to deposit the amount with the commissary of police and compel the restaurant to sue for it. Thereupon thirty per cent was deducted from the total. On another evening James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald was dining at this identical establishment. There were five in his party. The bill was $800, which was exorbitant considering the character of the dinner. These places are veritable "deadfalls," but in spite of disrepute they are crowded. Croesus and wife from Cripple Creek, Butte City, Dawson City, the Midas family from Boston, New York and Pittsburg, the Plutuses and Mammons from St. Petersburg and Vienna and Frankfort and all the rest of their ilk are in Paris for a "time." They must try everything that goes. A dinner at $10 a course, what is it after all—an experience to be related to admiring and curious relatives at home. There are innumerable other establishments in the Exposition grounds in which one can be fed at reasonable rates. In the "restaurants a la carte chiffre" the price of each dish is set forth on the menu. There one dines agreeably for about $7 to $10—that is for two, and it includes a Pontet Canet or a corresponding grade of Burgundy. At the restaurants a prix fixe, which correspond to our table d'hote dinners, the charges vary from 50 cents to $2 a head. Therein one fares substantially but less artistically of course than in the "grand carte" places.

Luxurious Dining.

Dinner giving is the favorite form of entertainment in Paris these days. Such a congregation of the world's wealth as is centered there must be amused, and luxurious gorges alone can satisfy them. Society has become a mutual dinner-giving club. For every dinner that one gives, one can enjoy thirty or forty in other people's houses, to say nothing of the dejeuners, which are dinners less the potage. All the sauces save the bechamel are composed of the essence of beef, fowl, calves'-foot, and, in some cases, game. Salad is now served with rocher de foie gras, than which no food is more trying to the liver. Medoc and Graves, Corton and Chambertin, Chateau Haubrion, Tisane de champagne frappee (to replace water), and champagne, dry or sweet, give fillips to cloyed appetite. They make the work of grave-digging with the teeth go forward with entrain. I was going to say merrily, but there is really very little mirth or conversation at a fine dejeuner or dinner in Paris now. The ladies are not less sensible to the luxurious food and vintages than the gentlemen. But their interest in them is less concentrated. They are thinking of how they look, and are interested in the belongings of their fair neighbors.

Hors d'oeuvres to Burn.

I was at a particularly smart dinner in one of the best Exposition restaurants the other evening. To commence with, we were offered for an appetizer a choice, of cocktails in various styles, Russian artchisinoi (refined Vodka) or Balkanic slicbowitz (corn whiskey). Then there were at least eighteen hors d'œuvres which included four different preparations of Black Sea caviare, six blendings of fish roe—there was the roe of carp from the stagnant ponds and waters of France, roe of herring from the North Sea, and roe of shad from the Loire; there were three different combinations of milt; enticing saucers full of red peppers and tender cucumbers; there was a pale green caviare salad made by blending the fresh sturgeon roe with a puree of boiled eggplant passed through a fine strainer. At the Roumain restaurant and at the Restaurant Russe des Boyards over seventy varieties of hors d'oeuvres are kept constantly on hand.

Is it any wonder there is a demand for highly seasoned food. Is it surprising that indigestion and dyspepsia are on the increase in Paris

A Change in French Cookery.

This range of experience, coupled with the conversation of the company, which I have kept—for people pretty generally dispense with introductions in Paris just now—enables me to speak with some authority of the tendency of Paris cooking as shown forth in the Exposition cafes. At the World's Fair in 1890, the old, traditional white-and-gold cafe, which Dumas made immortal, was supplanted by the somber, Gothic brasserie copied from the Germans. The style has remained, and is the fashion for Paris cafes of all classes. Along with this external change rose a taste for German delicacies, the pickled fish of the North sea in particular. I am told that the demand for these has quadrupled in ten years. But the great change of 1900 has been such as to strike at the foundations of French culinary art and to alarm every gastronome in Paris. The rage for highly seasoned food is growing, and epicures declare that if it continues the artistic appreciation of truly great cooking will be ruined. They regard it as the literary patrons of the drama might regard the rise of cheap melodrama. The tendency arose in a peculiar way. The cafes and restaurants became so crowded in the early days of the big show that quick and prompt service was made impossible. Something had to be done to keep the guests in good humor while waiting attention. The stewards hit upon the scheme of providing choice chefs-d'oeuvres as a preliminary. These can be prepared hours ahead of time and kept fresh with cracked ice; it takes no time of waiters or cooks to serve them, and they help the guests to forget that the soup is o'er-long in arriving. They are always highly seasoned and, coming as they do when appetite is fresh, the diner partakes of them very freely, so by the time the meal is served he has a blunted palate incapable of nice distinction. Wherefore rose the demand for highly-seasoned foods—the wreck and ruin of good cookery. The chefs recognize it—"but what,' they say, "can we do? It is the demand of the public." But to the cook with a heart in his art it is like introducing slang into the Councils of the Academy.

Your medicine chest is incomplete if it is not stocked with Jes e Moore "AA" Whiskey.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.—LOCATION of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 3d day of August, 1900, an assessment, No. 52, of ten cents (10c) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 79, Nevada block, No: 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 27th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco California.

BEST & BELCHER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the third (3d) day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 71) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventh (7th) day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on FRIDAY, the twenty-eighth (28th) day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

GOULD & CURRY SILVER MINING COMPANY. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 6th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 91) of fifteen cents (15c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the secretary, at the office of the company, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—SAVAGE MINING Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 101) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 8th day of October, 1900, at the hour of 2 o'clock, p.m., to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and the expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.

Office—Room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

PRETTY WORK

NICE PRESS COPIES

Use Smith Type-Writer

The telegraph department of the Southern Pacific Co. dispensed with all other makes and now use the SMITH PREMIER EXCLUSIVELY.

Also more than 200 banks use the

SMITH PREMIER Type-Writer

We Rent New Typewriters
Art Catalogue

L. & M. ALEXANDER & CO.

110 Montgomery St., S. F.

Branches: Portland, Seattle, Los Angeles.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California S. e., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?
It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!
IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.
Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

Alfred Cane — Luther A. Teague — Frederick Teague
TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE
Dentists
Claus Spreckels Building
Tel. Main 1459 — Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

The London Season

By Lady Francis

OF course, London society is dull this summer. That has grown to be an axiom. How could it be otherwise with all the best men off at the wars and most of the best women in Paris? When the Exposition is over and the war is done, bringing back a few lions—these creatures are as necessary to London society as to a well-regulated menagerie—then it will be a different story. I predict a great social season next winter. In the meantime, the main feature is the expansive silliness of the "smart set" who, being drained of their ballast in the shape of the real men ordered to South Africa, are driving their puerilities full swing.

Lady Randolph Churchill's Marriage.

The only ripple on the surface of late was the marriage of Lady Randolph Churchill and her boyish and blushing bridegroom, young Cornwallis West. Advertised in the society papers as a "quiet function," it made its stir nevertheless. The unbidden guests who crowd the pavement outside and plan assaults on the church itself are a feature of every fashionable wedding in London. This time, the free advertising which the match has received swelled the free crowd to immense proportions. The ridiculous features have been dwelt on by the daily papers. I may only add that the bride was surrounded by a galaxy of youth in which the groom appeared the youngest. Her young nephew gave her away, her young niece supported her as bridesmaid, her young son was prominent in the foreground, and all appeared older than the young husband. The father and mother of the groom found it convenient to take a vacation in Ireland just before the ceremony; in their haste, they forgot to leave any wedding presents. Lady Randolph looked as stately and as handsome as ever in her turquoise-blue chiffon gown with billows of creamy lace overlying it. The blue chiffon was finely tucked, the skirt had a deep flounce of Cluny lace, a bolero of the same lace subdued the bodice. A blue chiffon toque trimmed with ostrich plumes and a bunch of cream of roses completed the costume. She carried a small, loose bunch of roses and a large prayer book. She appeared happy, which put her in deep contrast with the there assembled company—for it was a very sour and solemn wedding.

The bride set at defiance a few conventionalities on her own account. The very day was unusual, Saturday being considered unlucky and altogether vulgar. The coloring of her gown was a gage of bottle to the set decree of gray for a widow. The blue gown is to be defended on the score that it become the rich coloring of the bride, but it called forth a deal of whispered comment in the church. Then, the hour chosen for the breakfast was more than unconventional—eleven o'clock, a time of day when smart toilettes cannot be worn. Perhaps Mrs. Cornwallis-West, that is, felt that, having gone against the world's opinion in her choice of husband, she could go a little further in the manner of sealing him unto her.

Informal Dinners.

Dinners, eternal and everlasting, solemn dinners have held the field in society. This harks back to the lack of men. To bring in the few who remain, hostesses have been obliged to consult their tastes and give the style of entertainment which men-folks favor. Wednesday and Saturday have been the favored evenings, because Parliament does not sit on those nights, and more men may be corralled. As a further concession to masculine tastes, the tendency has been toward informality. Instead of one long, large table, the dining-room is arranged in smaller tables, breaking the company into congenial groups. Informal invitations are quite the thing. The Duchess of Sutherland began it by sending out her own cards inscribed simply "come and dine at eight." The Countess of Crewe went her one better by telegraphic summonses on the "reply paid" plan, as thus: "Will you dine with me on Wednesday at 8:30?" The paid reply insures a prompt answer. But after all, these attempts at frisky frivolity in connection with a London dinner seem to an irrevevent American like introducing rag-time music at a funeral.

THEATRICALS.

A Brownie Matinee.

The Saturday matinee audience at "The Brownies in Fairyland" was certainly the prettiest house which any San Francisco theatre has seen for many a long day. On an estimate, it was about nineteen per cent women, fifty per cent small girls, ten per cent small boys, and a scant one per cent subdued, crushed and misplaced men, who lingered outside in the foyer and looked extremely uncomfortable. Perhaps, come to think of it, one per cent is too large an estimate.

There are as many kinds of children as there are of men and women, but they are as like as peas when dressed up and on their good behavior. The audience at the California was trying to behave. If one did stand on a seat once in awhile when the events on the stage became exciting or if a very small person broke loose now and then and gurgled in unison with the chorus, that was only a slip. It was as plain as could be that the Saturday afternoon matinee had been held out to them all the week as a premium for good behavior—"if you aren't good, I won't take you to see the Brownies." They were having their reward, and living up to their reputations. Only between acts, they wandered around in the entrances and foyer, lost a little of their stiffness, forgot their good clothes in chattering about the fairies, and when the curtain finally rose the clatter on the stairway of the balcony was like the noise in the halls of a school-house after recess.

There was a pretty incident at that matinee, by the way. The tiniest, weest tot of all the actors had just done her song and was recalled to take a bunch of carnations passed over the footlights. The flowers, being somewhat carelessly thrown, became tangled on the chain dividing stage-land from real-land. The tot started to pick them up, but they were firmly caught. She thereupon sat down on the stage and began an attempt to unravel them, becoming more and more confused every moment. They still stuck firm, and, blushing clear through her make-up, she gave one desperate tug which sent the flowers flying in every direction. She gathered them up hastily and ran away in full retreat and in the first stages of a good cry.

The Avedano Household.

Signor Avedano, the tenor of the Tivoli Grand Opera Company, is so well satisfied with California that he has made up his mind to bring his family and stay. This is no small undertaking, because he is the father of ten children and his household numbers in addition several brothers and sisters. He intends, at the end of the present season, to purchase a ranch, place his family thereon, and make it his headquarters between engagements. Two or three of his children show signs of inheriting the parental voice and temperament, and may yet add to the renown of California as a seed-ground for artists.

THE high prices charged by vaudeville stars and the waning of that form of theatrical attention have led a number of the managers to form a combination—not exactly a trust, but something near it—to regulate prices and to keep them down. None of the big houses in New York are making any money this season, partly because the attendance has dwindled, but mainly on account

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law, Bankruptcy and all the Courts, San Francisco. Office: Room 24, City Hall.

A. K. DAGGETT, Drawing of deeds, papers a specialty. Notary Public. 13 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Tel. Jessie 1[illegible]

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured. Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Parlors, Glasgow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU, Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment.
Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations.
DR. WM. SCHMITT,
502 Taylor St., cor. Geary.
San Francisco
CONSULTATION FREE.

A TOILET NECESSITY
Wakelee's
Cold Cream of Roses
—MADE WITH—
Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM
A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.
A Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials, 488 Geary St., S.F.

Orpheum

The Joscarys; Lavender and Thomson; The Tobins, The Newskys, Lew Hawkins; Caroline Hull; Arnim and Wagner; Macart's Dogs and Monkeys; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY
Matinee Wednesday and Saturday
Last Six nights of the HENRY MILLER season and

THE ONLY WAY.

Farewell performance Saturday, Sept. 1st.
This Sunday night—Last Burton Holmes Lectures. Subject, "Hawaiian Islands."
Sept.3, Clement Stockwell Co. in "A Great Obstacle"

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, August 27th
Last week of

FLORENCE ROBERTS

Supported by White Whittlesey
In an elaborate Production of

FROU FROU

Adapted from the French

Week of Sept. 3rd Dorothy Dorr, Howard Hall and the Alcazar's new stock company in a beautiful presentation of "The Masqueraders."

Only matinee Saturday. Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Last nights of "Sapho" Week beginning Monday Aug. 27th. Only matinee Saturday

Frawley Company

In an elaborate production of the Greatest Melodrama ever written

The Silver King

By Henry Arthur Jones

Prices:—10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.

Saturday matinee, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents.
Branch Ticket Office, Emporium

★TIVOLI★

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.
Tonight, "Tannhauser," Sunday night, "Mignon."

Week of August 27th.

Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights
THE MASKED BALL
Russo, Ferrari, Nicolini, Repetto, Poletini, and Lichter
Four extra performances of TANNHAUSER
Tuesday, Thursday, Sunday nights, Saturday matinee
Avedano, Salassa, Schuster, Graham and Stewart

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents Telephone Bush 9
Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Hall.

Tuesday Evening, Sept. 14th

Song Recital by

MISS CLARA KALISHER

Contralto

Dr. H. J. Stewart at the Piano

Seats $1.00. On sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s beginning Saturday morning, Sept. 1st, at 9 o'clock.

PAIN'S BATTLE OF SAN JUAN

10,000 feet of Realistic Scenery. 500 Soldiers, Athletes, etc., and nightly

Pain's $1,000 Fireworks

Opens Saturday September 1st.

and for Two weeks Thereafter, excepting Sunday night, September 2nd.

Seats for 10,000. Seats and boxes at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s, beginning next Thursday morning.

THEATRICALS

Continued from page 21.

of a general advance in salary demands. The cause is said to lie in the intense self-conceit of the average variety "artist." When foreign stars were brought over at Klondike prices, the best native talent refused to be rated any lower, and when the best talent advanced prices, the inferior people raised the scale. Last year, demands went up all along the line' with as much uniformity and solidity as though a labor union had set a new scale. The fact that vaudeville people gauge the manager's appreciation by the size of the salary helped to keep them at high notch, and professional jealousy did the rest. If Zoroaster and Zendavesta, the Premier Knockabout Comedians, learned that Smith and Jones, America's Favorite Sketch Artists, were paid $150 a week, they would refuse to work for a less sum. To do so would, according to professional ethics, be a confession that they were inferior—a thing which their pride would never allow. Also, a variety star, for some occult reason, will rather play one week out of six at $150 a week than to play six straight weeks for $100. This has kept a great number of fairly good people out of the business this summer, and has made the remainder insolent in their demands. Now, the combination proposes to adopt a schedule, and to force the players to accept it or be frozen out altogether. If this is not done, the managers say, they will be forced to give up the business. The matter will, doubtless, adjust itself, after a few variety stars have felt the pinch of hunger.

There has lately been a rage for "English successes" following the rise of the "Belle of New York" and other American attractions abroad. Most of these ventures are predestined failures, because the English ideas on wit, humor and lightsomeness differ materially from our own. But the exodus has helped in the scarcity of attractions.

Nerves and Art.

"We hear a great deal in the papers about the irascibility of such actors as Richard Mansfield and Henry Miller," said Howard Hall, the Alcazar's leading man for the winter season. "I know, myself, that a good half of Mansfield's general unpopularity is caused by the way he makes his company stand around at rehearsals and performances and his absolute insistence on detail. In judging this quality, which seems like 'general cussedness' to an unsympathetic observer, the temperament of such men has to be taken into consideration. Both of them owe the faithfulness and subtlety of their acting to absolute concentration. The nervous strain is terrible, and any little, unforeseen occurrence which breaks the illusion is almost brutal in its effect. You have heard of one actor or another bursting out against some other actor on the stage because of a trivial accident caused by the victim's stupidity. This is to be excused when I tell you that such a thing would be as great a shock to the nervous system as walking into an open coal-hole. I am convinced that a great many actors, who are too much the 'good fellow' to insist on absolute quiet and perfection of illusion, would be immeasurably better off if they did.

"Not to compare myself with Miller or Mansfield except in temperament, I regard one such unexpected incident as the tragedy of my stage career. It was in my own play, my own pet part, and the one performance of my career which meant the most to me. I felt that I had the audience 'going'—and the fall of a stage brace ruined my work for that evening. It pays Miller, Mansfield and others of the sort to be exacting. It is the condition by which they succeed."

Royal Gifts to Singers.

American singers returning from abroad and those who come to this country from Europe the first time are likely to refer proudly to the jewelled gifts presented to them by Queen Victoria when they had the honor of singing for her at Windsor. Persons who have had the opportunity of inspecting these treasures have never been able to discover any intrinsic reason for pride in their possession, however great the honor of receiving them may be. The customary reward for the woman is a diamond brooch made of infinitesimally small stones, and not merely the numbers in which they must be purchased accounts for their inexpensiveness. They are invariably the same and their financial value is slight. Edouard de Reszke the other day got the Victorian Order of the fourth class, which was presented a year ago to his brother who was the first singer to receive it. Mlle. Calve, who was invited to remain over night at the castle, in addition to getting her jewelled brooch, seems so far ahead of all her associates and it is said she made a bet with a wealthy friend in London before leaving for Windsor that she would receive this invitation. She won her bet and with it the greatest distinction ever shown to any singer who appeared for a chip diamond pin in place of her customary fee.

THEATRICAL NOTES

After "Sapho," which is drawing very heavily at the Grand Opera House and which is to be given for the last time on Sunday night, comes a big scenic revival of "The Silver King," the famous romantic drama which first established the reputation of Henry Arthur Jones as a playwright for the stage. A long line of famous actors have appeared in the principal roles of this play, including Wilson Barrett and E. S. Willard, who created respectively the parts of Wilfred Denver, the silver king and Captain Herbert Skinner, the "spider." In the present production Wilton Lackaye will be seen in the title role. The remainder of the cast includes Mary Van Buren, Henry Roberts, Harrington Reynolds, H. S. Duffield, Wallace Shaw, Clarence Chase, Herbert Ashton, Frank Mathieu, Geo. W. Bowman, Grace Cahill, Phosa McAllister, Pearl Landers and Christine Hill.

* *

The demand for tickets for the Tivoli's grand opera season has been unprecedented. Had the house double its seating capacity, it would hardly suffice to hold the crowds which clamor for admission nightly. So great has been the demand for "Tannhauser" seats that the management has again changed plans in respect to the public wish. "Tannhauser" will be continued through four nights of next week, alternating with Verdi's great opera "The Masked Ball." The Wagner opera will be presented on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, and "The Masked Ball" will occupy the rest of the week. The cast of the latter piece includes Russo in the great role of Ricardo, Ferrari, Anna Lichter, Nicolini and Repetto. "The Masked Ball" was perhaps the greatest success of the last Tivoli season, and its revival is an event of importance. "Mignon" for the last time Sunday night.

* *

The Pain fireworks, which are a novelty for San Francisco, will be presented on an elaborate scale, in conjunction with the military spectacle, "The Battle of San Juan," at the Sixteenth and Folsom Street Grounds, for the two weeks commencing Saturday, September 1st, and with the exception of Sunday, September 2d. Of course the performances will take place at night and the preparations now being made are elaborate in the extreme. A stage 300 feet wide is being built, 10,000 feet of scenery will be brought from Denver where the production is now on, and seats for 10,000 spectators are being prepared. Over 500 people will participate in the charge up San Juan Hill, including two military companies. The sale of seats commences next Thursday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

* *

The California Theatre will remain closed for two weeks beginning Sunday night, August 26th, during which time stage improvements of importance will be made. The orchestra seats will be carefully overhauled and the house will be made even more comfortable than it is at present. The season will open Saturday night, September 8th, with the Azzali Italian Grand Opera Company, direct from Milan, via Central America and Mexico.

* *

Miss Clara Kalisher, an unassuming San Franciscan who has achieved fame as a contralto both abroad and in the East, is summering with her family here and will sing immediately before her return to New York, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Hall, on Tuesday evening, September 4th. Miss Kalisher was heard here last September, when she created a most favorable impression. She will offer a numb of songs new to this city, and Dr. H. J. Stewart will accompany her at the piano. The sale of seats will begin Saturday morning at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

* *

Another excellent bill at the Orpheum. At the head will be the Joscarys, an acrobatic combination directly from Europe, who present one of the greatest acrobatic acts in the world. Lavender and Thomson give a domestic sketch. The Tobins, San Franciscans with an international reputation, and the Newskys, in more Russian dances and songs, are also features of the bill. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

* *

The Henry Miller season at the Columbia closes next week. "The Only Way," which has been crowding the theatre this past week, will be rendered. Following the Miller troupe comes the Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell Company in an adaptation of Dickens' and Wilkie Collins' "No Thorough fare," under the title of "A Great Obstacle."

* *

At the Alcazar Theatre next week Florence Roberts will play "Frou Frou." It is the last week of her very successful engagement. September 3d the Alcazar's new stock company opens with Dorothy Dorr and Howard Hall in the leading roles, Polly Stockwell as soubrette and Bert Young light juvenile. The opening production will be "The Masqueraders."

* *

Paloma Schramm, the remarkable child pianiste and composer, gives two farewell recitals prior to her departure East, on next Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 2:30 P. M., at Sherman-Clay Hall. She will present an entirely new program and will be assisted by her younger sister, Karla.

Elegy in a Country Parlor.

HAYDEN CARRUTH.

THE cuckoo clock proclaims the knell of day,
And mother goes, astute and tactful, she.
Then father bedward wends his weary way,
And leaves the girl to darkness and to me!

Exchange.

The original Swain's Bakery 213 Sutter St., stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

All bon vivants will be pleased to learn that genial "John" Heinkee supersedes Mr. Justin Ladagnous as proprietor of the famous Maison Riche, so happily named by dainty Aimee in her golden days. Epicures the world over know the Riche. "John" will maintain the high standard that this restaurant has always held in this city.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

It requires nerve to stand the strain of nervous neuralgia, pains in the face, head or any part of the body. These pains are quickly stopped by the use of PERRY DAVIS' PAIN-KILLER. The relief is immediate and lasting. Do not suffer a moment longer but use the Pain-Killer as directed. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. Price 25 cents and 50 cents.

Sherman-Clay Hall

Sutter Street, near Kearny.

Two Farewell Concerts given by assisted by her sister Karla on Wednesday and Saturday Afternoons at 2:30 August 29th, September 1st.

PALOMA SCHRAMM

Reserved seats 50 and 75 cents on sale at Sherman Clay & Co.'s.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET
SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR
SOHMER PIANO AGENCY

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."
There is but one Hotel del Monte.
Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

HAVE YOU A PIANO THAT YOU DO NOT USE?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is Bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

Nothing more refreshing than "Jackson's NAPA SODA Lemonade"

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.

HIGH GRADE Half-tone & Line

CUTS

Yosemite Engraving Co....
24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco

For Catalogues Books Souvenirs Newspapers Letter heads Etc.....

LIKE A MAGIC TOUCH
So quickly and easily is the brilliancy restored to tarnished Silver by Electro-Silicon
SILVER POLISH
If in doubt what's best, why not make the test. Simply send address on a postal.
At grocers and druggists everywhere, and postpaid 15 cents in stamps.
"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York City.

DR. CLYDE PAYNE
Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at 135 GEARY ST.
Phone M in 9. Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 W. King St. HONOLULU, H. I.

BAJA CALIFORNIA
Damiana Bitters
"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

The Sign of the Peacock
229 GEARY ST.
Theatre Suppers
Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast
ORDERS DELIVERED

The Saturday Wave
Is Printed by
THE MYSELL-ROLLINS CO.
22 CLAY STREET, S. F.

Stylish Suits $15.50
Dressy Suits $20.00
Pants..... 4.50
My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.
25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.
SAMPLES SENT FREE

New Stories Re-Told.

A ROSE BY ANOTHER NAME. In small country towns in the East the natives speak of all classes of theatricals as "op'rys," due doubtless to the fact that the playhouse in all one-night stands is called the Opera House. George Broadhurst tells of going to inspect one of these establishments prior to playing there. As he entered a janitor was sweeping the stage. "You seem to be busy, Mr. Stage Manager," he said. "Yep," replied the native. "What was the name of the last show you had here?" pursued Broadhurst. "Wall," said he, "I clean plum forgit, wait a min'it." Then yelling to a small boy at the back of the theatre he said: "Be'ull, Be'ull. What was the last op'ry we had here?" The kid closed one eye, thought a moment, and then yelled back: "Pap, the last op'ry we had yere was Seth Wilson's Trained Mice."

THE JUDGE WOULD HAVE STAYED. Before a Salt Lake justice of the peace a young man was tried on a charge of gambling. The evidence was conclusive and a fine was imposed and paid. The court then adjourned, but the defendant stopped behind. He said to the judge, "I want to tell you how this happened. The cop told us if we didn't stop playing he'd run us in. Well, we were playing a jackpot! I had an ace, three queens and a king before the draw. I discarded the ace and king and drew another queen. There were good hands out against me, and they tried to bluff me out, and I stayed with them. Now, what I want to know is what you would have done in a case like that?" "Stayed with them if the gallows had been in sight!" cried the excited judge. "Why in the name of common sense was not that evidence brought out at the trial?"

EXPLAINING HER CHOICE.—Congressman Benton of Missouri the original "offensive partisan" who was removed from office by Grover Cleveland, has the reputation of being one of the shrewdest and homeliest men who ever sat in Congress. In his early days at the bar, Benton went to Texas to prosecute a land claim. He lost the suit but won an exceedingly pretty Lone Star lass who accompanied him to his home. At St. Louis the couple met General Mitchell, a plain spoken pioneer of the region, to whom Benton introduced his wife. The old man looked surprised. He stared at Benton and beamed on the pretty bride. Then he said sadly: "Mrs. Benton, ain't there any men in Texas?"

IN THE CLOUDS. Robert Simson, the eminent mathematician, was very absent minded and used to sit every day at the open window of his home deep in geometry. One day a jolly beggar of the region who knew his ways accosted him for alms. "Who are you and what's your name?" asked the mathematician rousing himself with a great effort. The mendicant replied "Robert Simson, son of John Simpson of Kirktonhill." Simson gave him a coin and dropped off. He soon roused himself, and said, "Robert Simson, son of John Simson, of Kirktonhill? Why, that is myself! That man must be an impostor!"

THE IRRITABLE MAESTRO.—While Hans von Bulow was leading the orchestra at Hanover, a peculiar noise pervaded the theatre. At first he thought it resembled the flutter of wings, but soon he discovered an elegant lady fanning herself in one of the boxes close by. Bulow fixed his eyes on the offender in a manner which meant reproof. The lady, not heeding this, was suddenly surprised by the leader dropping his stick and turning towards her. "Madam," he cried, "if fan you must, please, at least, keep time with your infernal nuisance!"

HIS INDISCRETION.—In Washington during the last session of Congress, Chauncey M. Depew met a soldier who had been wounded in the face. He was a union man, and Depew asked him in which battle he had been injured. "In the last battle of Bull Run, sir," he replied. "But how could you get hit in the face at Bull Run?" "Well, sir," said the man, half apologetically, "after I had run a mile or two I got careless and looked back."

Palace Hotel
The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man, will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.
Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity
SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE
White Pass and Yukon Route
Through Freight and Passenger Service to Dawson, Atlin, White Horse
AND OTHER POINTS
All Rail From Skaguay, Alaska, to White Horse, Y. T.
Beginning August 1, both passenger and freight trains will be operated, Skaguay to White Horse, a distance of 112 miles. At White Horse, the ten fine river steamers of the Canadian Development Company,
Connect directly with the railway train and afford DAILY service to Dawson and all other Yukon River points. Through connections are made at BENNETT and CARIBOU with the
Irving Navigation Company's Lake Steamers
For ATLIN, TAKU, and GOLDEN GATE MINING CAMPS.
This system now affords best of facilities for handling perishable freight.
A SCENIC AND PLEASURE TRIP TO NOME.
FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO
S. M. IRWIN
TRAFFIC MANAGER
Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash. [Phone Main 574]
M. P. BRASCH
COMMERCIAL AGENT
536 Market Street, S. F.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE Safe Deposit Vaults
OF THE
First National Bank
N. W. Corner Bush and Sansome Sts
EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY
REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION
Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE
Repsold Select Vintage Wines
FOR YOUR HOME DINNER
This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants
Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

From Admiral George Dewey:
Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco—Dear Sir: I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly. Very truly yours,
GEORGE DEWEY.

A GRADUATE
George Mayerle
German Expert Optician
Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED
1071½ Market St.
near Seventh
Telephone Mint 257
German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:
Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco—Dear Sir: The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.
Very truly yours,
WM. R. SHAFTER.
Major-General, U. S. V

Reduced To 5 Cents a Copy.

This Paper not to be taken from the Library

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT

CONTENTS

A Royal Progress in Corea
by H. E. Bostwick.

A California Industry: Prune Growing in the Santa Clara Valley
by Will Irwin

Commercial Opportunities in the Philippines
by Herman Ross

Lord Russell of Killowen

Views of Belvedere

Margaret Anglin
by Arnold Genthe

A HARVEST SCENE

A California Industry: Prune Growing in the Santa Clara Valley

By Will Irwin

IN early June, a fruit section of the Santa Clara Valley is as dull and humdrum a spot as can be imagined. The summer sunshine has settled upon the land by that time, the early work of cultivation and preparation is over; the trees and their owners are waiting for the little, green knobs on the branches to turn into the gold and purple balls of harvesting time. Mile after mile, the dark green foliage of the trees covers the land. There are no fences; the roads run through the orchards direct, and boundaries are kept in the memories of the owners. Save for the prosperous houses and villas dotting the section, every acre of land might seem to be the property of one huge estate. Here and there the houses are clustered into a town, whose nerve-center is a big packing house. These towns, too, are waiting the summer's influx, their redwood roofs smoking out the last of the spring rains in the ripening sunshine. Teams creep lazily up the long avenues; a few workmen make pretence of working under the trees.

Arrival of the Fruit Pickers. In June comes the first sign of an awakening. The small fruits are ripening, and the advance guards of the summer army are pouring in. A month later, when the red and gold apricots are weighing down the trees, everything is alive. The roving agricultural workmen, peculiar to California, the "tramp" laborers of our industrial army, come in by every road, blanket on back, staff in hand, and find the very vacation of their year's work in the easy labor of fruit picking under the shade of the trees. Women and girls from all the country round assemble to cut and dry the fruit. The towns are packed to the limit of their accommodations, and a regiment of tenters spill out to the suburbs. Every dry water course is dotted, at night, with the fires of tramp workmen, making camp, as is their custom, under the stars All day the roads are lively with teams carrying the fruit to the dryers and storehouses. Thus for a month—then comes prune time, and the climax of the season is reached. Clear on into October, the Santa Clara Valley is too busy to talk to visitors. The inhabitants are gathering in the purple plebeian desert of the world, or are providing for those who gather, or are trading in the finished product. Practically all San Jose works overtime in that season, so nearly is the prune industry associated with all activities of the Santa Clara Valley and its metropolis.

The prune season is now in full swing, and the whole section is especially busy, for this is a phenomenal year. The yield will go beyond all previous records; how far beyond, no one has tried to estimate, but it will certainly beat the record year of 1899, when 75,000,000 pounds was the lead. There is some complaint over the quality, the fruit running small and averaging, therefore, less value to the ton, but in spite of this the actual money value of the crop will beat former figures. It has come, too, on the heels of a good apricot crop, which renders the farmers of the valley doubly happy. The big driers are working overtime and Sundays to keep up with the increase, and for once labor is rather short.

The Prune Industry. To write the whole history of the prune industry in and around San Jose would be like writing the later commercial history of the Santa Clara Valley, for the yearly production of dried prunes exceeds that of all the other fruits of the valley put together. The first beginning was made in 1873, by E. L. Bradley, a pioneer of the section, who planted on his farm, about six miles from San Jose, a ten-acre tract of trees. The cuttings were brought from France, and the whole thing was an experiment. It succeeded beyond all expectation; in six years the tract was producing heavily. Being a novelty, these California-grown prunes sold at immense prices—sometimes up to sixty dollars a ton. One season, the Bradley farm sold its entire output to a broker for $400 an acre on the trees—just $4,000 for a year's crop on a ten-acre tract! That orchard is still flourishing and bearing, being the nucleus of a 220-acre fruit farm, and is viewed with reverence by the farmers of the valley as the beginning of all things for them.

Of course the heavy receipts of the Bradley farm started a prune craze in the valley. People began to take out their grain and put in trees. The very year in which the pioneer orchard began to bear, an immense acreage was put in. The fruition of these trees brought a great change. The limit of the market for California prunes was reached and passed. Throughout the East, where the general demand was heaviest, the imported French and German article was preferred—just as California wines had a long struggle against alien prejudice before they were recognized. Further, scale made trouble; it was at first a mysterious malady, and means for fighting it were undiscovered. Then, many orchard men planted in ground unfitted for fruit-culture. These conditions had to be overcome. The fight was not a long one. The market was opened; methods for making scale almost harmless were discovered, and the conditions favorable for growth were determined with comparative certainty. By 1890, the industry entered upon an era of expansion. Beginning with over 12,000,000 tons in that year, the output grew steadily to the 75,000,000 mark of last year. It now caps all the other fruit industries of the section—dried apricots, dried peaches, fresh fruits, canned fruits—by a good margin.

Financial Results. Not everyone has succeeded, but the percentage of failure has been small. Knowledge of conditions, realization of methods have changed the whole complexion of affairs. Just now, an investment in the prune bearing land is nearly as stable as one in Spring Valley bonds, with probably a larger income on the capital. Figured for five years, with allowances for probable poor seasons, it can be calculated almost to the dollar. The failures are those who have hit on poor land, and those who are so ill-adapted to business that they would fail in any pursuit. In their first planting, prunes are always something of a risk because of the uncertainty as to what constitutes good prune land. Two orchards planted next to one other, having the same exposure, the same drainage, the same apparent quality of soil, may yet bear such widely different crops that the one will pay heavily and the other fall far below a margin of profits. It cannot be explained; it exists. The same condition is familiar with wine-producers, who know that in the first-grade European vineyards only a trail may divide the grapes producing the wine of a king's table and the table d' hote beverage of a cheap restaurant. This very season of prosperity, hundreds of acres are being taken out to make room for other crops, because a few years of trial have proved that they will not produce in paying quantities.

A factor which is making stability doubly stable is the general introduction of irrigation. The fear of dry years alone remains to worry the prune-farmer. The early frost, worst enemy of the delicate and uncertain apricots, trouble his hardy crop very little, but the dry year, while it will not kill the fruit, may greatly reduce output. The ordinary rainfall is generally enough for all purposes; irrigation is called in only for the exceptional year. Close calculation proves that it pays to provide against failure of crops by irrigation, even when the water has to be pumped at comparatively heavy cost. Only this year, a co-operative company, capitalized at $350,000, has been organized for the purpose.

The Growers' Combine. This year opens a movement certain to have great effect upon the whole industry. It is the combination of prune men for maintenance of prices, one of those farming trusts which have been so successful all over the country and which mark the trend of modern industry. The California Cured Fruit Association, perfected and incorporated last January, was a matter of gradual growth. While it controls the output over all California, it had all its beginnings in Santa Clara county. The tendency was first shown in the big fruit unions which began to spring up when the industry got on its feet. At first, the crop was handled by brokers, who bought the fruit on the trees, just as oranges are bought to this day in the South. This was an uncertain method, involving much risk and speculation on both sides, and allowing much margin for fraud. To meet this, the big growers of several sections pooled their interests. The associations thus formed would receive and sell the product, distributing the receipts per ton received after deducting the expenses. Further, the associations made things easier for the growers of small capital by combining a fruit-curing business with their other function. Members who do not care to invest in the apparatus required for curing, drying and preparing fruit may bring the green product to the associations, have the finishing work done there, and pay a proportional assessment for the work. In this manner the huge dryers of the West Side Fruit Growers' Association, the East Side Fruit Union, the Campbell's Fruit Union and the Santa Clara County Fruit Exchange handle thousands of tons of uncured fruit every year. On the other hand, a great majority of the growers interested cure their output themselves, turning it ready for sale into the bins of the union.

This worked very well so far as it went; nevertheless, there was no way of controlling or regulating prices without a formal understanding, and the competition of independent growers, selling through cut-rate brokers, caused the element of uncertainty to enter into calculations. The four associations mentioned above worked out a scheme of general co-operation. The result was the California Cured Fruit Association. The condition by which this concern entered into the field was that a certain per cent of the State's dried fruit producers should enter into the agreement. The limit was reached and passed, so that now 85 per cent of the State's acreage is represented. A good 95 per cent of the prunes raised in the Santa Clara valley will go through its influence and be sold under its scale this season. The Cured Fruit Association does not sell the fruit, that still being left to the individual or to the smaller associations, but it sets the price, to which the members are bound to conform. It is for this season to prove its worth, but all forecasts indicate that the organization will be successful and permanent. The fruit brokers are going out of business in shoals. One of its best activities is the cast-iron rule providing two standard grades in the various sizes, the first including only perfect fruit. This will undoubtedly raise the reputation of the California product abroad.

Process of Orchard Cultivation. The details, the finer points of prune and apricot growing interest only insiders. To the casual observer the processes do not differ strikingly from those employed in other orchard-growing. When the crop is in, pruning begins, followed by a thorough cultivation of the ground in order to loosen it and kill the weeds. This process is repeated as often as foreign vegetation appears. The whole floor, now in harvest-time, of the Santa Clara Valley stands as bare of weeds as a seed-ground for a lawn. By January, the farmer who has the wisdom and the capital to control irrigation takes a forecast, determines the chances for drought, and begins irrigation if he thinks that chances for rain are poor. There must be continual examination for scale, which can usually be exterminated when found, but is likely to wreak havoc if allowed to run. Then the braces holding up the weak prune-branches must be looked after and renewed when necessary. By mid-July, apricots are ripe and ready for picking. They are gathered like oranges by men with ladders and pails; taken to the drying-houses to be cut into sections, stoned and laid on long, wooden trays by girls; and dried in the sun. Artificial dryers have been tried, but have not proved so popular as sunlight which costs nothing for fuel. The only really artificial process in common use is a slight fumigation of sulphur, applied to bleach the fruit and render it more salable. The cutting process employs as many women and girls as the picking does men, and reaches large totals in the expense accounts. He who can invent a machine to do this work is a millionaire out-of-hand. Numerous attempts have been made—all failures. The drying, lasting from three or four days to perhaps a week, ends the work on the apricot crop.

When apricots have been a-picking some two weeks, the prunes begin to drop from the bent parent-branches. A prune-tree is the extreme limit of man's achievement in turning nature into a machine. It is a low, broad, spreading growth, made, like a human Coolie, to bear the greatest burden per pound of substantial trunk and branch. It bears beyond belief. So far has it been brought from the state of nature that the boughs cannot carry their own burdens; they must be supported by stout props of timber. Looking at a tree in full bearing, one could swear that it held more prunes than leaves. It is brutally laden. When the steady sunshine of Santa Clara has turned the fruit heavy and dark, the outraged tree gives way at its weakest point, and the purple spheres drop to the ground. When they have formed a dark circle on the ground beneath each tree, the pickers come out and break their backs gathering the crop. This process is repeated from two to four times every season. At the last picking, which comes in a dry interval during October, the trees are shaken for lingering fruit. Dishonest pickers working by the pound sometimes shake the branches before the end; this always results in the fall of green fruit and a corresponding lowering of the crop standard.

The Final Stages. From the pickers, the prunes go to a "dip" in a solution of hot lye, which cracks the tough skin and prepares them for drying. They are then spread on wooden trays and dried like apricots. At the big driers of the Fruit Associations the work is done by machinery, which takes boxful after boxful of prunes in a hungry hopper and vomits them out shrunken and wet onto the trays. The drying-ground of such a concern is impressive through its bigness. The West Side drier, this week, has twenty acres of ground covered with laden trays laid snug to one another. It is all one great field of flat purple. Being cured and reduced to the state of the dried prune favored of cheap grocers and boarding-houses, the fruit takes its final stage—sorting into sizes by a machine larger than a locomotive. Thence it tumbles into bins and is ready for sale. Even when growers do their own drying, they commonly leave the sorting process to their associations. Packing of the "fancy" product into boxes, after giving it a beautifying sugar-and-water bath, comes sometimes before and sometimes after the sale. The next time the prune sees the light it is in a grocery-store of the United States or Europe, where, by-the-way, more and more California prunes go every year.

ELECTRIC HEADLIGHTS.—Electric headlights for railway locomotives are coming very generally into use in the Western States, and are paying for themselves in saving the railway companies large sums formerly paid for cattle killed on the track. The light will show a cow or horse at a quarter of a mile on a dark night.

Orchard in Blossom Packing
An Apricot Orchard

Sorting Crop

Picking Prunes
The Grading Process
Twenty Acres of Drying Prunes

Prune Growing In the Santa Clara Valley.

Photos by A. P. Hill, San Jose.

Dr. Roux's Experiment

By James Hopper

PROFESSOR LETOURNEAU had finished his autopsies, and, washing his hands and taking off his laboratory apron, he sat down to write his reports:

Dr. ——

Dear Sir:—The dog that you have sent me for examination shows unmistakable signs of having been, at time of death, in an advanced state of hydrophobia.

Unprofessional as it may seem, I have a suggestion to offer. I am a close friend of Pasteur, whom the whole world knows from his remarkable researches on bacterial diseases. Of late years he has been searching for an antitoxine of hydrophobia. Although he has made nothing public yet, I know from private confidences that he has obtained important results. I would advise you take your patient to him immediately.

This, of course, is strictly confidential. Pasteur wants to announce nothing until absolutely sure. I betray him only because there is a chance to save a life. I trust in your sense of honor.

Sincerely yours,
Letourneau.

He started another note:

Dr.

Dear Sir:—The dog you have delivered to me for examination shows no sign of hydrophobia. He seems to have been enjoying perfect health when the bullet in his brain cut off his canine career..

Sincerely yours,
Letourneau.

He rubbed his hands contentedly, with the satisfaction of a child who has been allowed to do something like his elders. For this famed scientist was really a child when it came to the petty, materialistic details of life. Usually, it was his wife who took charge of his correspondence; but she was away at present, nursing a sick sister. He had left the superscriptions blank, for, of course, he had forgotten the names. He never could remember names. He looked them up in the register which his wife kept so carefully, filled the blanks and addressed the letters accordingly, the first to Dr. Stratton, the second to Dr. Roux.

* * * * * *

Doctor Roux, the famed specialist in nervous diseases, was just getting up from breakfast when he received Professor Letourneau's note.

So there was no danger of hydrophobia. His patient's nervous fears could be set at rest. Well, he would go up at once and read him the comforting report.

But he did not go up immediately. He remained in his arm-chair, plunged in deep abstraction. Strange to say, he did not feel relieved by the news. It was such an interesting case—that man, athrill with fear, writhing beneath the menace of the terrible disease. He could see him now, the nervous, ultra-sensitive creature—a musician—with his pale expressive face and these wild, dark eyes which, since the accident, distended in a continuous expression of horror. Yes, it was interesting to watch the effects of fear, fear of an imaginary danger, upon this being whose distended nerves vibrated to the faintest suggestion.

"Suggestion!" He had come to the word at last! He angrily shook himself out of his reverie. Really this was too much! His researches were absorbing his faculties too completely. He must react, must change the current of his thoughts. There he was musing, loitering on the edge of an abyss of pernicious thoughts, while up there a human being was awaiting in a sweat of agonizing suspense for the verdict he held in his hand!

And yet who knew what a continuation of the experiment might bring? Who knew what he, Doctor Roux, famous for his experiments in hypnotism, could obtain from that impressionable nature by mere subtle suggestion? How far would the weaker mind be moulded by the continuous pressure of the superior, dominant will; and how far would the material body answer to the mad throbs of the imagination? Absorbing, irritating question.

There he was, at it again! He sprang to his feet and started up the stairs, three steps at a time. He would read the report immediately. But he slowed up gradually and entered the room half reluctantly.

The patient was reclining in an easy chair, wan and thin, his face livid in the yellow light that, filtering through a foggy sky, poured in at the window. He sat up as the doctor entered and flashed his dark eyes on him in mute and poignant interrogation.

"I have Letourneau's report," the doctor said slowly—a strange force seemed to compel him to pause here in a hesitating manner.

"Well?" gasped the patient.

"He's not sure—that is, the autopsy is somewhat unsatisfactory. The animal, you know, was much decomposed." The patient was breathing heavily, like a strong man undergoing a painful operation. "Well, he is not sure—that is, he does not find decided signs of hydrophobia." (This was diabolical, the doctor thought, with sudden, strange, objective appreciation of himself.) "He would not say that the dog had had hydrophobia; in fact, there is a chance—yes, I might say a good chance—that the animal was sound."

The patient turned away with a shuddering sigh of dejection.

"Come, come!" said the doctor cheerfully, "don't take it so hard. There is a chance, a good chance; in fact, the probabilities are in your favor. And then, you know, even if it were so, if the dog—well, cures have been made. Although the wound was cauterized somewhat late, yet it may not have been too late. And then, you know, the virus does not affect all organisms. Yes, you must brace up. Imagination is a great factor in such cases. A hopeful, determined mind will often turn the balance in the struggle of the body. Come, brace up; be cheerful. Put yourself in condition to resist."

Again the doctor had that sudden, vivid, objective sense of the atrocious subtlety of his encouragement. "What can I do for you?" he went on. "Are there any friends or relatives you would wish to see?"

The man shook his head negatively.

"He prefers the company of his own morbid fancies," thought the doctor. "Strange being!"

He left the room. All through, he had been led on by some diabolical impulse, and he stopped to ponder now. Yes, his work on suggestion was absorbing him too much altogether. There he was now making a human being writhe under an atrocious mental vivisection, and yet, as he analyzed himself coldly, he felt not the slightest tinge of pity. Had he really already come to this? A sudden horror of himself almost threw him back into the room. But the temptation clutched him again. "After all," he said to himself, "I can show him the report at any time. His joy will be the greater for the foregoing suffering. And it is all in the name of Science; Science, my pure, serene, august mistress!" His eyes glowed. "I will carry the experiment a little farther," he decided, resolutely.

And he began a systematic course of suggestion on the helpless creature in his power. He separated him from the outside world, isolated him with his own morbid fancies and slowly infiltered him with the poison of his subtle insinuation. He discoursed scientifically on hydrophobia, lent him books to read on the subject, books with hideously vivid colored plates illustrating the ravages of the disease. He told him fantastic, blood-curdling tales of mad dogs and wolves and mysterious wolf-men. He described again and again, with realism more and more hideous, the symptons of the disease, descending with inexorable precision to the minutest details, playing on the excruciatingly sensitive nerves of the morbid creature in his power.

And, from a scientific point of view, the experiment was proving eminently successful. In this atmosphere of impalpable horror, athrill to that soft, insidious, inexorable tapping, tapping, tapping of ceaseless, reiterated suggestion, the patient became a mere bundle of throbbing nerves. His black eyes, distended by an implacable fear, widened larger and larger, till the whole visage was consumed in their haunted flame. At length—wonderful confirmation of what the doctor had divined!—the symptoms which were described with such pitiless precision really began to appear. The body became rigid at intervals; the jaws had difficulty in working; an abundant saliva frothed at the mouth. His saturated imagination overflowed, sending the poison of suggestion coursing through the veins. It was a hallucination, not of the mind alone, but of the whole material body.

Several times the doctor thought of ending the experiment. The results were decisive enough; the demonstration of the effects of mere mental suggestion was striking and complete; further experiment was dangerous. But drawn on irresistibly by his hideous curiosity; seized with the vertigo of that abyss of knowledge into which his eyes plunged in morbid fascination, he kept on day after day, deciding every evening to free the victim, yielding every morning to the temptation of carrying on the investigation yet another day, and yet another day.

One night, he suddenly found himself sitting up in bed, wide awake, his heart hammering painfully at his ribs. There was a banging of doors in the halls outside, smothered exclamations, a rushing to and fro. Then, drowning these sounds, there rose a long, mournful, heart-twisting wail, low at first, but swelling in a fearful crescendo that pierced to the marrow, and dying down again in a deep mournfulness. There came a hammering and shouting at his door. An assistant was calling him. He sprang out of bed, and, as he threw on a few clothes, again the lugubrious cry rose and swelled, plaintive and enraged, beseeching and threatening, praying a horrible malediction in its agonizing wail.

The doctor rushed into his patient's room, filled with nameless terror, and yet, withal, a certain abominable triumph.

The man was crouching on all fours at the foot of the bed; at intervals he raised his head and his mouth opened convulsively in a long howl that rose tremulous, lamenting, horrible, the effort retching the body in a spasm. The doctor recognized the last symptoms of hydrophobia.

The howling wretch now sprang to his feet; his body contracted in a pang, then shot open with a spring-like snap, and he bounded almost to the ceiling. Again and again was the fearful performance repeated. The assistants could not hold him. He jumped and jumped and jumped, with enormous bounds, like the grotesque manikin of some Punch-and-Judy show, uttering strange, inarticulate cries, his nerves twisted in nameless agony.

Then—so it was related later by the assistants—the doctor made a last, desperate effort to save the man. He resorted to hypnotism, with which he had so often done marvelous things. Under his magnetic influence, the dying man calmed himself somewhat; his terrible jumping ceased gradually and at last he was held down on the bed in a sort of catalepsy. The doctor twined his arms lovingly around him. "Paul," he said, brokenly, "Paul, compose yourself. Listen to me. Don't look at me thus. Calm yourself. Listen." And, in a strangely commanding voice, "You have not hydrophobia; you have never been bitten by a mad dog; you imagine all that. I command you, Paul, listen to this. It is the report of Professor Letourneau."

Then, the assistants say, he read a pretended report of Professor Letourneau, which stated that the dog which had bitten the patient was altogether free of hydrophobia. "Paul, Paul, do you hear me? It is all a mistake. You are well!"

The glassy eyes of the man suddenly flashed with a terrible light. "Murderer!" he coughed out. Then a spasm stiffened him; a little foam rose to his lips; and he was dead.

* * * * * *

Professor Letourneau was reading, after a hard day's work,

Continued on page 15.

As The World Rolls

Monsters to Order.

TO transfer a man into a beast would at first seem to be impossible. It is accomplished, however, by the Chinese, to whom nothing seems to be unknown. The skin is removed in small particles from the entire surface of the body, and to the bleeding parts bits of the hide of living animals, bears and dogs, are usually applied. The operation requires years for its full accomplishment. After the victim has had his skin completely changed and becomes a man-bear or a man-dog, he is made mute to complete the illusion, and also to deprive him of the means of informing the public he is intended to amuse of his long torture.

A Chinese journal, the Hupao, prints a description of one of these human animals exhibited in the Kiangsi. His entire body was covered with dogskin. He stood erect, could utter articulate sounds, rise and sit down; in short, made the gestures of any human being. A Mandarin, who heard of this monstrosity,had him brought to the palace, where his hairy skin and bestial appearance caused quite as much terror as surprise. Upon being asked if he were a man the creature replied with an affirmative nod. He also signified in the same manner that he could write. A pencil was given to him but he could not use it, his hands were so deformed. Ashes were then placed on the ground in front of him, when the man-dog leaning over, traced in them five characters indicating his name and country.

Investigation showed that he had been stolen, imprisoned for years and subjected to long tortures. His master, who was condemned to death, testified during the trial that barely one in five failed to endure the process of skin changing. He practised it according to a traditional, and doubtless, old formula.

Another extraordinary monster was made by the bonzes who reared a child so he should have the appearance of a Buddha. The unfortunate became white as wax. He had been obliged to remain motionless in the posture of Buddha until his muscles had become rigid. No one had ever spoken to him, and he had grown in his cellar as a fungus would have done. Brought out to the light, this mute, blinking, living statue was eagerly worshipped by the credulous.

A Moving Stairway in New York.

IT has been customary in New York to bitterly complain at the steep and narrow stairways which passengers on the elevated railways must ascend and descend from street to track. To replace them various forms of elevators have been suggested, but the latest idea is an "escalator," or moving stairway. One of these is being placed at the 23rd street station, and it promises to solve the problem, "How passengers shall be raised to stations without tiring them."

Imagine a stairway in one continuous rise four feet wide with broad steps, ample room on each step for two or three people, or, the entire stairway holding sixty to ninety passengers at a time, moving along and discharging them at the upper landing with perfect ease of motion, requiring no practice or expertness in stepping from the moving platform or floor to the stationary one.

At the lower landing or approach to the escalator you step upon a moving floor, this floor forming itself into steps after travelling along three or four feet. You remain stationary on the step until you get to the upper landing, and the step in its turn is again converted into a level plane or moving floor,from which you step off on the station platform. If one or more persons are on the step ahead of you, you can readily pass on and by them, as in the present or ordinary stairway, or, if you are in a hurry,you can walk up the stairs as they travel along, and you will have taken only about ten or twelve steps in the run of thirty before landing on the upper platform.

The escalator is so constructed that the handrail travels with the stairs, so that its action is as simple for the person using it as standing upon an ordinary stairway. The motive power is electricity. One great advantage the escalator has over the incline railway is, if for any reason the electric current gives out, or the supply is temporarily cut off, you still have an easy, graceful stairway by which to reach the station platform.

A Poisoned Pin-prick.

THERE are finer ways of killing than that to which the anarchist Bresci resorted to make way with the Italian King. In Russia, where nihilism is supposed to have been stamped out, there occurred recently the most artistic murder of the century. The victim was the second in command of the Imperial gendarmerie, General Pantelegeff, and the deed was perpetrated in a railroad car, under extraordinary circumstances. Accompanied by Prince and Princess Apalinoff, General Pantelegeff made the journey from Petersburg to the Russian frontier. Seated in the compartment with them was a stranger, a well-dressed, distinguished-looking young man, who easily entered into conversation with his traveling companions. By the time the lamps were lit the talk had taken on a pleasant and intimate air; papers and magazines had been exchanged; it seemed as though the stranger would prove an agreeable traveling companion. Then an accident happened—the young man in bending forward to pick up a book which had fallen from his lap pricked his neighbour, the General, in such a manner as to evoke an exclamation of pain. Apologies, profuse regrets were at once forthcoming. It was a scarf-pin taken out of its place to cut the pages of his novel, and stuck in his sleeve, that had done the mischief. The young man was so very sorry that there was nothing to do but accept his explanations. But at the next station he got off, though he had previously declared Berlin as his destination. The conversation lulled at his departure. Apparently the General was drowsy; the Prince and Princess were reading. An hour later a new passenger entered and took a place beside Pantelegeff, who was half extended along the seat. He touched him, asking him to make room. The General was dead. At first this sudden demise was attributed to heart failure. At the autopsy, however, the doctors found first of all the mark of a pin or needle prick, the skin around it being black and "angry," and subsequently discovered traces of a very violent poison, evidently communicated by means of the pin or needle.

Then followed an inquiry. Arrests were made. Prince Apalinoff, recalling the incident of the pin-prick and the distinguished stranger, reported to the embassy. He and the Princess were at once asked to return to Russia, and scrutinize the several prisoners whom the police net had enmeshed. It is a strange episode, and it means that Russian officials must in future beware of pin-pricks as well as of bullets, knives and bombs.

Imported Coffins in China.

THE Boxer is a skilled laborer, who makes boxes, also coffins. From time immemorial the boxes made in China for teas, cotton, silks and jewelry have been put together in China by Chinese. Latterly the soft wood used in this manufacture has become very scarce, for the forests of the Mongolian Empire drawn on for years, are almost decimated. At first Japan, subsequently Russia, supplied the deficiency, but these sources both failing, the lumbermen of Washington and California began to ship to the Flowery Kingdom. Now the timber of foreign lands subserved excellently the purposes of the cabinet-makers, but the Boxers were reluctant to incorporate it into the creation of "the box so beautiful," by which name a casket is known in the land of Celestials. These have always been constructed of native woods, and as the funeral rites prescribe that the coffin shall remain tenanted in the hall of the house of the deceased for forty-nine days after its tenant's death, it is necessary that it should be made substantial and air-tight. It is not only strongly and accurately mortised together, and caulked on the outside, but it is cemented inside. Above all else, it must be made by boxers, and it is by far the most profitable "box" that they manufacture.

Chinese funeral customs are sacred. As soon as a man is dead he is supposed to have joined the celestial company of his ancestors, and is an object of worship. It follows that new ideas in coffins might naturally evoke resentment in a jealous and superstitious nation. Imagine, then, the anger and malevolence of the "boxers" when they discovered that caskets of English manufacture, decorated in the most approved fashions of the undertaking art, were being offered for sale in Shanghai and Pekin—coffins that not only attracted the eye, but appealed to the purses of their patrons. Here was competition with a vengeance—interference with ancient and sacred rights combined with cut rates. In many instances appeals were made to the patriotism and to the religious feelings of important Chinese against this invasion of vested privileges by "foreign devils," but the imported coffins had a plate-glass front through which the face of the deceased might be viewed in the long period before burial. This admirable advantage minimized the uncanny suggestions floated abroad by the Boxers. Foreign caskets grew in popularity. The Mandarins refused or neglected to lay down any hard-and-fast prohibitory rules, and the result is that the Boxers flamed up hot and fierce, vindictive toward foreigners and toward a Government that they did not consider protective. The casket, and not the glove, has been the animus, and should be the sign of distinction.

An Island of Widows.

THE population of the island of Aarlud, off the coast of Norway, is composed exclusively of widows. The story of their widowhood is one of those tragedies of the life of fisherfolk which excite, perhaps, a passing melancholy in the susceptible, provoke an ode of sorrow from a poet, while plunging the community affected into the depths of despair.

This was a colony of hardy fishermen—thirty families in all. To them there came a man and his wife from Haugesund, on the mainland, to participate in the spring egg gathering. He fell from a cliff and was killed. The sudden death, the first that occurred in Aarlud in eleven years, cast a deep gloom over the little colony, and all the men, to show their sympathy, agreed to attend the burial of the unfortunate in the cemetery at Haugesund. In a large smack they set out, dressed in their holiday garments, and saw the body of the dead lowered to its last resting-place. There arose then a storm which grew in intensity as the afternoon wore on. Would they brave the raging seas to return that night to Aarlud? Some held back, others insisted, laughing at the danger. So the smack, laden down with provender, set forth through the angry waves on its perilous voyage. On the shore the men and women who had mourned at the funeral stood and gazed after the vessel dipping like a cockle-shell into the depths between gigantic billows, again rising like a bird upon their crests. Suddenly there crashed towards her a mighty deluge. It struck, twisting round her prow. An instant later she had disappeared. From the silent watchers arose a cry. They rushed to their boats intent on rescue, but the roaring waters beat them back. Next morning the gale had subsided, and the flowing tide deposited its burden of thirty dead men upon the beach. Imagine the horror and the sorrow of the thirty wives made widows at a blow. All but two depended on their husbands' toil for daily food. Their straits were painful. From other fisher-folk came bread, and then the Government dispatched bacon and flour and tea. Now it is proposed to send to the island a number of single men, who may take up the fishing where the husbands left it,and,if they will, relieve the women of their widowhood. No living on memories of the departed when hunger presses and infant lips are crying for nourishment.

The Traveling Sidewalk at the Paris Exposition.

THE traveling sidewalk at the Paris Exposition, while by no means new in conception, is carried out on a far larger scale than ever before attempted. Extending for a length of 3.4 kilometers around the quadrilateral formed by the Rue Fabert, the Quai d'Orsay, the Avenue de la Bourdonnais, and the Avenue de la Motte-Piquet, it forms a continuous connection between the main portions of the Exposition. The mechanical operation is very simple, thanks to the ease with which power may be electrically distributed. It is understood that the main platform of two meters' width travels at the highest speed, eight kilometers per hour, while the auxiliary platform, of about half the width, travels at half the speed, the third platform remaining stationary. At every 200 meters there is placed beneath the platforms an electric motor, there being 172 motors in all, these being partly of the Alioth type and partly of the Westinghouse. The motors operate shafts extending across the framework, these shafts carrying driving wheels of two diameters acting upon rails attached to the undersides of the two sections of the platforms. The motors, being carried upon spring suspenders, are held up against the rails driven by them with a uniform pressure, so that unnecessary friction is avoided, and in practice the whole operates remarkably well, there being very little or no jarring or irregularity.

It is especially interesting to observe the ease with which all persons, old and young, of either sex, mount and descend from the platform, and even the brief experience which has been had already shows how entirely practicable the system is.

AN ANTIQUE HERO.—Field Marshal Von Blumenthal, "Unser Fritz's" chief of staff during the Franco-Prussian war, has just celebrated his ninetieth birthday, and is said to be sound in mind and body. He lives on a little country estate near Dessau in Anhalt. With the exception of the King of Saxony, he is the only prominent commander in the war with France still alive.

EVENTS CURRENT.

Diplomatic Relations in China. The latest phase of the Chinese imbroglio reports Russia and the United States in complete harmony as to maintaining the integrity of China and preventing the powers from demanding territorial concessions in settlement of their claims for indemnity. On its face this statement would seem to contradict itself, for of all the powers, aside from Japan, Russia is most interested in paring off a slice of the imperial domain of the Celestial. But there is another view to take of Eastern affairs, which will fully justify the Russian diplomacy that now urges a maintenance of the empire. As matters stand today a puff of wind might topple the empire over when a general scramble would ensue, such as street-gamins might indulge in around an over-turned apple cart. To the wily Li Hung Chang has been delegated the power to make peace. Li has ever been a friend to Russia and as he loves the Russians he also hates the Japanese. Li does not desire a Japanese-Chinese alliance, nor does Russia, and what course would seem more natural for the newly accredited envoy for peace than to urge upon his well-beloved friends the Russians to join America in its pronounced hostility to partition and so save China, forestall an alliance with Japan, and trust to Li to place the matter in such a light that the Chinese government when re-established would as an unwritten clause of the articles of peace, enter into an alliance with the Muscovite and forever shut out Japan.

If China be saved by this new movement, she will owe it to Russia more than to any other nation, and Russia may be trusted to demand and receive, if she has not already been promised, full compensation in the way of future concessions and alliances. Years may come before the full measure of reward is dealt out to this "friend in need" but the Russian is a patient waiter.

Great Britain might well prefer an Anglo-American-Japanese alliance. But if Russia has cleverly taken the steps now credited to her, then Japan has lost her strategic position. England must follow Russia and America. France doubtless will not hold out against her northern ally, and this leaves Japan standing out in the cold—anxious for a partition, yet unable to demand it, and watching with gazing wonder her Russian rival who wants territory as badly as she does, yet who is cleverly leading the sentiment for the integrity of China, and by this skillful stroke setting up Japan's implacable foe Li Hung Chang as the foremost man in China, and her northern enemy Russia, as the savior of the empire.

Japan may now only turn to Germany, with whom she has little in common, and who doubtless will be well satisfied to accept the same concessions, or a little better than are meted out to her sister nations.

* * *

The wise man now discounts all Chinese news emanating from Shanghai. This much is certain Peking is entirely under foreign control, the troops of each nation have formally marched through the royal palace, and have taken technical possession of the capital. The landing of Japanese troops at Amoy on what appeared to be an insufficient pretext aroused some protests, which have gradually died away. A compact is reported between Russia and America, the main features of which are: first, that the rescue of the ministers and foreign residents, for which purpose solely the allies seized the capital, has been accomplished; second, that Emperor Kwang Hsu is de facto and de jure ruler of China; third, that Li Hung Chang is the duly accredited envoy for peace. The third, fourth and fifth articles request the powers to co-operate with Li Hung Chang and his government for the restoration of order, the open door, the arrangement for indemnities, and preserving the integrity of the empire. The sixth article provides for maintaining the integrity of the empire and that no territorial compensations be demanded. The other nations are requested to join in this agreement. If they do so the United States will at once withdraw her troops.

The Situation in South Africa. The South African struggle is still going on stubbornly without any startling results. The remaining Boer commanders are doing some wonderful work with their numerically insignificant forces. De Wet, however, after having been surrounded by "Bobs" half a dozen times, and having as many times broken through, has at last been forced to scatter his commandos and take to the hills, after burying his artillery. Having gotten rid in some degree of this most exasperating adversary, Lord Roberts turned his attention to Botha. On August 29th, after three days' stubborn fighting, Buller's advance occupied Mashadorf. The casualties on the British side were few, and it is said the enemy suffered heavily. Subsequently the Boers retired northward, followed by Dundonald. French followed them to Elandsfontein and chased them into the hills. It is understood they are retiring to Leydenburg. In the meantime, Bruce Hamilton has captured General Olivier at Winburg and beaten back his force. This officer, Lord Roberts says, was the moving spirit among the Boers in the south-east portion of the Orange colony during the war, and his retirement should aid in the process of pacification. Dr. Leyds has been interviewing the Czar with the idea of persuading his intervention, but the Russian said he could do nothing for the Transvaal but urge it to make peace.

Cost of the Philippine War. The Philippines are proving a costly addition to the budget of the United States government. A compilation made from the report of the secretary of war up to May 24th of this year and, since then, from General McArthur's casualty list shows that, from February 4, 1899, at which time hostilities with the Filipinos began, up to the present day, we have lost 2400 lives in the islands. Of these, 533 were of men killed in action, 193 were deaths from wounds, and 1668 from disease and other causes. Besides, 2073 men have been incapacitated by wounds, the total loss of fighting-material thus amounting to over 4400 soldiers.

Financially, the loss, although not as deplorable, is yet worthy of tremendous consideration. Estimates prepared by expert accountants of the treasury department up to date show that the cost of the army and navy since the beginning of the hostilities in the Philippines to have been $164,750,000 in excess of what it would have been had the same average rate of expenditure been maintained that prevailed before the war with Spain. From this, however, $30,000,000 for expenditures of the navy and $15,000,000 for expenditures of the army that cannot be charged directly to the Philippine war must be subtracted, thus leaving $159,750,000 as the approximate cost of the military and naval operations in the islands. Adding to this the $20,000,000 paid to Spain, and we have the grand total of $186,678,000, cost of the Philippines to the United States up to date.

Conviction of Caleb Powers. Caleb Powers, secretary of the State of Kentucky, has been adjudged guilty of being an accessory before the fact to the murder of William Goebel, assassinated a few days before being formally declared Governor of Kentucky. His sentence is imprisonment for life. This result is peculiarly Kentuckian. Blood for blood, not justice, is the principle that seems to have been prominent in the proceedings.

William Goebel was killed on January 30th. A cold, hard man, indomitable of will, machiavelian of brain, he was the climax of the American Politician in the worst sense of the word. For years he had controlled the Democratic machine, and in the autumn of 1899 got himself nominated candidate for the Governorship of the State. The Republicans and those of the Democrats who wished to escape the unscrupulous tyranny of the man, rallied around W. S. Taylor, the regular Republican candidate. The electoral fight was one of utmost bitterness. At last, when the polls had been counted, Taylor was found to have a majority. He immediately took his seat, in spite of the threat of the Goebel faction, who claimed fraud in the count. The Legislature was convened at Frankfort to settle the question. It was a time of intense excitement. The men of the two factions went about armed. Fifteen hundred feudists from the Kentucky mountains guarded the capitol and Governor from a coup-de-main. As soon as the legislature was formed it was seen that the majority of its members were of Goebel's most uncompromising followers, and a verdict in his favor was generally expected. It was just such a time as produces fanatics, and the fanatic appeared. On the morning of January 30th, while crossing the square to the capitol, Goebel was pierced by a rifle ball fired from the Executive Building. He died a few days later after having been declared Governor of the State by the Legislature.

The facts proved at the trial, which convinced the jury (composed of eight Democrats, three anti-democrats, and one Republican) of Power's guilt are these :

1. His own admission, corroborated by testimony of many witnesses, that he had organized the party of 1200 mountaineers brought down to Frankfort.

2. The proof that the bullet that killed Goebel came from his office in the Executive Building, and that he gave Youtsey, his clerk, who acted as go-between, the key to this office.

3. The testimony of Coombs and Hockersmith, two professional bravos, to the fact that Youtsey, acting for Powers, had offered them "the job," which they had refused.

This is fearfully meagre evidence on which to convict. The organization of the force of mountaineers was a precautionary measure, having nothing to do with the murder. That the fatal bullet came from the office of the Secretary of State is by no means proved, and even if it should have been, it was also established that Powers was miles away at the time of the shooting, More startling, but equally unreliable when examined, is the testimony of the two villainous negro bravos who claim that Powers offered them "the job." The most disreputable thing in the whole proceedings is the exorbitant reward offered for conviction. With such a sum, in the present inflamed state of political passions, the doom of any man can be bought.

We are having our own Dreyfus affair.

Racial Troubles Again. Racial war has again broken out, in New York this time. During the night of the 19th the metropolis was at the mercy of a maddened mob, rushing through the streets after "niggers." Inoffensive negroes were caught and brutally beaten, some to death. As in New Orleans, the cause of this burst of violence was the killing of a policeman by a negro malefactor, and, as in New Orleans, the avengers of the policeman belonged to a class which is not usually supposed to be friendly to the police. On the 26th mob violence broke out once more, and the big city was again in the convulsions of negro-baiting for a few hours. The most serious aspect of these deplorable affairs is the dubious role taken by the New York Police. Not only were they totally unable to quell the tumult, but impartial observers claim that, far from seeking to subdue the rioters, they actually gave them a helping hand. Squads sent out to disperse the mob yielded to the excitement of nigger-hunting, and not infrequent was the sight of a poor inoffensive colored man fleeing from a howling, threatening, brick-throwing populace, only to fall into the fraternal arms of two or three policemen, and be clubbed by them into insensibility. From midnight, when the riots started, to 2 o'clock in the morning, the sole arrests made were of negroes, battered, nose-broken, terrorized. It was only when the rioters became worked up to a frenzy, became irrespectful to the bluecoats, thus making their grievances personal, that white men began to appear at the stations. It is sad to think that such a state of affairs exists at the end of the nineteenth century in what is supposedly the most civilized city in America.

The Famine in India. The monsoon has at length reached the parched, famine-stricken lands of India. It would be foolish, however, to expect beneficent results within a short time. The crisis has been too severe, not to leave its effects for months and perhaps years to come. The rain has softened the ground, and has made tilling possible, but the natives have neither grain to sow nor oxen to plough with. It will take a new and tremendous effort from the British Government and individual charity to assure the future. Unless the poverty-stricken and famished Hindoo can be provided with grain and beasts of burden famine will be his lot next year, however abundant the fall of rains has been.

Reports are beginning to come in from the interior districts of the famine-stricken area, and they are indeed appalling. In the State of Bundi, for instance, the distress is awful. All crops have completely failed, 90 per cent. of the cattle have perished and the roads are white with human skeletons. Among the hills of south-western Rapputana, the population has been decimated by half. Cholera, among these debilitated survivors of famine, is making dreadful ravages. The people of Gujerat are dying off 4000 a week. In the Central Provinces 13,000 cases and 9000 deaths occurred during the past two weeks. The disease is prevalent in sixteen out of the eighteen districts. A continuation of the rains, however, is expected to bring a change for the better, as the epidemic is due to the rotten water that remains at the bottom of the ponds, and which is the Hindoo's sole source of supply.

Russia and Finland. The destruction of another nationality is slowly going on in Northern Europe. The recent ukase of Czar Nicholas, decreeing that the various departments of the Duchy of Finland should transact business exclusively in the Russian language is aimed directly at the hegemony which the Finlanders have guarded so jealously. Russian is spoken in Finland by only 8,000 out of the 2,700,000 inhabitants. The Finlanders are working strenuously to keep their last vestiges of independence. The deputies of the Finland Diet have drawn up a petition to the Czar in which they beg him to repeal this late ukase and in which they state strongly that "the Finnish language is not merely a local dialect in subordination to the imperial language, but that it is the national language of Finland and can alone, in the fullest sense of the word, be the official language of Finland," and further, "that the ukase is a decree tending to violate the position of the native language in the administration of the Finnish Government offices, which from the outset is stamped as impracticable and cannot be put into operation without conflict with the legal order of the country."

This is strong and dignified language, but the appeal stands little chance of being heeded. The Russian Government is taking vigorous measures to suppress all signs of discontent. Criticisms of the ukase in the Finnish press are instantly met by the suppression of the newspapers risking them. The Nga Pressen, the most important paper in Finland, has already met this fate. Some of the Imperial advisers are suggesting the abolition of the Finnish Diet. Pan-Slavism is strong and the Finns are in danger of losing the last of the autonomy secured by them at the convention of Borga.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second-class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—September 1, 1900—Seattle

Lest We Forget.

THERE are some things that Republicans might just as well bear in mind during the campaign.

Remember this. If Bryan had not favored the Treaty of Paris there would have been no question of Imperialism in this campaign.

He did favor paying Spain twenty million of dollars for the Philippines.

He did favor the annexation of the Philippines after the forces of Aguinaldo were at war with our troops.

He did urge the Democrats in the Senate to vote for the treaty.

He did secure seventeen Democratic senators to do so.

He did secure the passage of the treaty by one vote more than the necessary two-thirds vote.

He admits there would have been no issue of Imperialism if the treaty had been rejected.

He admits that the defeat of the treaty would have ended all talk of Imperialism and that he could have defeated it and yet he admits that he favored the treaty and secured its passage because denial would be impossible.

When your Democratic friend turns to the question of trusts,

Remember that it takes a two-thirds vote in the Senate to inaugurate a constitutional amendment.

Remember that the Senate is not two-thirds Republican.

Remember that a Republican proposed a constitutional amendment that would have put an end to unlawfnl combinations of capital.

Remember that Mr. Bryan and the Democratic senators opposed the amendment and defeated it.

Remember it was admitted on all sides that the proposed amendment was well considered and would have effectually put an end to the trusts, and

Remember the only ground the Democrats had for defeating it, and denying the people the right to vote upon it, was to prevent the Republicans from obtaining credit for opposing trusts, and for the further purpose of keeping the issue alive.

When your Democratic friend talks to you about oppression abroad and declares that "government without the consent of the governed is despotism,"

Call his attention to the condition of affairs down South.

Call his attention to the action of the Democratic party South of Mason and Dixon's line where Democracy is disfranchising ten million colored citizens.

Call his attention to the fact that these ten million people are being hopelessly stripped of all right of representation, right under Mr. Bryan's nose, and by his own party, and with his consent and approval.

And ask your Democratic friend what kind of a party is that which claims the suffrages of the American people by promising to give self-government to a rebellious people thousands of miles away, while it is robbing a peaceable people at home of every shred of right guaranteed by our constitution.

The last refuge of the Bryan Democrat is this:

"But you will admit that Mr. Bryan is honest and sincere."

There is absolutely nothing in Mr. Bryan's record that proclaims him as the possessor of either of these traits to any marked extent. If you read his carefully prepared public utterances and read nothing else, you might be excused for regarding him as a "patriot," "orator" and "peerless statesman"; but if you lift the curtain and look behind the scenes, you will find him to be a politician pure and simple; you will find him pulling every string and resorting to every trick and device known to the trade to catch votes; you will discover that he appeals to ignorance, that he labors to awaken class hatreds, that he appeals to prejudice, that his frankness is assumed; that he plays to the gallery; that he is a humbug, a prevaricator and a light weight who would rattle about in the presidential chair like a pea in a pod; who, if left to his own methods, would disgrace the nation in the sight of the world and introduce a cheap era of mediocrity, that the nation would look back upon with shame. He has the trick of writing and speaking to an eminent degree. He has the trick of filching as his own, fundamental principles which no man denies, and has the further trick of misrepresenting facts to which he falsely applies these principles. He has the trick of appropriating the sacred names of the great Americans of the past, garbling their utterances and distorting their meaning to fit his argument and serve his selfish ends. He misquotes Lincoln and then compares himself with that great Republican martyr. He poses like a clog dancer, and claims to be representing Jefferson and his principles. He uses quotations from Lincoln's utterances to justify the success of the party that is engaged in disfranchising ten million colored people. He is grossly insincere, and is certainly politically dishonest, as his attitude plainly shows.

H. E. Huntington.

IT now seems certain that Henry E. Huntington will succeed his uncle in managing and caring for the great railroad properties which represent the life achievement of the greatest railroad builder of the age. The name of "Huntington" will remain where it is, graven deep in the keystone. And no stranger hand will chisel it out. This is as it should be. The younger Mr. Huntington is confronted with a stupendous task, and yet it is one that the dead man had long been educating him to assume. The undertaking is one that the senior Huntington had, in his lifetime, decided the junior was competent to fill. That the younger Mr. Huntington is a far abler man than the world would be likely to give him credit for, is most natural. He has sat in the shadow of one who stood head and shoulders above all of his contemporaries. It is not likely that outside of his own office, he has ever gotten credit for many of the policies which really belong entirely to himself.

The people of California are interested in the personality of Mr. Huntington's successor, for he will direct the destinies of an institution that has more dealings with the public at large than any other half dozen concerns in the State. This much is certain, so far as his ability to manage and care for the properties go, he is fit. In all of his years of close association with his uncle, that keen master-mind has been estimating and observing the younger man with the eyes of Argus. He understood mankind as few men do. And it is safe to assume that before finally determining to entrust his all into his hands, he had taken accurate measure of the man from every point of view. Writing of him to a friend he said:

"He is a practical man, who, while losing very few points in the transaction of business, looks at things in a just spirit, and means to be fair to all."

This probably sums up Mr. H. E. Huntington's character in a very few words. In his relation with men he is extremely courteous and affable. He is easily approached—seldom denying himself to visitors. He possesses the rare art of saying "No" without giving personal offense. His manner with those immediately about him is most affectionate. He is considerate and kindly by every instinct. And the employees of the company who have grown old and gray and—well-nigh incompetent — may be thankful that to him will be reassigned the control of the physical properties. The elder Mr. Huntington understood the danger that threatened the men, old in the service, and one of the last hopes of his life was to so adjust matters that no harm could come to them because of their age or infirmity. A hostile press and rival insurance societies managed, however, to create a false sentiment among some of the men and the well-intended measure was dropped. Only a few days before his death, he wrote as follows concerning the insurance plans:

"It was the men's interests I was looking out for in the formulated plan submitted to them, and they will no doubt believe it sometime, if they do not now. If we could have helped them to get on a basis that would be a safe and permanent foundation of relief from care and anxiety for the future of their families, I should have been pleased to have done so, so far as I could consistently and with proper regard to the interest of the stockholders I represent."

Some day the employees of the corporation may come to recognize just what Mr. Huntington was attempting to do for them and will then be ready to act on the counsel of the man now dead.

H. E. Huntington partakes very largely of the spirit of development that was so marked in his senior. He is gifted with much of his wonderful foresight. The construction of the Coast line, in spite of the persistent opposition of his associates, is one of the policies that, to a man familiar with railroading, means a great deal. Just now, when a rival line is bidding for business down south, the Southern Pacific will be ready to meet that competition by offering a shorter route, more pleasantly located, and avoiding deserts, the hot valley, and the Tehachapi.

We believe Mr. H. E. Huntington will meet all the requirements of the people and the stockholders, and that he will labor as well to see that full justice be done the man to whom both he and the State owe so much.

Disfranchisement of the Blacks.

THE Democratic movement down South that is intended to strip from the negro the right to vote, by enforcing an educational test, may be more far-reaching in its effects than its authors dream. Much may be said in support of an educational qualification as prerequisite to the exercise of the highest right of citizenship. In a republic the honor, the credit, the very existence of the nation is quadriennially submitted to the votes of the people, and the nation is deeply interested in elevating the standard of national intelligence. To eliminate at one stroke the illiterate as a factor in politics would so far as practical results go, be equivalent to equipping, at one stroke, the ignorant with an education. The whole matter of the right of the State in this connection is, we believe, still to be heard and determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, but assuming the right of the State will be upheld, it is interesting to speculate as to what will result.

First as to the South itself. Political lines down in Dixie's land are drawn not so much between the Republican and the Democratic parties as they are between the Black party and the White party. To be a Republican down there means in many cases, to favor negro domination; and the white man is restrained from fleeing Democracy because he finds it well, nigh impossible to give his sanction to such domination. With the negro eliminated, the whites may freely divide along strict party lines, and—we take it—the result will show a gradual disintegration of the solid South, and a healthy and lasting division along lines free from prejudice. Suppose this policy crept north, how would it affect Democracy? Probably no one will question the statement that in the North the great majority of the illiterate vote the Democratic ticket, while in the South the majority of the illiterate (the blacks) vote the Republican ticket. Eliminate the illiterate Democratic vote in the North and you will take many a doubtful State out of the ranks of Democracy and put them solidly with the Republican party, while the same operation in the South, which will cut out the illiterate Republican vote, will eventually bring about a healthy division in the South, which must result in breaking up its solidity. It may be that out of the results of race prejudice may be evolved a something that will better the republic and create an incentive for the illiterate to acquire at least rudimentary knowledge.

A GENEROUS CORPORATION.—The Boston Elevated Railway Company has distributed about 100,000 free tickets, through churches and charitable associations, so that mothers and children and sick and aged persons who cannot pay may be carried to the woods or seashore.

At the end of his rope.

The Philippines: "What yer got?"
Cuba: "Pie."
The Philippines: "Where'd yer get it?"
Cuba: "Mah Uncle Sam gin it to me! an' maybe ef you was half way decent he' gin you some."

HARMONY.

Sambo Bull: "I'se jes gotter hab dis yer fowl. Ef I don' git him, dem udder furrin niggas'll swipe him for sunh."

IF BRYAN WERE PRESIDENT

CROKER.—"That's proper, William, don't forget to feed the tiger."

"SEE ODELL! HE'S MY BUSINESS PARTNER!"

R. C. Bowman, Minneapolis Tribune.
Bush in New York World.
Philadelphia Enquirer.

R. C. Bowman, Minneapolis Tribune.
P. J. Carter, Minneapolis Times.
Cory in New York World.

CURRENT CARTOONS.

Suburban Homes of California: Belvedere

Commercial Opportunities in the Philippines

By Herman Ross

An "Arrastre," for Collecting Gold from Quartz.

Hauling Sugar Cane on Plantation in Negros.

Sugar Cane Workers near Tanauan, Luzon.

"TALK about money," an American resident said to me the other day, "Why, in Manila, it is lying around loose." This was his way of expressing the immense commercial opportunities to be had in the Philippines. It must not be taken as a literal statement. Money makes money. The man who comes here without capital of any kind is making a huge mistake. There are too many discharged American soldiers ready to crowd the lines of ordinary employment. On the other hand, the man who comes with capital, from a few thousands clear up into the millions is sure of great results. This is a time of war and uncertainty, yet I have still to learn of a single American enterprise which is not making manifold returns on the investment. When the country is really tranquil, when conditions become stable, the chances will be beyond computation. The island of Luzon is not a pleasant place of residence, but it has a great climate for the growth of money.

Resources of Luzon.

There has been much speculation over the existence of mines and other hidden sources of wealth in the interior. The conservative observers of the Philippine commercial field place little reliance upon these reports. Whatever else may be said of the Spaniards, they are keen gold-hunters. The sudden wealth to be obtained from a gold-mine just suits their ideas on money-making. They have always found the gold in a country within the first decade of their occupation, yet they lived three hundred years in the Philippines and never discovered any considerable mines or mining properties. The chances are in straight commerce. The Island of Luzon, in spite of pessimistic reports to the contrary, is one of the richest districts in the world. Its forests, mostly untouched by the hand of man, are a gold-mine in themselves. It has hardly an acre of arid ground. The soil is of rank fertility. The section which has been under cultivation since the coming of the Spaniards has been tilled in a half-hearted, Spanish-Malay fashion and is not in any sense worked out. The rest, nearly one-half the total area, is virgin soil of extraordinary productiveness. The whole area is capable of raising those "fancy" crops which return fabulous profits in proportion to the area tilled—tobacco, coffee, sugar. The hemp crop is not pushed to one-third of its possibility, and cocoa-nut raising, in spite of the adaptability of certain sections, is only an infant industry. Almost the only crop which has reached its possibilities in acreage and totals is rice, and even that could be increased in profits by the introduction of modern methods to replace the antiquated water-buffalo and wooden plow.

Mining Chances.

I said that I placed little reliance on mining chances. It is only fair to give the other side a hearing, however. Mr. J. P. Carroll, formerly a chief in the sanitary service, has been prospecting in the hills and gulches of Benguet. He is an experienced miner, has prospected all over Central and South America, Colorado and Alaska, and is therefore entitled to a hearing when he says that the quartz leads discovered by him in that region are richer and more promising than any others known to his experience. He found leads in many of the creeks; some of these he followed, and, by drifting forty or fifty feet, discovered that they widened as they went in. The specimens returned show gold in paying quantities. It is no aspersion on Mr. Carroll to say that we who have lived in mining countries are taking all this very calmly. A show of good specimens and proof of good leads do not in themselves make a paying region by a long ways.

Commercial Opportunities.

In straight business, however, lies the best chance. Take banking for an example. There are only three banks which rise above the dignity of a pawn-shop. Two are English and one is Spanish. The British institutions, which made big receipts in the old days, have fairly coined money since the American occupation. The Shanghai and Hongkong concern, the leader, now returns a profit of sixty per cent a year—this in the banking business, noted for small and sure profits. The local branch of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China does not make public its financial statements, but cannot be very far behind. The Espanol-Filipino institution may do nearly as well, although the annual statement shows only 18 per cent, of which 10 per cent goes to the revenues of the islands, according to the old Spanish charter not yet revoked. This bank has, however, been much more profitable in years past, and those on the inside suspect that figures are being juggled in hopes of further governmental concessions. These banks are so independent and insolent with prosperity that they will hardly deal with a sum of less than fifty dollars, and in exchange, their principal business, they charge ruinous rates. In addition, there is one savings bank, a church affair, which combines with its regular trade the functions of a pawn shop. The American soldiers are suspicious of this institution and very shy about making deposits. A savings bank on our own plan would derive immense business from the troops alone. In fact, the figures just presented should prove that the opening for any bank is a great one. A house with headquarters in Manila and branches at Hongkong, Shanghai and other commercial ports would not only pay but would be an American power over all the East.

A Plantation House on Negros.

Openings for Railroads.

With all the rich farming and timber land in the island, there is just one railroad, that from Manila north to the Gulf of Lingayan, only 120 miles. It taps an immensely fertile region, but not by any means the most fertile one. Everywhere else, the products of the country are transported by the snail-like buffalo to the sea ports of the coast. The general agricultural development of Luzon must await the construction of other lines, and these lines will pay immensely as the opening up of the country proceeds. Ex-Minister Barrett has said that $150,000,000 of American capital will find profitable investment in this direction. While these figures are probably overstated they are by no means impossible. A line up the west coast and one through the central provinces would yield profits within two years and would in ten years give returns out of all proportion to the investment. The projected new roads through the southern coffee plantations will pay from the very start, since in that direction the field is well developed. This statement ignores the other islands, equally rich and as yet untouched by the railroad builder.

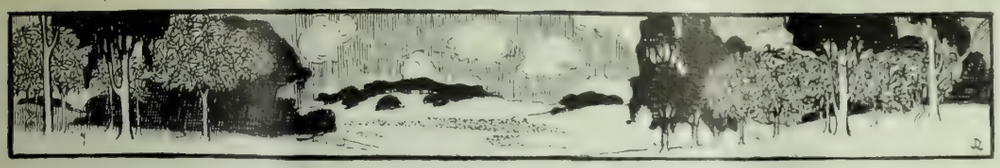
Further, there is a great field for the manufacture of the native raw material. No island of the earth has more extensive water-power. Every river, every one of the little streams which overnet Luzon is in some place or another a raging cataract. Thousands of waterfalls lie close to the hemp fields, the cane plantations, the forests. Indeed, after the raw wealth in timber, coal and minerals has been worked out, after the soil has become somewhat exhausted, this manufacturing resource is likely to become the chief source of wealth in the islands.

Suburban Traction Lines.

There is room for a system of rapid transit in the City of Manila itself. The town, although about as large as San Francisco, has only one street railway. This is drawn by mules, is as slow as walking, and is so irregular that one has often to wait from fifteen minutes to half an hour for a car. It intersects a part of the business district, and never touches the residence portion. The city has extensive suburbs. Pandacan, Santa Ana, San Pedro, Macati and Pasig maintain communication with the business portion by means of boats and the lazy current of the river, but Paranaque, Bacoor, Imus and Cavite may be reached only by foot or carriage. I have heard scoffers urge the objection that the present street railway system does not pay. This is true—it returns a fair profit, but not such a fortune as is expected from an investment in Luzon. The reason is that the slow, lazy, unreliable methods of operation make the line comparatively useless. Were there a swift system, running to the various suburbs, it would gain traffic from those who wish to trade in the city, and from the crowded city dwellers desirous of a residence outside. The central part of town is fearfully congested since the rise of business. The great army of native workmen employed have to live near at hand in order to reach business in time. At present, every inch of house space within a mile is occupied and the overflow burrows in the banks of the Pasig like rabbits. An electric line to the suburbs would be a blessing to them and a sure source of profit to the owners.

SCIENTIFIC JAIL BREAKING.—Three prisoners recently effected their escape from the New Orleans county jail by making a hole through a sandstone wall. They were in the same cell on the ground floor of the old jail. They evidently had an accomplice on the outside who furnished them with a cord or more of stovewood. The three burned a fire against the sandstone wall, and while it was very hot dashed cold water against it. This crumbled the sandstone to sand, and soon made a whole big enough for a yearling calf to walk through.

Personalities of the Day.



Count von Waldersee.

COUNT VON WALDERSEE, the commander of the allied forces in China, is somewhat leisurely taking his post. He has been traveling slowly through Germany amidst "tremendous ovation's, from the people. In Berlin, he called on all the foreign ambassadors to let them know in a discreet way his high opinion of the troops whom he was going to honor by commanding. He told the American minister that the American soldier was the best soldier in the world, a compliment which, when it is considered that the Count has never seen an American soldier, was a very graceful one. Then he lunched with the Kaiser, kissed the hand of Her Majesty and—made some more speeches. A journey to the Bavarian court was then judged indispensable, and luncheons, dinners, balls, royal hugging and popular speeches again made the last days of the departing crusader merry. Duty, however, clamored imperiously and, with tears streaming down his battle-scarred face, this nineteenth century knight buckled his armor, waved his hand to his faithful Germans who had assembled to bid him farewell, and—crossed the frontier to take lunch with Italy's new monarch. Meanwhile, the wretched Pekin legations, have had the indecency to allow themselves to be delivered in un-German, unorthodox fashion by a disreputable, wild-cat, go-as-you-please expedition without a commander-in-chief. Notwithstanding the deliberateness of his ways Count von Waldersee has an exceptional military record. He is perhaps the best example of the new type of military man evolved in Germany during the last fifty years—the scientific student of war who moves armies of men disciplined to mechanism, as the chess-player moves his ivory figures. It remains to be seen whether this system is applicable in China. The Count enjoys two other distinctions—his wife is an American girl and the Kaiser regards him as a friend. Hence his selection for the trying role as leader of the allies. He was ambassador to France after the war of 1870.

Count Von Waldersee.

The Richest Chinaman in the Philippines.

ONE of the most powerful financiers in the Philippines is a Chinaman. By the grace of the Spanish government, his name is Don Carlos Palanea, but he wears a pig-tail, long finger-nails, flowing trousers and his eyes are oblique. He was born in Amoy fifty-eight years ago and came to Manila as a poor coolie when but fourteen years old. Now, he is said to have as many thousands of dollars as there are hairs in his cue. He wears the Grand Cross of Isabella on his bosom, is Chinese consul-general and captain-general, and, is in fact, the ruler of the Philippinized Chinese. He has a galvanized-iron palace in Manila, in a sumptuous room of which he holds court.

In political principles, Don Carlos is somewhat blunt and practical. He says that the Chinese come to the Philippines to make money; that the Spaniards came to make money; and that the Americans came to make money. Of course, we are ready to agree to the first two statements, but the last should be sugar-coated. His solution of the insurrection problem is simple and can be condensed in one word: "Shoot!"

Cecil Rhodes' Portrait.

AN interesting impression of Cecil Rhodes is given by the daughter of a painter to whom the empire-builder had sat for his portrait. A great, big man sitting in a great big basket-chair lined with bright blue cotton. He and the chair seemed to fill the whole studio. And yet, after all, not such a very enormous man; it is the head that is so big, colossal—just as the head of a great lion, full of brain and capacity, with plenty of crisp, grey hair. The face is massive and majestic, like the face of a Nero on a coin.

His clothing seemed to have been dragged on through sheer force; the tweed coat was all buttoned up wrong—buttons invariably hitched up to the buttonholes that weren't meant for them. He wore snow-white flannel trousers—which, I have been told since, were a source of great anxiety to his friends in Kimberley, who were always afraid of his being sniped by the Boers, because of their conspicuousness. One could not help instinctively liking this rough, down-right-florid-faced man. And he certainly did not seem a woman-hater, as most people call him. But I gathered that he would not place the average woman high, although whenever he met a woman he would be most anxious to please her.

Directly the painter opened his paint-box and prepared to begin the portrait, Mr. Rhodes rose from his chair, drew his great form up to its full height, and said: "Sir, do you intend to paint me full face?" The painter, unaware of Mr. Rhodes' little eccentricities, knew not what to answer for the moment, but Mr. Rhodes swept all hesitation aside by blurting out, Now, look here; if you don't paint me full face, you don't, paint me at all, unless it is the back of my head. Why in heaven's name does a man want to paint your side face when all honest men look you straight n the face? No one ever saw me other than full face."

"A man here called Blank, R. A.," he added, "once dared to paint me three-quarter face. Three-quarter indeed! I sent him a cheque for the picture. I wanted it to destroy it." And he flung himself back in his chair plump in front of the painter, looked him full in the face, and growled "Now begin." The poor painter looked thoroughly embarrassed, and I felt scared, for I have never seen anyone look quite so savage. But we soon understood that a great deal of this roughness was to cover an almost childish shyness, for Mr. Rhodes at heart is a very shy man. Almost immediately the painter and he were in sympathy, and a warm friendship sprung up between them.

And then he talked, and I listened, a sympathetic listener, and oh, how natural the man was! He talked of his gardens, of his work in Rhodesia, of Long Cecil, of the Boers, of everything, and he seemed to like to talk of it. Whenever he is very excited and particularly interested in anything I notice that he always speaks in a high-pitched, falsetto voice. Does not this sound strangely out of place in a man like Rhodes?"

American Generals in China.

PERHAPS no appointments ever caused less complaint and jealousy among army men than those of Generals Chaffee and Wilson to the command of the American Expeditionary Force in China. Both generals are peculiarly fitted to deal with the situation and the qualities of the one complement those of the other in most happy fashion. Chaffee is a plain, unvarnished soldier, skilful in tactics, and brave as a lion. Wilson is a more polished man, and has a diplomatic ability which should prove useful in the complications that will surely arise in the international army.

The military career of General Chaffee has been from the very beginning haloed in romance—a singular fact when the rough soldier's dislike for the romantic, which he calls "rot," is taken into consideration. When 19 years old he enlisted for the Civil War in the Sixth Regular Cavalry—the same regiment which, as Major-General, he is leading now in China. From the very first he showed marked ability. He was soon made sergeant, then lieutenant, and came out as captain. In this capacity he was sent to Texas, in 1867, then to Arizona, where he made a reputation in fighting the Apaches. He became the best scout and trailer in the army. No cowboy is more expert in following the track of man or horse. It was at the battle of Big Dry Gulch that he specially distinguished himself.

An Act of Daring.

The troops were on one side of a canyon, the Apaches on the other. Chaffee was out in front of the firing line with scouts. The Indians were peppering away in lively fashion. Suddenly one of the scouts fell about one hundred feet from Chaffee. The latter looked at the fallen soldier and noticed a movement of the body. "He's only wounded," he said; "let's get him." Then he crawled right across the open, a mark to the concentrated fire of the enemy, to the wounded man, and dragged him back within the lines. Chaffee's men, thrilled at the act, and forgetting all about the Indians, broke out in a wi'd cheer. "Shut your mouths!" roared their irascible commander, almost dropping his burden in his indignation. "Shut up and tend to your shooting!"

When the war with Spain began Chaffee was Lieutenant-Colonel of the Third Cavalry. He was commissioned to command a brigade, and operated in Cuba between Las Guasimas and El Caney At El Caney, as he was walking up and down the firing line, he noticed a private in the trenches conscientiously discharging every one of his shots toward the clouds. Chaffee got down in the trench, laid his hand kindly on the shoulder of the erratic marksman, and asked what was the matter.

"Nothing, I guess, sir," was the answer, "unless it is that I am scared."

Chaffee lay down by the soldier, and proceeded to give him a lesson in marksmanship. When he got through the young fellow was as steady as a church.

At Santiago the army was anxious to co-operate with the navy in an attack on Morro Castle. Nothing, however, was known of the nature of the Spanish fortification. One day Chaffee disappeared. He came back at night to find the commanders in consultation as to the practicability of a land attack on the Spanish castle. "Here's something that you might use," he said, throwing a bundle of papers upon the table. They were rough sketches of the approaches to Morro. He had drawn them "while out walking;" he explained.

Chaffee is beloved of his men. The remark of old Sergeant Woodhall, of the Sixth Cavalry mortally wounded at El Caney, illustrates this. "I've had some close calls," said the dying soldier, turning to the men who was sitting by him, "but they've got me this time. Of course he is too busy at the front now, but I do wish I could see the 'old man' once again before I go. It's worth something to fight under him, and I tell you the boys of the Sixth would be willing to go to hell if they knew the 'old man' was with them.

General Wilson's Career.

General Wilson is also a cavalryman. In some respects he is said to have been the greatest cavalry general of the Civil War, Sheridan not excepted. He has commanded larger bodies of troops than Chaffee, and is a most skilful tactician.

Wilson has been Military Commander of the Mantanzas and Santa Clara provinces in Cuba since the Spanish War. He is somewhat acquainted with China, having spent a year there in 1885-1886. He has travelcd six times on horseback from Tien-Tsin to Pekin, twice from Taku to Tien-Tsin, and once clear across the Great Plain, so has a thorough acquaintance with the topography of the country in which the military operations are taking place. His record in the Civil War was an exceptionally brilliant one. He commanded the third division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, under General Sherman, in the Richmond raid, and the fights about Petersburg and the Shenandoah campaign. In October, 1864, he was put in charge of the cavalry corps of the Department of Mississippi. He organized a mounted body of 15,000 men, and in twenty-eight days captured five fortified cities, 228 guns, and over 6000 prisoners, including Jefferson Davis. He has written a book, China and a Glimpse of Japan, which has been translated into the Japanese, and is used as a text-book.

The Power Behind the Peacock Feather.

A PUZZLE to travelers in China is Li Hung Chang's private secretary. A pure Chinaman to all appearances in dress, custom, language, there is yet something peculiar about him that differentiates him from the average Mongolian. It may be a certain subdued vigor of movement, a frankness of glance that suggests a question to the observer. All this is explained, however, on being introduced to the man. His name is William N. Pethick and he speaks English with a New York accent. Li Hung Chang's secretary, his political adviser and confidential man is an American.

He is an American by birth but a Chinaman by adoption. He came to China thirty-five years ago, a mere lad. The mysterious Empire fascinated him, and he resolved to penetrate its mystery, to grasp so far as his Occidental mind would allow the genius of its strange, ancient people. He became a Chinaman. He stripped himself of his Occidentalisms. He wore Chinese clothes, ate Chinese food, lived in Chinese houses, walked and talked with none but Chinese and gradually permeated himself thoroughly with the essence of that ancient civilization.

Li Hung Chang met him and made him his secretary. That was twenty-five years ago. Since that he has been constantly at the side of the Chinese Bismarck, advising him in moments of difficulty, acting as his medium between the East and the West. His grasp of European and American affairs, combined with the ability to take also the Chinese point of view makes him invaluable. He is indeed the power behind the throne, or rather, the power behind the peacock-feather.

I have said that Pethick was a Chinaman by adoption. This may be too strong. He has remained American at heart. When Li Hung Chang went to Canton, Pethick remained in Pekin, where he is now shut in with the rest of the foreigners. His last message to the outer world was an assurance that he would do everything to save Conger and the Americans. People who know him say that if he fails in this effort, he will never live to tell of it, but that among the bodies of the slaughtered Americans will be found that of William N. Pethick, American by birth, Chinaman by adoption, American of heart.

Margaret Anglin

A Photographic Study of the Clever Actress by Arnold Genthe.

A Royal Progress in Corea

By H. E. Bostwick

The Gate of Peace.

View of East Gate.

Lotus Temple in Old Palace Grounds.

PERHAPS the most remarkable and picturesque memory which I carried away from Corea is that of the King's procession to the grave of his ancestors. This is a regular function, observed annually at the palace. The graves are situated in a shrine on the mountain side, and the occasion is marked by the ridiculous mixture of pomp and squalor which characterizes all Corean ceremonies.

On the appointed day I went out early and was invited into the upper rooms of the Bible House, fronting on the square and on the great palace gateway, out of which the royal party were to issue. The infantry lined the roadway and were, for the most part, lying prone on the ground, asleep. They seemed to have as many flags as men, and of every color under the sun. Their muskets, a number of which I examined as they stood piled together, were commonly destitute of hammer, trigger, or plate, and were frequently held together by a coarse string. The bayonets, too, were bent and rusty. The cavalry was still more remarkable. Their uniforms were probably three hundred years old and worn over a heavy, moth-eaten brocade. Enormous jack-boots completed the costume and rendered it difficult for the men to mount their little steeds. Banners of yellow, red and green, with a tuft of pheasant's feathers at the top, were carried in front of the officials, who were with difficulty supported on their ancient two-story saddles. The middle of the roadway was kept clear and was strewn with a ribbon of sand about eighteen inches wide for a pathway. On either side of the street the white-robed crowd pressed against the walls, receiving many a rap from the weapons of the soldiers or the long wooden paddles of the runners.

Way for the King!

At length, after hours of waiting, the great middle door of the palace gate was swung open and there came forth the most motley procession one can imagine. The soldiers snatched up their venerable muskets. The banners, which beggar description, were caught up to give color to the affair. First came a company of men in red mitres, carrying scarlet lacquered chairs; then a similar band in blue. The royal standard, emblazoned with a mighty red dragon on a ground of yellow silk, followed. A sound of drums succeeded and a shout for silence. In the center of a running crowd of bearers was carried an empty sedan chair, decorated in red, the royal color. I was told that this closed chair always preceded the king, empty in order to hoodwink the evil spirits who would be likely to assault it with the idea that they had gotten hold of the Royal Person! Next came a long procession of the King's valets in yellow gauze robes and tiny straw hats with fancy worsted rosettes, perched sideways on their heads. Next, the corps of royal drummers, beating with frantic flourish the royal drums; a medley of cavalry, shambling along without the least attempt at order; a small Gatling

Continued on page 18

Royal Procession Coming Out of Palace Gate.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Good Herr Koch.

AN eye for opportunity is not unprofitable, even to the far withdrawn scientist. Stories afloat in European laboratories anent Koch, the bacteriologist, are offered by way of illustration. Since Patrick Manson was bitten by the mosquito malaria theory, physicians in all parts of the world have been feverishly in search of further information. In German West Africa, where malarias and mosquitos are abundant, many of the army physicians have spent time and toil in the attempt to find the particular mosquito that offers its body as host to the germ of the fever before passing it on to plague the unwitting human. Somewhere in the Hinterland of the West Coast one youngster had toiled for years, and was satisfied that his work had added substantially to the knowledge of the subject. He had always looked on Koch as the master mind of German medicine, and when the news came that the great man was in the colony and would visit all the stations enthusiasm bent him to a fortnight's hard preparation, so all his experiments and results might be in shape for the master to see and understand. Koch came; he saw and smiled. Interest and admiration seemed to overcome. Time after time he went over methods and results with the younger man, and with the assurance that the work he had seen was a magnificent contribution to the science of preventive medicine, he went on his way. The following week the young man's dreams of fame were rudely shattered when a troop of German soldiers seized all his apparatus and records, confiscating them, and placing him under arrest for dishonestly appropriating the work of Herr Professor Koch.

However, Dr. Koch is not always so successful in his predatory adventures. Another tale relates an experience he had after his selection on the Malaria Commission, appointed to study the disease on the Roman Campagna. Malaria is rampant and deadly there and many Italian observers had taken Manson's mosquito theory as the basis of elaborate investigations. One man felt his work to be valuable and in a moment of scientific enthusiasm he, too, explained the minutiæ of his methods to the German. For his experiments he had erected several huts on the Roman marshes in which his apparatus was stored. The day after Koch's visit, on going out into the Campagna to pursue his work, he found that by orders of the German he was forbidden in the vicinity. As one of the government commission the eminent bacteriologist had gendarmes at his command and used them to prevent his rival from continuing his work. The Italian hurried home where, fortunately, his records were. He elaborated them and at once sent copies to all the foremost bacteriological journals in Germany, Italy, France and England. Curiously enough almost simultaneously, Koch published the same discovery,

***

The Art of Inspiring Loathing.

ONE of the bright, shining points about the enterprising modern newspaper is its willingness to pick up any new idea which comes its way. In this respect, the Examiner is in the front rank. The Boxers have a little method of their own for creating prejudice against the Caucasian Christians. They applied it just before the present outbreak. Briefly, it consists in flooding the country with the most extravagant, low and obscene abuse which the authors can conceive and formulate. The object is not so much to have the slanders believed; most of them are too extravagant to be swallowed, even by a Chinaman. It is rather to have the name of a Christian so thoroughly connected with all things vile, low and despisable that an orthodox Celestial cannot hear of them without loathing. It is a rather questionable method, but it works. Hence the Chinese War. The plan became known and disseminated in this country, and now the Examiner, with its customary enterprise, has adopted it. The first fruit thereof is an editorial in the issue of last Tuesday which ranks with the vilest attacks ever made in the politics of any country. It is directed against Theodore Roosevelt, and accuses him of murder on two counts. The first charges him with the slaying of old Martha Place, a low, brutal murderess who was executed, and justly, during his term as governor of New York. The second accuses and convicts him of the killing of an unarmed Spaniard in the San Juan charge. The process of reasoning by which Mr. Roosevelt is held blood-guilty for Martha Place is so false that a child could refute it. The indictment for the Spaniard's death is more subtly done. A sentence from one of Roosevelt's own articles, wherein he states that he shot a Spaniard who opposed him from the trenches, is taken up, and a bald lie is added to the effect that Roosevelt shot his opponent while the latter was unarmed and running away. But the force of this editorial does not lie in the accusations. It lies rather in the picture that is painted of the Republican candidate by its innuendos, its evil suggestions. An uninformed reader would take therefrom a picture of Roosevelt as a cowardly, cruel and villainous monster—an impression which it would be hard to efface. It is false, at the bottom it is trivial, but it sticks in the mind. It is the Boxer method, with American brains behind it.

* * *

Students of American national politics have been saying, in the last decade, that the direct, personal attack on the character of national candidates was a thing of the past. an outworn method laid aside forever along with the election riot and ballot-box stuffing. They had asserted that such campaigns as the one in which the character of Andrew Jackson's wife was made the leading argument, was put behind us; that parties had come to fight on principles, letting private characters alone. Indeed, there seemed to be ground for the belief. When Garfield ran against Hancock in 1880, the personal attack was used rather heavily. Credit Mobilier frauds being matched against army records. In the campaign of 1884, the method was still employed, although more moderately, the morality of Cleveland and Blaine being the point at issue. The next election saw a complete change accomplished; however hot the fight, no newspaper of any standing dealt with anything but issues. So it was in 1896. Bryan was ridiculed for his views on economics and politics, but his personal integrity, morality and virtue were never questioned; Hanna was abused as the agent of the money-power, but he, too, escaped direct personal attack. Now cometh the Examiner, with its progressive Boxer method and takes us back to the good old days of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, too" when every ballot meant a black eye.

***

The "Chronicle" Library and Tom Burns' Keenness.

ONE great factor in the admirable system by which the San Francisco Chronicle is conducted is the efficiency of its library, which is said to be second in the world only to the New York Tribune, the model for institutions of the class. For the benefit of the uninitiated, let me say that a newspaper "library" is not primarily a collection of books, although it includes a section devoted to reference works and Government reports. It is more like a systematized mass of newspaper clippings, drawings, and photographs, having to do with everything which interests newspaper readers. Every day the various articles and news items appearing in the paper are clipped and classified, each under its own proper head. To these are added clippings on matters of current interest from all the other great papers, and photographs and illustrations from a dozen sources. If you, gentle reader, have ever been elected corresponding secretary of your lodge, or done anything else worthy of the distinction of a newspaper paragraph, the item is filed away in the drawers of the Chronicle library. If the item was worthy a picture of yourself, the photograph is there also. Then, should you do anything startling, the sad story of your public and private life is ready to hand. The biography of all local men of importance, and of all public men even down to a first-term Congressman can be written from the material in this library. The city criminal records are so complete that they are frequently used by the police and detective force in preference to their own official records. The use of such a collection may be seen at once. If John Smith dies and a biography is wanted, there is no need to send out reporters to harrow his relations. The material for the article may be found and prepared at once. If Richard Roe commits a murder his criminal record, if he has any, lies ready to hand. If the Maya Indians break out in rebellion, the history of their tribal wrongs may be found without leaving the office.

* * *

This reminds me. Some five years ago Tom Burns, now Notary Burns, was acting as librarian. Not long after he entered upon the duties of his office, he learned that M. H. de Young, who had appointed him, was going to show the workings of the Chronicle to a party of visiting Russian engineers. Burns saw his chance to prove his own efficiency, and went to work at once. He first made his collection on Russian affairs as complete as possible, and then managed, by phenomenal hustling, to locate information about each member of the party, together with their photographs. These he filed away in various remote corners of the library. On the appointed day, the guests were shown in. "I suppose, gentlemen," said Burns, "that you would like to see our information about the Czar?" They saluted at the mention of the Emperor, and were charmed. Burns pulled out a drawer and showed pictures of the Czar from infancy to date, and a mountain of clippings. "Perhaps you would like to see our material on the Siberian exile system?" Another drawer was pulled out, crammed to the top. The Trans-Siberian Railroad, the financial system, the politics of Poland were similarly run over. Then Burns sprung his sensatio He turned to the head of the party, "Pardon me, what is your name?" The Russian gave a name which sounded like two rumbles and a sneeze. Burns thought a moment, ran a sliding ladder to a corner of the shelves, mounted it, and, after a pretended search, produced the photograph of the Russian, and a pretty thorough story of his career. In like manner he brought forth the record of every other man in the party, and they went away declaring the American newspaper to be the greatest institution in the world. De Young lingered behind the rest. "Good boy, Burns," he said, "you're getting along fine. Have a cigar?"

And so long as Tom Burns worked for the paper, his employer never knew but that the performance was impromptu and a proof of the library's completeness.

***

Estimates of C. P. Huntington.

THAT the late C. P. Huntington was the greatest railroad man and one of the most notable men the nation has produced seems to be the verdict of the press. The New York papers devoted several columns each to the narrative of his career and achievements, and all commented appreciatively on his vigor and sagacity of mind. He certainly figured as a very able man among the financiers in the metropolis, and the tributes of his contemporaries are unfailingly appreciative and generous. From the New York Sun I take the following:

Collis P. Huntington was one of the biggest men of his kind that America has produced. Like many other great financiers, he started in his business career without a dollar and without an education; yet by his great intellect and his indomitable energy he pushed his way to the front and became a world-recognized leader in financial and railroad circles. Even Jay Gould, who was notorious for his contempt of his business rivals, had a profound respect for Mr. Huntington.

The Brooklyn Eagle says:

He was the most celebrated railroad maker in the world. He was one of the greatest capitalists of his time. He had extraordinary abilities. He did transcendent work.

In California, with the exception of the Examiner's rancorous screed, which evoked general condemnation, the press has borne most generous testimony to the character of the dead magnate. Mr. Huntington used to say that in spite of the abuse hurled at him in San Francisco he knew he had a great many friends in California. The fact of his death has proved it. From one end of the State to the other the newspapers have paid an ungrudging tribute to his splendid talents, magnificent energy and great attainments. Such enconiums were never evoked by the deaths of his predecessors, and they show the estimation in which Mr. Huntington was really held within the borders of his own territory.

* * *

Many years ago when Mr. Huntington was a hardware merchant in Sacramento an attempt was made to boom the town of Sutterville, and, incidentally, to make it the capital of California. A leading citizen dropped in upon Mr. Huntington and having told him he proposed to buy a lot at Sutterville, asked what he thought of the idea. "Splendid," said Huntington without looking up from his work. Even in those early days his opinion about properties ranked high and the citizen thus fortified decided to lose no time about concluding the deal. As he made his exit a voice called him back. Huntington met him half way up the store. "I've been thinking that matter over," he said. "You'd better buy two lots at Sutterville. You can keep a cow on two lots and that's all Sutterville will ever be fit for."

BOSWELL, JR.

THE LIQUEUR BENEDICTINE.—A religious ceremony, incomprehensible to temperance people, took place recently at Fecamp in Normandy, when the Archbishop of Rouen blessed the new distillery buildings of the monastery where the Benedictine liqueur is made. The cordial had been manufactured for two centuries when the French revolution broke out and the Benedictine monastery was destroyed. The recipe was saved by a family named Le Grand, and restored to the monks in 1863. A bronze statue to the Le Grand who revived the industry was unveiled before the benediction of the buildings.

A BLOOD REGENERATOR.—M. Metschnikoff of the Paris Pasteur Institute has communicated to the Academie de Medecine his discovery of a lymph which regenerates the red globules in the blood of lepers. He thinks that when he has improved his serum he may be able to rejuvenate the organs of the body.

Lord Russell, of Killowen

By Spencer Masters

THE late Lord Russell of Killowen, Lord Chief Justice of England, was really the most distinguished lawyer of his generation. He united charm of oratory with vigor of mind and was as highly esteemed for his knowledge of law and power of logical statement as for his persuasive grace of expression. In the practice of his profession, he was certainly a many-sided man. There were clients who swore by him for his commercial ability; others for his extensive range of common law jurisprudence; others for his all-round forensic ability and subtle grace of manner when it was wanted to convert a judge or convince a jury, but above all for the audacity of the orator, scholar, and jurist who knew his racing calendar by heart, went to Epsom, and dearly loved a rubber at whist.

In the great international cases of the last twenty years, Lord Russell has borne a distinguished part. He was one of counsel for Great Britain before the Behring Sea Commission and one of the arbitrators of the Venezuela case; but his greatest triumph was in the famous Parnell Commission in 1889, when he acted as principal counsel for the Irish members who were defending themselves against the allegations of "The Times." Those who were present when the forger Piggott fell to pieces under Russell's withering examination are not likely to forget the intensely dramatic scene. Nor the superb oratory in which he pleaded the cause of Parnell and his oppressed country. That was really the great speech of the period, surpassing all contemporaneous efforts in clarity of argument, vigor of invective and depth of feeling.

I met Lord Russell—Sir Charles then—at the time of the trial of Parnell before the commission. I saw him probe and probe the wretched forger-witness Piggott with the penetrating scalpel of his cross-examination, bring him on his knees and tear the truth out of his heart. I saw him in his sublime reply to the prosecution, where he reached the apogee of human oratory and moved himself to tears. And when I learned years later that he had left the bar for the bench, I was sorry in spite of the fact that he now held the most honored position in the kingdom. He was undoubtedly a great jurist but as an advocate, he was peerless.

A GREAT LAWYER.

He was then a man in the fifties, with handsome clear-cut features, dark grey eyes that never flinched and a massive, square-cut body. He was carrying on a prodigious amount of work; his lamps burned in his chambers until morning, and his income was said to amount to $150,000 a year. Yet he never showed a trace of overwork; he was always pleasant and affable, never gruff or hurried, found time here and there for a rubber at whist or for a canter in the country—he was a great horseman. His faculty for work was prodigious. I have seen him plead all day and seemingly gain in strength and vigor as evening came. He had a queer snuff-box, an oblong piece of horn which flew open upon pressure at both ends, which he was fond of playing with and tapping upon rhythmically when in thought. He spoke with a strong Irish accent and his native wit made him dangerous. I remember especially one bit of repartee. Sir Charles was speaking and Sir Digby Seymour Q. C., seemingly uninterested, kept up a side flow of small talk.

"I wish you would be quiet, Saymore," said Russell with his Irish accent.

"My name is Seymour, if you please," replied the learned gentleman with mock dignity.

"Then I wish you would see more and say less," was the lightning rejoinder.

AS CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND.

When I saw him again, two years ago, although he had become then the next to the highest judicial dignitary of the crown, he was the same simple, unaffected all-around-good-fellow. Only, he had discarded the snuff-box; which shows that even in the best balanced minds the rise to greatness is apt to cause a neglect of friends. I missed the snuff-box, it had seemed such an integral part of him. I went to see him on the bench. He looked exceedingly well. The pallor of his complexion harmonized with the great wig and his powerful, square-cut figure gained by being draped in the robe. He showed clearly his preference for common sense to antiquated legal precedent. In the Jameson trial, he slashed through the whole fabric of objections to the wording of the indictment by the remark that the precedents on which they were based "dated from the time when it was the habit of the courts to sacrifice justice to the science of artificial statement." Such irreverence toward the authority of ages caused a deep stir. Later when Sir Edward Clarke piled up a fresh mass of verbiage at another point in the road, Lord Russell kicked it vigorously aside with the terse query, "Do you contend then that common sense has nothing to do with this case?"

Strangely enough, the Lord Chief Justice seemed to discourage any tendency to flowery rhetoric from the advocates. A young barrister who was traveling a little far from the pleadings, in a burst of eloquence, was stopped in the midst of a resounding period with the calm question, "And what are your authorities for this statement, sir?" As the statement was something about "the God of Justice who sits on high above earthly prejudice" not permitting something or other which the young barrister did not wish, he found himself very much at a loss for authorities. I thought this hardly just from Lord Russell. With his impassioned eloquence, he suffered much in the same way when a young barrister, often being rudely brought back to the question by unpoetical judges. Perhaps this very fact gave him a malicious pleasure in clipping the wings of the aspiring orator. "Do unto others as you have had it done unto you" is a very human temptation, from which even the Lord Chief Executive of England may not be exempt.

HIS SECRET OF SUCCESS.

I asked Lord Russell once the secret method which enabled him to perform so much with so little apparent effort. He gave me these four rules which, he said, always guided him in preparing his work:

"First, do one thing at a time, whether it is reading a brief or eating oysters, concentrating such faculties as I am endowed withal upon what I am doing at the moment.

"Secondly, when dealing with complicated facts to arrange the narrative of events in the order of date—a simple rule not always acted on, but which enables you to unravel the most complicated story and to see the relation of one set of facts to other facts.

"My third rule is never to trouble about authorities or case law supposed to bear upon a particular question until I have accurately and definitely ascertained the precise facts.

"My fourth rule is to try and apply the judicial faculty to your own case in order to determine what are its strong and weak points, and in order to settle in your own mind what is the real turning point of the case. This method enables you to discard irrelevant topics and to mass your strength on the point on which the case hinged."

Let the young lawyers who read this take it to heart.

I will not promise them, however, that they will become Sir Charles Russels.

A Draught of Clear Water.

TEMPERANCE people are strangers to moderation, noted for their intemperance of their temperance compelling schemes. They have the burning zeal of the inquisitioner. The plans which they put forth to rid the world of the little lurid demon alcohol, are always sweeping, crushing, unquestioning. It is "Close all saloons!" or "Prohibit the manufacture of alcohol! or "Make drinking a crime punishable by law!" Every once in a while, they make a hysterical effort for the establishment of their dogmas and then fall back to their puerile band-of-hope, baby-pledging, blue-ribbon propaganda.

Now, I would suggest a policy on which some of their ardent energy could expend itself with, I think, acceptable results. It is merely this: "Make it possible—possible, that's all, not compulsory, nor morally binding, nor even band-of-hope, desirable, but merely physically possible—to drink water. For it is a fact that here in San Francisco it is impossible, outside of your own home, to drink water. Take a man, in the street, scurrying about on business, in that thirst-fanning wind which sweeps San Francisco, with a tropical sun over head, and a ton of dust in his mouth. He naturally craves for some internal moisture, a good, sparkling, fresh quaff of water. Where can he get it, tell me, O, temperance lecturers! The fountains? He may have to walk twenty-four blocks to reach one; besides, ten to one, it will be surmounted with some hideous piece of statuary that will scare him from the spot. The cup will be gone, or if there, will be covered with a two-inch layer of precious-lip incrustation, or he will find a parched-tongued canine gurggling into it. Then, everybody is looking, and it is not considered select to quaff from the public fount. Where will he drink? The churches are closed; the Y. M. C. A. is far away. Where can he go?

The only place that comes into my mind is in a saloon. Think a while and see if it is not true. The only place in San Francisco where a man can get a drink of water is—in the saloon.

And—it must be said to the credit of that much-maligned person—the saloon-keeper will always give it to you readily. He may ask you slyly if you want a straw to help you drink, or, after you have quaffed, whether you will take a toothpick, but he will give you your drink, and free of charge.

Only—even a temperance lecturer will admit that—man is a weak creature; the flesh is weak. You may enter a saloon with the best intentions in the world and have your courage fail you at the last moment. The play of light on the red and white and green and golden bottles is alluring to an esthetic temperament. A sensitive mind may shrink from the mild straw and tooth-pick joke of the man behind the bar. Man is weak.

Then why not enable a man to get a good honest drink of water, iced, if necessary, pinked with a little claret even (whoa there! I am being carried away a little too far, I am afraid), without having to expose his human weakness to this temptation. There's something for temperance men to do; there's something to which to turn their ardent (I was just on the point of saying spirited) energy. Why not open throughout the city little booths where clear water will be served in rinsed glasses, and free of charge; little moist harbors of refuge for the thirsty man? It would not cost so much; I am sure it would not cost as much as the little, fussy, futile, blue badges of the bands-of-hope. O, Knights and Ladies of the Chivalric Army of Good Templars, why not? Try it, and I promise you that the proceeds of saloon-keepers diminish fifty per cent at least. I speak from experience. Half the men that drink do so, because, on some thirsty day of their youth they looked in vain for the little limpid water that would have assuaged their thirst there and then, and that would there and then have killed their alcoholic craving before birth.

Dr. Roux's Experiment.

Continued from page 4.

when his wife brought him a letter which the postman had just left. He opened it.

"Dear Professor ——,

"I am in Paris with my patient. Pasteur made no difficulty about trying his anti-toxine treatment. My patient, or, rather, Pasteur's, is strong, healthy and gay; I think all danger is passed. Pasteur, of course, is delighted at this confirmation of his theory. There is a man who blesses you every minute of the day for your timely advice. I join in with him.

"Sincerely yours,
"Stratton, M. D."

"Stratton, Stratton," he repeated abstractedly. "Oh, that cursed inability to remember names! Stratton—and his patient—what patient?"

The name might be in the register. He opened it and ran down the entries—"Stratton, dog to perform autopsy—no hydrophobia."

"Well," the professor chuckled to himself, "no wonder his patient is well. Must have made a mistake in writing the report, I suppose."

Suddenly his cheeks paled and his blood froze. His glance had fallen on the following entry, just below the other:

"Dr. Roux—dog for autopsy—unmistakable signs of hydrophobia."

My God! If he had inter-substituted the reports!

He crushed a hat on his head and jumped into a cab. As he ran up the steps of Roux's dispensary, an assistant opened the door.

"Where is the doctor?" he asked, breathlessly.

"The doctor? Why, haven't you heard? The doctor is dead."

"Dead?"

"Yes, dead; shot himself last night; right through the head."

"Shot himself? Dr. Roux? Impossible!"

"Well, he did. They say his mind was unbalanced. Wore himself out trying to save his last patient."

"What patient?"

"Why, the one that died of hydrophobia, of course. Hello, what's the matter? Not going to faint, are you? Better now? Yes, pretty warm. You're not a relative, are you?"

LORD ROBERTS' CHIROGRAPHY.—Lord Roberts never learned the art of dictating his dispatches, and alwas has to write them out with his own hand. His writing is, moreover, so very bad that it can be read only by his aid, to whose lot consequently falls to "translate" the orders into characters more readily decipherable.

L O U I S E

From the French by Guy de Maupassant

BARON DE TREILLES had invited me to open the hunting season with him on his farm in Normandie, and, after a tiresome day's ride in the train, we arrived at the little village of Alvimare. A rustic cart, to which was attached a lanky, awkward, scary colt, was awaiting us. The baron shook hands with the driver, a big, white-haired peasant. "Everything well with you, Lebrument?" he asked.

"Same as ever, m'sieu l' baron; same as ever."

We got into the cart—a sort of hen-coop suspended on two enormous wheels, and the colt, after a few balks and jumps, started off at a gallop, throwing us up and down on the seat like rubber balls. "Easy, Moutard; easy, my boy," drawled the peasant, continuously, in his calm, monotonous voice, but Moutard paid little heed and kept on cavorting like a young goat. In the back of the vehicle our two dogs, erect on their haunches, opened their nostrils to the smell of game that came on the breeze. The baron looked with dreamy eye upon the undulating, melancholy plain.

"I love this country," he murmured, "I have my roots there."

He was a pure Normand, tall and broad, of that race of adventurers that used to found kingdoms on all ocean shores. About fifty years old, he was some ten years younger than the man who was driving. The latter was one of those thin peasants, all skin and bone, who live a hundred years. After two hours' ride through the green, monotonous plain, we entered a yard planted with apple-trees and stopped before an antique, dilapidated building at the door of which stood waiting an old woman-servant and a young lad who took the horse. We went into the kitchen—a high ceilinged, spacious, smoke-blackened room. A fire was blazing in the hearth and the flame glowed in reflection from the copper pans and porcelain dishes hanging to the wall. A cat was sleeping on a chair, a dog beneath the table. A smell of milk, apples, and smoke mingled with that vague, nameless odor of beast and man and by-gone days which is characteristic of these ancient peasant homes, pervaded the place. I went out into the yard. It was planted with old apple-trees, short, stocky, tortuous, covered with apples that were falling on the grass. Here the Normand perfume of apples was as violent as that of the orange blossoms in southern France. Four rows of ash-trees formed the boundary of the yard. In the twilight, these trees seemed to touch the clouds and their tops through which blew the evening breeze rocked to and fro in a continuous, sad song.

I returned to the house. The baron, with his boots to the fire, was listening to the farmer who was telling him the country news—the marriages, the births, the deaths, the fall in grain, the condition of the cattle. La Veularde (a cow bought at Veules) had had a calf in June. The cider, last year, had not been good. The nectarines were becoming rare in the province. Then we dined—a good country dinner, simple and plentiful, slow and tranquil. Throughout the repast, I noticed that peculiar friendship between the baron and the peasant-farmer which had struck me from the first. Outside, the ash-trees wailed in the night wind, and our dogs, locked up in the stable, howled sadly. The fire went out in the hearth. The servant had gone off to bed.

"If you will permit me, m'sieu l'baron," said Lebrument finally, "I'm going to bed. I'm not used to staying up late."

The baron gave him his hand. "Good-night, my friend," he said.

When the man was gone I could not help asking:

"He is very faithful, to you this man, is he not?"

"More than that," answered the baron, "we are bound by a tragedy, a very sad and simple tragedy. I will tell you about it."

* * *

My father was once colonel in the cavalry. This man, Lebrument, was his orderly. When my father retired, he kept Lebrument, who was then forty, as his valet. At that time I was thirty years old, and we lived in our castle of Valrenne.

My mother had a maid named Louise. She was a beautiful girl—a blonde, slight, vivacious, charming—and I would kiss her sometimes as I passed her—nothing more. Well, the ex-trooper, my father's valet, fell in love with this girl, madly, desperately in love. He became absent-minded; he would forget everything about his duties. My father was saying all the time:

"Come, Jean, what's the matter? Are you ill?"

And the man would answer:

"No, m'sieu l'baron, nothing, there's nothing."

He became thin; then he began breaking glasses and dropping plates. We thought he had been taken with some nervous disease and called a physician who declared that there was something the matter with the man's spine. Then as my father was preparing to send him to a hospital, the poor fellow told everything. One morning, as my father was shaving, his valet suddenly said in a timid stammer:

"M'sieu le baron."

"What is it, my boy?" answered my father.

"What I needs, t'aint medicines, it's—— "

"What?"

"It's—it's—marriage!"

My father, stupified, looked at him.

"You say? What is it you need?"

"It's marriage."

"Marriage! You are then in love, you fool?"

"That's it, m'sieu l'baron."

And my father began to laugh so heartily that my mother, who was in the next room, cried:

"What's the matter, Gontran?"

"Come here and I'll tell you," shouted my father.

And as soon as she had come he told her, with tears of mirth in his eyes, that his valet was love-sick.

My mother, instead of laughing, took right away a sympathetic interest in the affair.

"Who is it that you love, Lebrument?" she asked.

"It's Louise, madame."

"Well, we'll try and arrange matters," said my mother.

She called Louise and cross-examined her. Louise answered that she knew of Jean's love, but that she did not want to marry. For the next two months, my father and mother used all efforts to persuade her to accept Jean. She continued obdurate but at the same time denied that she loved anyone else. Finally, one day, I added my voice to the family persuasion and on the next morning, she came to my mother and told her that she would marry. My father bought the couple this farm here and they left us.

Three years later, I heard that Louise had died of consumption, and two more years passed before I saw Jean again. My father and mother had died meanwhile and finally I yielded to Jean's reiterated invitations that I should come to his farm and hunt.

I arrived one rainy night. I was surprised to find the hair of my father's ex-orderly turned completely white although he was only about forty-five years old. We dined here, at this table. Outside the rain was pouring down—pattering against the roof, the walls, the windows and gurgling in a lake into the court. In the stable my dogs howled, as these do tonight. Suddenly, Lebrument, who had been strangely silent till then, murmured:

"M'sieu l'baron."

"What is it, Jean?"

"I have something to tell you."

"Yes? Go on, Jean."

"Well, I don't know just how to tell it."

"Go ahead, I'll understand."

"You remember Louise, my wife."

"Certainly I recall her."

"Well, she told me something to tell you."

"What is it?"

"It's—it's—I don't like to tell you—but I must, I promised. Well, she didn't die of consumption; she died—she died of grief. It was this way.

"As soon as she got here, she began changing and getting thin till, in six months, you wouldn't have known her, no, you wouldn't have known her, m'sieu l'baron. She looked like me before I married, only it was different, all different. I called the doctor. He said lots of things—I couldn't understand—and I bought medicines and medicines and medicines, more than three hundred francs' worth, m'sieu. But she wouldn't take the medicines; she would shake her head and say:

"'No use, my poor Jean, no use. It's nothing, nothing.'

"But I could see that she was badly off, and one day, I found her weeping. I didn't know what to do any more; I'd buy her bonnets and dresses and earrings, but it didn't make any difference. Finally, I saw that she was going to die.

"One evening, in November—it was snowing outside—she asked me go and get the priest. I went. As soon as we came back, she said:

"'Jean, I'm going to make my confession to you. I owe it to you. Listen, Jean, I have always been true to you, always, before and after marriage—m'sieu l'cure, he who knows my soul can tell you so. Well, listen to me, Jean; if I die, it's because—because I couldn't console myself for being away from the chateau, because I—I liked M'sieu l'Baron Rene too well. That's what is killing me. When I could no longer see him, I felt I was going to die. If I had only been able to see him once in a while—just see him, that's all—I should have lived. I want you to tell him that, some day, later, when I am gone. You'll tell him—swear it, swear it, Jean, before m'sieu l'cure. It will console me if I know that he'll know some day when I'm dead. That's all, swear it!'

"I promised, m'sieu l'baron. And I have kept my word."

He stopped, with his eyes looking into mine.

* * *

My God, you have no idea of the emotion that seized me while listening to the sad story from the lips of the poor fellow, for whose wife's death I was really responsible. It was here in this humble kitchen with the rain pattering on the roof. I could only stammer, "Poor Jean! Poor Jean!"

"That's all, m'sieu l'baron," he murmured. "We can't do anything, neither you nor I. It is done."

And I took his hands across the table and began to weep.

"Do you want to see the tomb?" he said at length.

I nodded in the affirmative, for I could not speak, and we went out. It was raining still, and the lantern he carried gave us sudden glimpses of rapid, oblique drops. He opened a gate ahead and I saw some black wooden crosses in the gloom. He stopped before a marble-slab and directed the light of the lantern on the following inscription:

To Louise Hortense Marinet, wife of Jean Francois Lebrument, farmer. She was a faithful spouse—God have her soul!

We were kneeling down in the mud, he and I, with the lantern between us, and I watched the rain strike the white marble, rebound in watery dust, and run off the four sides of the cold, impenetrable stone! And I thought of the dead woman.

* * *

Since then, I come back here every year And—I know not why—a sense of guilt torments me in the presence of that man who seems continually to forgive.

Translated by James Hopper.

IN THE SWIM.

The Newpo t Season.

People at Newport are having a hard time this summer. Every one has quarreled with every one else and the few who want to keep peace find it a very complicated matter to steer away from trouble. Mrs. Ollie Belmont's "latest," in having young Mills arrested for hiding her son, Harold Vanderbilt's "auto," has apparently capped the climax. That Mrs. Mills acted with dignity and proved her good breeding, in this matter, every one will admit. The experts declare the episode will certainly not help Mrs. Ollie in her fight for social supremacy to go to the police courts for revenge against the women who won't receive her. Nor will her constant rows in public with her equally bad-tempered husband (in one of which lately she actually slapped his face), tend to make her a sought-after or desirable guest. This ill-starred union seems on the verge of a split. However happy the twain seemed at first, differences soon began to be developed, and now they hate one another.

Another equally ridiculous row is that between Mrs. Herman Oelrichs and her sister, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. and Mrs. "Stuy" Fish. It seems the latter invited the scions of the Fair family to a dinner to meet Mrs. George Gould. They refused. To all good Californians and Nevadans the episode may seem amusing, but it is seriously considered in Newport. Mrs. Gould has riches, style and comes of an old and thoroughly respectable bourgeois family in Devonshire. It is not supposed the frowns of the Oelrichs will injure her aspirations. She has the cordial support of Mrs. Fish, who is not now speaking to the Fair sisters.

Mrs. Belmont's Position in Society.

It used to be supposed that scandal and divorce meant social death to the victim. Nowadays this is not the case, provided the dramatis personæ are loftily placed, and have staunch friends. It was predicted that the career in society of Mrs. Sloane had been terminated by the allegations on which her husband obtained his decree of divorce. On the contrary, Mrs. Percy Belmont, as she is now, is veritably in the swim, and as popular as ever. Despite the facts proven by Mr. Sloane, her friends allege that she is to be sympathized with rather than condemned; that she was hounded and driven to extremes. Therefore, they came to her rescue. The clique of which she is a member includes women of position so indisputable that their verdict is final. She and her husband seem ideally happy, and her physical charm is rapidly returning under the pleasant influences of her new life.

A Boston Mesalliance.

A Boston millionaire, Francis Skinner by name, of aristocratic connections and high social pretensions, a nephew of no less eminent a personage than Mrs. Jack Gardner, has astonished the Beacon street set by espousing a saleswoman from the cloak house of L. P. Hollander & Co. Mr. Skinner was eligible to marriage with almost any member of the smart set,yet he has had the audacity to pass them over in favor of Miss Sallie Carr, a tailor's daughter. No wonder there is a "to do" about the affair. The dailies have taken it up with avidity, and have gracefully speculated as to whether or not the family will admit Mrs. Skinner into their social precincts. The gossips have already played havoc with her reputation, while certain of the groom's associates have accounted for the situation on the theory that Miss Carr had "bewitched" her husband. The bride is veritably a beauty—blonde and golden haired, the complexion of a lily and a notably graceful and well-modeled figure. She has a dignified manner combined with charm and tact and there is nothing in her style, save its reserve, to suggest that she is not of the cult of Vere de Vere. However, Mr. and Mrs. Skinner, who are yachting together, are quite oblivious of the notoriety they have attained, and Mrs. Jack Gardner declares her nephew's wife is a thoroughly fascinating woman, who could tell half the enameled and padded dames and scraggy damsels in the Back Bay district how to win a husband and how to hold him. She further avers that she doesn't intend to be influenced in her attitude toward young Mrs. Skinner by the malicious prattle of braggart cads, of which the Boston clubs are full, or envious, scandal-mongering old cats, who can't forgive the tailor's daughter her good fortune in wedding a man so far above her in the matter of social place and fortune.

Reign of the Bull Dog.

The dog that is having his day just now is the bull pup. Fashion has crowned him, and the pug, the poodle and all other kinds of dogs that have found favor with femininity in the past have given way to the homely, bat-eared pup with bowed legs and a bad eye. One reason why the bull dog has found favor with women is that his admirable ugliness makes a foil for the prettiness and grace of his mistress. Beauty looks best with the beast in the background, and so well is this fact established that fashionable photographers are kept busy by the girl who wants to be pictured with her dog beside her. Beyond his mere ugliness the bulldog possesses a serious and solid personality. Freshly brushed and washed with a large crisp bow of violet or rose beneath his ear, he looks the expensive luxury he is. Blood shows in every curve of his forelegs.

The English dog has practically displaced the French in the favor of the doggy woman. The fact is that the French pup is by nature just the little, consequential, frivolous and unfaithful creature he looks. He has none of the large instincts of his British relation. His character really calls for the whip, which is so prominent in his owner's outfit during a walk on the avenue. Besides this he is subject to various physical infirmities; a tendency to catch cold and an invalid's querulousness of manner that does not add to his personal attractions.

Owls for Dinner.

The redoubtable Henry Clews, gave a dinner at Saratoga recently which has supplied that lively watering place with a topic. A fanciful personage is Mr. Clews and he objects to the stereotyped in entertainment. Each guest, on the previous day, was asked to name some favorite dish she would like served at this feast. One lady suggested roast partridge. Mr. Clews reminded her that partridges are out of season, and consequently out of the question. Wouldn't she name a substitute? "Yes," said the lady, with a pout, "roast owls." And roast owls it was. When the game course was brought on, in came the waiter bearing a dish in which were grouped a number of small owls, feathers and all, with eyes wide open. "Good heavens! They're alive," the women cried, in chorus. But they weren't; the plumage being lifted, disclosed some nut-brown birds that had a savor much like that of young partridges done to a turn.

A Tailor Critic.

The erudite organ of the English tailoring trade The Tailor and Cutter had a "commissioner" at the Queen's garden party at Buckingham Palace. He descants on the clothes of Her Majesty's guests quite with the air of an art critic at a salon private view. It was a hot day—very hot—127 degrees in the sun, but the prevailing costumes took no account of the weather. The Prince of Wales wore a light cashmere suit and a hat of the Panama-alpine type but the nearest his satellites came to observing the thermometric conditions was in the direction of suits which were mainly in white, buff, or khaki-colored canvas. However, there was one pleasing feature which, he thinks, "in a measure condones the offence of adherence to black or dark grey coats—there was an extraordinary display of ties and scarves. There were a few of the reddest anarchical shade, some partook of the old-fashioned madder colorings, and others a broad red and blue stripe, and yet another,a large design of shepherd's plaid. Other ties worn had broken out into a variety of designs, from spots to zigzags or serpentine curves."

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

AFTER the gala week at Del Monte, my dear Diary, things were so fearfully quiet I just packed up my duds and chattels and started for home. Most of the people are in town now, but have not yet settled down properly. I am looking for a house. Robert thinks it will be necessary for us to remain here until next March. I hate boarding, so will search the town until I find something in the way of a suitable abode.

I should like to find a house as nice as Mrs. L. L. Baker's. It must be so jolly to live in one the architecture of which is impossible to criticise. The Dingees have bought that however, and are remodeling the interior. Jim and Maribel Gwin Follis have taken Mrs. Horts' house on Jackson street near Octavia for the winter. I believe Flora Dean Magee also intends finding one. It is such a nuisance. Robert is unusually difficult to please, he wants one on the sunny side of the street and insists that it be not gaudily furnished. It makes life very tiresome searching, but I suppose one learns a good deal about the sort of people there are in this world by inspecting furnished houses. My idea is to build a stone house. Mama thinks that perfectly ridiculous for a young married woman. I say if a young woman cannot live in a stone house, who can? Relations do interfere so much in the affairs that ought not to concern them.

FORTHCOMING WEDDINGS.

We are to have several interesting weddings soon—Leila's will be a gay affair with private cars and a jolly day at Del Monte. Helen Hopkins and Gus Taylor are to be married in the little church at Menlo Park. They will have a special train from town for their guests and a big reception out of doors at the Hopkins' place. To be married in such a delightful place is infinitely more fun than a city wedding. It is so jolly for the guests. Most people don't think of guests at a wedding, but now that I shall hereafter always figure as one, I think it very necessary that they be considered. Jane Greenwood is also to have an out-of-town wedding. She will marry Dr. Ernest Chipman in Belvedere. A few of her special friends will breakfast with her afterwards at her brother's house. I suggested a reception on a ferry-boat, but she only smiled at me. I do like novelty. Since my marriage I have thought of a hundred interesting ways in which the thing might have been brought off, still my friends will not try even one of them. Just think now of a wedding in Belvedere and afterwards a reception on one of the ferry-boats. One could charter it for the afternoon, and have a capital time. It never has been done in San Francisco. There is so little desire here to be original.

CALIFORNIA GIRLS IN EUROPE.

I received a letter from Grace Spreckels the other day telling me of an evening they spent in Frankfort. The people who gave the entertainment had a very large ball room,in one end of which a stage was erected. The rest of the room was full of little tables whereat the guests sat to watch an exceedingly clever vaudeville entertainment. Waiters went about, and one ordered from cards just as one does at a beer garden. Some of the vaudeville performers had come from London, others from Paris and Berlin. It was a wonderful program, she writes, and one of the most interesting evenings she had spent in Germany. The Spreckels girls had just made up their minds to go to Oberammergau,chaperoned by Frau Rissman, of San Francisco. I always think of mama's visit there. At that time there was only one street, and as the hotel was packed mama secured rooms in a house, the number of which was 54. It was impossible to find any sort of a conveyance at the station, so papa and she walked up to find their residence. They found number 10 standing beside number 26,and everything most confusing. At last,after discovering a German who spoke English, they explained their plight. He took them to their lodgings,telling them on the way that in Oberammergau as a house was built it was numbered, thus it was quite probable that number 1 and number 54 might be side by side. Della Mills, I think, writes the most amusing letter from Europe. Her description of the foreigners at the Paris Exposition are inimitable. Mary Scott writes a fine descriptive letter, but she has so little time, owing to the numerous entertainments given in her honor. I am so glad she will be with us again this winter, for I consider Mary one of our very, very nice girls. An Englishman here in town has missed her exceedingly, and has been a little worried owing to the devotion of a rich and fascinating New Yorker who paid Mary a great deal of attention. She is coming back, however, heart whole, at least so she says. Now-a-days we all deny engagements until we think fit to publicly announce them.

TENNIS AT SAN RAFAEL.

There was a great deal of excitement last week over in San Rafael at the tennis tournament. Robert loves tennis, so he went over there to see the matches. You know he is quite devoted to Alice Hoffman and was sure she would be the victor. She did play a fine game at times too, but Miriam Hall outplayed her. Alice volleys, but Miriam played off the base line just as Marion Jones does. Robert says he thinks Marion Jones would find her match in Miss Hall. There was a terrific amount of enthusiasm and a great deal of fun out of the two days' work. I should have liked to have been there, but I spent Friday and Saturday at San Mateo helping to make the "Mother Goose" benefit for the Armitage Orphanage a success. How these children enjoyed the fun of scampering about over the lawns of Mrs. Easton's place,and watching the little Burlingame youngsters help to make money for them. There were all sorts of things to sell, and most of those who attended were really particularly liberal. I wish I had photographs of some of the children who took part. Tallant Tubbs, a dear little chap, with a very winsome expression, was Little Boy Blue. Austin Tubbs and Elizabeth Woods were Jack and Jill. They took themselves so seriously and really worked hard all the afternoon selling lemonade. They quite looked the parts too. Emily Timlow, a very bright little girl, was the "Old Woman who lived in her shoe" and sold numbers of daintily dressed dolls, presumably her large family. She was quite as interested in her dollies' welfare as though they had been her own children. Mrs. George Pope's baby was Baby Bunting and had she been old enough might have had her head turned by the number of compliments she received. Joe Moody, Mountford Wilson, Robert Coleman and Stanie Poniatowski are really fine boys but George Tubbs won my heart, he is such a thoughtful little chap, and seemed to feel the responsibility of the children in his care when he took them for a drive in his little donkey cart. I think we all had as good a time as the Armitage children. The most pleasing part of it all is that the receipts for the day are quite large.

Continued on page 18.

Chips from the Scientific Workshop

Electricity on the Elevat d Railroads.

In the new electrical equipment of the elevated railway in New York no less than 800 horse-power will be installed on each train, 8 motors of 100 horse-power each being used. These will be mounted under two cars of the six-car train (the front and rear cars) and will be controlled by the motorman from a single controller on the front platform. With this equipment what is technically known as an "acceleration of two miles an hour per second" can be had, which means that, in starting, the speed of the train will increase by two miles an hour every second. At the end of fifteen seconds after power is turned on the speed will be thirty miles an hour, after twenty seconds, forty miles an hour. Without increasing the number of trains in service the capacity of the system will be increased about forty per cent on account of the much higher average speed possible. Most of the time lost on the elevated railway is consumed in stopping and starting. Indeed, the whole course of a local train is a succession of starts and stops, the train no sooner attaining full speed than it has to begin slowing down for the next stop. With the electrical equipment full speed will be much more quickly attained. Of course the "negative acceleration" of stopping must also be accomplished quickly, and to this end the new trains will be equipped with very powerful air brakes of the compressed air type—not vacuum brakes as at present. A moderate pressure of 500 volts will be maintained on the third rail, which is now being put in place.

Hatching Snake Eggs.

The indiscriminating maternal love of the hen is constantly taken advantage of by heartless, scheming man in most scandalous fashion. The climax of human unscrupulousness and chicken simplicity, however, has lately been reached in Atlantic City, where an innocent old speckled mother hen is conscientiously devoting her attention to the hatching out of seven baby boa-constrictors. On the seven flat, long-tough-shelled serpent eggs she sits and clucks night and day in pathetic ignorance of man's deceit. In a few days seven faithfully-sat-upon shells will crack open, and seven little scaly, undulating, constricting things will wriggle out into the world. What will happen then is matter only for conjecture. Will maternal instinct survive the shock and the faithful old hen proceed to head a snaky procession around the yard in search of worms and grain; or will a sudden horror send her flying helter-skelter away from her unexpected brood to meditate in a corner upon the perversity of things? Will she sit after that, or will her maternal love be forever tormented with the venom of suspicion? Who knows? Who can tell what obscure tragedy may thereafter lurk in the gallinaceous bosom?

The villain man who is responsible for the above state of affairs is Frank C. Bostock, the well-known animal trainer, who conducts a zoo in Atlantic City. Young boas have never been born in this country. The heat of the sun, on which the mother boa relies for the hatching of her gracious brood in her native climes, is not sufficient here in the United States for that purpose. In despair at the constant waste of good boa material due to the mildness of our sun—boas, by the way, are worth from a $100 to $500—ingenious Mr. Bostock has decided to try the barnyard method.

I hope it may succeed.

But talk about warming serpents to your bosom!

Cooking by Electricity.

A new method of constructing electric cooking utensils and heaters employs slabs of a mixture of metallic powders and some vitreous insulating substance, such as China clay. These slabs are baked at a high heat, their electrical resistance depending on the relative amount of the metal and the clay used. Such resisting slabs will stand being carried up to a bright red heat, and in certain utensils, such as broilers, this is a great advantage. It is also an additional recommendation for electric stoves for warming rooms, since the red glow of a fire may be accurately reproduced. At a cafe in the Spanish section of the Paris Exposition the kitchen is equipped with electric cooking apparatus made in this way. More than 22,000 persons had dined there up to July 1st.

Marriage of First Cousins.

The latest medical dictum on the subject of the marriage of first cousins is that the connection is good or bad purely according as it tends to intensify a good or bad strain, not of course as the strain shows itself in the individual, but in the family for generations back. In-breeding intensifies hereditary tendencies, and in this way the marriage of first cousins is to be avoided where there is a bad family history. Clearly the marriage of first cousins in such a case is as bad as mating any two ordinary people each of whom has a tendency to the same disease. But what an individual receives by heredity is derived partly from his parents and partly from the far back ancestry of both of them, and thus any peculiarities which may crop up now and again, whether in the direction of genius or disease, are quickly wiped out by the preponderating influence of those untold generations of mediocrity which have preceded them. Thus the race, constantly tending towards the commonplace, rights itself.

A Royal Progress in Corea.

Continued from page 13.

gun dragged along by a detachment of artillery; files of runners dressed in alternate blue and green gauze; a company of flute players blowing a lusty monotone on one shrill note.

Then succeeded a rush of many feet, a shouting of voices, and a phalanx of sturdy bearers clad in red, with double mitres on their heads, pass swiftly, supporting in a canopied chair of state, with red silk screens and many tassels, the uplifted person of the King. As he passed along he looked to the right and left, and the movement of the bearers made him bob up and down in a ludicrous way. Following him came the Crown Prince in a similar palanquin, carried by men in green mitres, followed by a heterogeneous jumble of courtiers, generals, colonels, match-lock men and ancient tottering cavaliers.

I went out again at evening to see the return, they having been offering sacrifices and worship of one sort or another all the afternoon. Everything and everybody had gotten thoroughly mixed up in the narrow streets, all wedged in inextricable confusion. But above the heads of the crowd ever oscillated the scarlet palanquin of the King, lit up with lanterns of blue and crimson silk, tossing at the pike heads of the infantry.

Necromancers and Devil Catchers.

The Crown Prince is an imbecile and his mother, the queen, who was murdered by the Japanese some years since, spent thousands of dollars trying to purchase sense for him from the necromancers. I was told that it is estimated that there are at the present time not less than 3000 jugglers, wizards, etc., in the city of Seoul alone. Then there are "devil jails," "devil trees," and professional "devil catchers," the latter coining plenty of the poor people's money. You will see here and there rags and bits of straw and grass tied on these "devil trees," as offerings; one of the most remarkable things which I saw in Corea was "Feast Day" when thousands of the inhabitants wended their way to the hillsides with trays of cooked food, chiefly rice and fish, to be placed on the graves of their dead.

One evening, when walking out, we were startled by the terrible cries and noises in a row of Corean huts, noises both diabolical and discordant, and when we learned it was for the purpose of frightening away the devils, we did not wonder at their running away if there. The wonder was how any human being could endure to make such a noise. There is always on hand a large assortment of overworked witches, fortune-tellers and astrologers. The Corean cult of ancestor worship is wrought into the Corean soul. The missionaries tell me that. It is the source, even among their most genuine converts, of more scandals, lapses and renunciations than are brought about by all other causes.

The Call Banquet.

A clever little souvenir of the banquet given by John D. Spreckels to the employes of the Call has been gotten up by Louis Levy. It contains portraits of Mr. Spreckels and of Managing Editor Leake together with caricatures of the leading members of the staff who spoke at the entertainment. The occasion was worth commemorating and this pleasant little souvenir does it to perfection. The speeches here detailed tell what a veritable happy family the Call is. The good feeling that evidently pervades every department is seldom found in a newspaper and is testimony to Manager Leake's directive capacity and Mr. Spreckels' virtue as an employer. Indeed, one never hears of any dissatisfaction on the part of a Spreckels subordinate.

Meditations of a Matron.

C otinued from page 17.

PROSPECTIVE ENTERTAINMENTS.

Now that the summer is really over I do hope the final arrangements will be made for having a Monday Night Club. We all want something that will be really worth while. We are just a trifle tired of nothing but dancing classes, for that is virtually what the Fortnightlys and La Jeunesse were last year, though of course we managed to derive a great deal of fun out of them. The Spreckels, I hear, are talkingof opening their house with a big reception, and Mrs. Irwin thinks of doing the same but neither of those mansions will be ready for some time to come. In the meantime, I shall try to find out some more news for you next week.

Engagement of Miss Livingston and Mr. C. J. Welch.

Miss Elizabeth Kilsyth Livingston, who is to marry Charles James Welch, a son of the late Andrew Welch of San Francisco, is said to be a very beautiful woman, whose descent from one of the oldest local families gives her a place in the best New York society.

Miss Livingston is a direct descendant of Robert Livingston, first Lord of the Livingston Manor, and belongs to the family bearing that name whose history is so interwoven with that of the settlement of New York.

Early in 1899 she was admitted into the Roman Catholic faith. Others of her family had joined the same church before.

Miss Livingston will become a bride on or about October 24th in St. Patrick's cathedral. She and her fiance are at present guests of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Van Brugh Livingston in Maine, where they are leading an idyllic life.

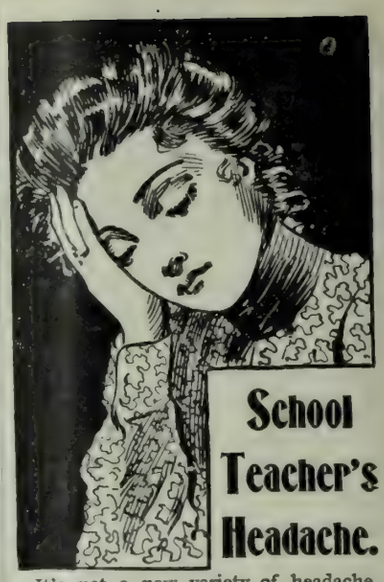
The bride-to-be is a member of the Colonial Dames. She was introduced to society at a ball given by her cousin, Mrs. John Lyon Gardiner, at No. 674 Madison avenue. She is a cousin of Johnston Livingston, of the Countess de Langler-Villars and of J. Montgomery Strong.

Your medicine chest is incomplete if it is not stocked with Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey.

MOORE' POISON OAK REMEDY
Cures Poison Oak and All Skin Diseases
Sold by All Druggists.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.



School Teacher's Headache.

It's not a new variety of headache. It's the old pain consequent on conditions which result from study, confinement, and careless eating. It is only one symptom of a derangement of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures headaches by curing the diseases which cause them.

"I was troubled with very frequent headaches, often accompanied by severe vomiting," writes Miss Mary Belle Summerton, of San Diego, Duval Co., Texas. "Bowels were irregular, and my stomach and liver seemed continually out of order. Often I could eat almost nothing, and sometimes absolutely nothing, for twenty-four hours at a time. I was entirely unfit for work, and my whole system seemed so run-down that I feared a severe sick spell and was very much discouraged. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and did so with such satisfactory results that before finishing the third bottle I felt perfectly able to undertake the duties attending public school life, and contracted to do so. I most heartily advise those suffering with indigestion, and its attendant evils, to give this great medicine a fair trial."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the bowels healthy.

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss
Stereo Binoculars

The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power.

Prices, $47.50 to $80.00
Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.
OPTICIAN.
201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER
KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
—BUY—

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

HALF FARE !!!

TO SAN FRANCISCO AND RETURN

FROM ALL POINTS IN CALIFORNIA, ON THE OCCASION OF THE GRAND SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF CALIFORNIA'S STATEHOOD. TICKETS WILL BE GOOD ON ALL SOUTHERN PACIFIC TRAINS ARRIVING IN SAN FRANCISCO SEPT. 8, 9, 10, 11, AND WILL EXPIRE SEPT. 16.

Inquire of

S. P. CO. AGENT, FOR EXACT PARTICULARS

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADWAY wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Sept. 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, Oct. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. Sept. 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Oct. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. Sept. 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, Oct. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents. 10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel), San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Mariposa for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday September 5, at 8 p. m.

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, September 19, at 2 p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 114 MONTGOMERY ST.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Men and Books

Julian Ralph's Rest.

Julian Ralph has been resting for a month at Lake Como. At least he went there with the determined purpose of resting, something he had never done before, and he thought he would enjoy the experience. In order that there might be no temptation before him to work, he forebore to take with him any of the paraphernalia of the scribe, neither pen nor pencil nor paper was in his grip. Como is a heavenly place, just the one spot on the earth where it would be supposed the tired man could loaf and invite his soul for at least one little month. When Mr. Ralph got there he at once began to rest—hard. Finding no pen and ink and paper in his grip, he went out and bought some. Then he wrote an introductory chapter to a book, "How to Be a Journalist." (Mr. Ralph's intimates will at once accuse him of intent to write a comic story.) Next he wrote four chapters in his new novel, "The Rich Miss Lamont." Not feeling sufficiently rested he set about arranging the material for his next book on his South African experiences.; also wrote an article for a leading American magazine; also described a day with Lord Roberts for a London publisher, knocked off some other trifles, and then feeling sufficiently recuperated returned to London, where he is now improving in health as the result of his month's idleness—and probably taking something to make him sleep o'nights. That is one of the afflictions from which fellows like Ralph suffer—they do feel the need of rest—sometimes.

George Bernard Shaw's Estate.

That is a characteristic interview reported between George Bernard Shaw and a young writer who had called on him at his home in Adelphi Terrace, to question him for the benefit of a London daily. Mr. Shaw said: "These chambers constitute the real centre of my domesticity, because my wife lives here. My official residence, qualifying me as a vestryman, is in Fitzroy square: my mother lives there. I live nowhere. . . . I have no more home instinct than a milk can at a railway station. . . . I cannot begin, like Ruskin, by saying that my father was an entirely honest merchant. I don't know whether he was or not. . . . From my mother I derive, first, my brains and my character, which do her credit; and, second, a landed estate on which her family lived for honored generations by mortgaging. I look for the advent of socialism to take the estate off my hands and relieve me of the duty of paying the interest on the mortgages. Perhaps you would like to accept the estate from me as a token of the pleasure your visit has afforded me? No? Strange how little attraction landed property has for men when it is presented to them in its detestable reality!"

Anthony Hope's New Book.

Anthony Hope has just finished reading the proofs of the new novel Quisante, which is to be published early in September. This novel is mainly concerned with the fortunes of Alexander Quisante, a man of foreign extraction, whose brilliant abilities gain him a prominent position in English political life, and of Lady May Gaston, a girl of high birth, who, against the wishes of all her friends, becomes his wife. There are suggestions of Disraeli about Quisante, though it is not supposed that the novelist meant to present the Premier throughout. It is said of the book that the analysis which is there found of the career of a political adventurer is one of the best things in modern fiction.

"A Master of Craft."

In "A Master of Craft" (F. A. Stokes Publishing Company) are the familiar dramatis personal of W. W. Jacobs' stories—the captain, the mate, two or three young women in love with or being courted by his seafaring males, complications arising from the guib of certain f the captains and the undue insistence of theo ladies. Captain Flower of the Foam is a mariner of much less discretion than energy in the matter of love making. He is engaged in several directions and by reason of the unswerving tenacity of purpose of his fiancees has a fearful time of it. But his amorous adventures are thoroughly diverting and narrated with the fine humor of which this author is master.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Teledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The original Swain's Bakery 213 Sutter St. stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch

There is no family medicine so favorably known as PAIN-KILLER. For sixty years it has been used by Missionaries in all parts of the world, not only to counteract the climatic influences on their families, but for the cure of all diseases of the bowels, and for wounds, burns, bruises, etc. Avoid substitutes, there is but one PAIN-KILLER, Perry Davis'. Price 25 cents and 50 cents.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

THE GREAT FAIR AT Tanforan Park

Sept. 24th to Oct. 6th, 1900

Under Management of the San Francisco and San Mateo Agricultural Association

To the live-stock breeders of California, as well as to the lovers of out-door sports this exhibition is dedicated. The attraction will include: A High-class Open-air Horse Show, Select Herds of Prize Cattle, a complete exhibit of Swine, Sheep, Goats, Poultry and Belgian Hares. Extraordinary show of Dogs. Attractive exhibit of high-class Vehicles and other Industrial Displays from leading manufacturers of the State. The outdoor sports will embrace Polo Games, between players from Southern and Central California for championship; Pony Races; Long Distance Race of 25 miles, by noted riders; change of horses each mile, in full view of grandstand. Grand Athletic Field Day—Club Harness Racing: High-class Trotting and Pacing, in which the great stars of the east and west will meet and make world's records. All in all, the entertainment will be clean, dignified and instructive. Grand Musical Concerts Daily. Excellent railroad facilities by both regular and special trains to Grandstand entrance. Entertainment each day, from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

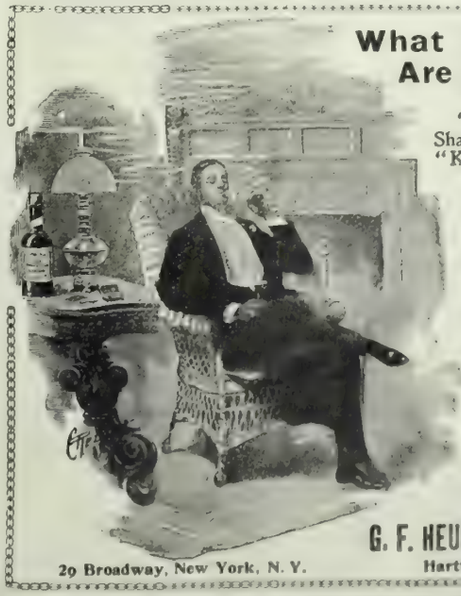
GEORGE ALMER NEWHALL, Secretary. HENRY J. CROCKER, President.
EDWIN F. SMITH, General Manager.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

SOHMER PIANO AGENCY



What Are Club Cocktails?

"A MODERN ECSTASY" is a Shakespearian definition for a "Cocktail." "Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings."

Wherever good livers are found, wherever conviviality exists, even to the most remote corners of the earth, the "CLUB COCKTAIL" reigns supreme as a fashionable drink.

The "CLUB COCKTAILS" never vary; they are always the same. The secret of their perfect blend is that they are kept six months before being drawn off and bottled.

"Cocktails" that are served over the bar do not contain these indispensable qualities.

Seven Varieties: Manhattan, Martini, Vermouth, Holland Gin, York, Tom Gin, Whisky.

For sale by all first class dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., Sole Proprietors.

29 Broadway, New York, N. Y. Hartford, Conn. London.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account, July 1st 1900 $2,453,469.59

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Union National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China-Australia and New Zealand. The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $3,238,372.15
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President B. A. Becker
First Vice-President Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President H. Horstmann
Cashier A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier Wm. Hermann
Secretary George Tourney
Assistant Secretary A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900	$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital	1,000,000
Reserve Fund	218,093
Contingent Fund	439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET

Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. E. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS: James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

1875 CALIFORNIA 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.
General Agents.

Beauty Doctors of Paris

By Etienne Marcel

Paris, August 10th.

I HAVE just made a joyful discovery, one which is not without its pathetic side, too. The Fountain of Youth is in Paris! That there is such a fountain, and that, existing, it had the common sense to situate itself in such a charming place as Paris is the joyful side. The pathos lies in the thought of De Soto marching a dreary life away in the American jungles in search of what he could have found merely by crossing the Pyrenees. Poor De Soto! Poor Spain! Always marching the wrong way!

I have said that the Fountain is in Paris. I should have said that Paris is the Fountain.

For Paris is a huge manufacture of Beauty. Thousands of artists are engaged night and day in molding femininity to their approved standard. To make women beautiful has become an Art, with a capital A, an art as complicated, as subtle, requiring as much genius and labor as the making of beauty in marble or on canvas. In fact, the Parisian woman-beautifiers consider the feminine frame as a mere shapeless block of more or less plastic material, which must be compressed, and expanded, and molded, and colored to an approximation of their Ideal.

THE COIFFEUR.

The most important, perhaps, of these manufacturers of feminine charm are the coiffeurs, the hair dressers. I went into one of the establishments the other day with a young friend of mine, who, through nervous prostration (caused by superhuman efforts to amuse herself) has lost much of her chevelure. After she was seated in a luxurious arm-chair, the Professeur, dressed in an esthetic loose velvet jacket with a Bohemian flowing tie, took off the—what shall I call it?—the outer chevelure and then ran the stiff, grayish mane beneath thoughtfully through his fingers. Then, with the profound gravity of a physician, he began to question his patient minutely as to the history of the case, going back as far as her ancestors to discover hereditary tendencies to baldness or grayness. All the answers he put down carefully in a perfumed little calepin, after which he called in his assistants—internes, they might be called, and these took samples of the hair for microscopical and chemical investigation. He then gravely gave us his conge, promising my friend to let her know in a week what treatment he had decided upon.

We returned at the hour appointed and found that, after close perusal of the history of the case, and a profound study of the reports of his assistants as to the chemical and microscopical examinations of scalp and hair specimens, he had decided upon the electric treatment. We were ushered in what looked like a mediaeval torture chamber. Down from the ceiling, hanging by crossing and recrossing electric wires, queer-shaped, mysterious instruments buzzed and roared and sparked. My friend was led to a deep arm-chair and an elegantly attired young woman began to run her fingers through her hair, carefully unraveling the tangles till her fingers passed from scalp to tip without a hitch. Then one of the whirring instruments was brought against the head and I saw that it was a revolving brush of long soft camel hair. This is what might be called the dry-wash process and is the method for cleaning the scalp, for to the Parisian tonsorial artist, water is an abomination which must never—O never!—be allowed to profane the feminine head. The brush whirled and whirred till every particle of dust had been removed. Then a tinted oil was worked carefully into the pores in fragrant steam. This oil, thus inoculated, is the coloring agent, and by long and patient experiments, the Parisian coiffeurs can give the hair any color within a fraction of a shade. A mild electric current passed through the hair finished the treatment.

I saw my friend a month after her first treatment. I did not know her. An abundant, undulating mass of glossy brown hair had taken the place of the pitiful, grayish, rebellious mane of yore. It was a—resurrection.

GREAT FIGURE RE-MOULDERS.

Hairdressers, however, are only a small division of the great army of beauty manfacturers, and after all, their tours-de-force are nothing compared to those of the corset-makers. These actually remould the human form according to their wishes. Their fancy having evolved a new shape of corset, they forthwith engage in the altering of the feminine form to suit that shape. They are enabled to do this by the complicity of the great dress-makers. The dress and corset maker are brothers-in-art. The first having decided upon the style of dress, the second evolves out of his inner consciousness the form of body that will best set forth the new style, and proceeds to mould the feminine flesh accordingly. The lady who rebels at the corset artists' torturing devices is quickly brought to submission when she finds that her dressmaker will not make her a gown unless she wear the stayman's production. "No corset, no dress" is the ultimatum.

The ideal now in feminine form is the ethereal. Broad, flat shoulders, prominent collar-bones, long, lean arms, the waist of an ant, curveless hips are the right thing. Flesh is the abomination du mauvais gout. This new standard has made necessary another Beauty artist—the flesh-dissolver, or bone-producer, as you wish to call him. The specialist in this line at present is a woman, known as the cold water witch. She melts her victims by thumping them with bags filled with finely shaped ice. A few weeks of this treatment is said to melt the most rebellious flesh and evoke the appearance of the most modest bones. The being thus regenerated is then taken to the corset-maker, where the stays do the rest.

A SPECIALIST IN COMPLEXIONS.

But what good will a form divine and opulent chevelure do one if there is no complexion to match these perfections. Can one procure such a complexion? Nothing easier. Not a clumsy, artificial, rouge-daubed, powder-dusted, eyebrows-penciled attempt at a complexion, but a real, artistic damask-cheek, lily-browed complexion, one that would make the Creator ashamed of his handiwork. Under the auspices of a young woman who sympathized with my literary quest, I was led into a white-and-pink boudoir, where a velvet-voiced woman took her in hand. She was tucked into a silk crepon and lace robe-de-chambre; and set reclining on a sofa. After having closely examined the patient's skin with microscope, the artist washed it with a sponge dried out from hot water. Then she beat a tattoo upon it with two tiny rubber-headed drumsticks. After this a liquid of delicate odor and secret composition was massaged in gently. Then came the "electric air," a warm, soft breeze that seemed to have passed over a bed of violets and carnations - and the first thing I knew my friend slept as peacefully as a child. When she awoke, some ten minutes later, the mysterious woman was throwing all colors of shaded lights upon her face to find out just what tint suited her best. This important question having been decided, powder was blown gently upon the skin by the "electric wind," and then she arose—veritably a new woman, with an exquisite rose-leaf complexion, fresh as nature.

So you see it is not necessary to remain ugly in Paris.

To Cure a Cold in one Day

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

Did you say rye? Then try the Jessee Moore Rye —the finest in the world.

CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.—LOCATION of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 3d day of August, 1900, an assessment, No. 52, of ten cents (10c) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 79, Nevada block, No: 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 27th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco California.

BEST & BELCHER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the third (3d) day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 71) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the seventh (7th) day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on FRIDAY, the twenty-eighth (28th) day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

GOULD & CURRY SILVER MINING COMPANY. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 6th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 91) of fifteen cents (15c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the secretary, at the office of the company, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—SAVAGE MINING Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 101) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 8th day of October, 1900, at the hour of 2 o'clock, p.m., to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and the expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.

Office—Room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. ☞ Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month, Tel. Hyde 2771.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.

Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

Ifred Cane — Luther A. Teague — Frederick Teague
TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE
Dentists
Claus Spreckels Building
Tel. Main 1459 — Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

THEATRICALS.

A Russianized Coon Song.

The Newsky troupe of Russian singers, dancers and acrobats, now performing at the Orpheum, have met the American joke and are going away sadder and wiser. They were hired on trust as a high-class foreign attraction, coming on from London direct. In the British metropolis, they encountered an exiled Yankee who told them that Americans were crazy over rag-time and coon songs—that nothing else would please a San Francisco audience. Further, he gave them copies of a rag-time medley. All the way across the ocean, the Newsky's wrestled with rag-time and coon accent. By the time they reached New York, they had learned the music, and they spent the four days of their land journey in practicing English pronunciation. They reached the city just in time for their first appearance. Manager Morrisey, trusting on their reputation, allowed them to dispense with the customary trial rehearsal. When the curtain went up Sunday afternoon, it showed eight Russians in the barbaric silks, jewels, furs and gold of their national costume. The audience waited for them to begin one of their weird national melodies. This is what they heard:

"All coons luke aleek to me,
A've gote anot'er boo yo see
An' he ees moore to me
T'an yo meester-r neeger efer dar-red to be," etc., etc.

It wasn't even funny. It was just unearthly. The interpreter refused to translate Mr. Morrisey's remarks after the performance, but the Newskys are sticking to their native music and "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean."

Zaza's First Performance.

The inspiration of a moment is often a determining factor in the creation of a new role. A curious story is told by Mrs. Leslie Carter of her first appearance in "Zaza." While preparing for its last rehearsal a gift of flowers came to her—a small bunch of forget-me-nots combined with sprays of lilies of the valley. No card was attached. The bouquet was set on the actress' dressing-table and confronted her as she made her toilet for the performance. As she plunged into the role, she allowed herself to wonder as to the effect produced on her audience. She says:

At that moment, by the merest chance, my eyes were attracted to a face in the front row. It was that of a woman, but the signs of her class were stamped only too clearly in every detail of her appearance. I knew at once that here was a woman of the Zaza type, and yet the rapt attention with which she followed every word, every scene, every change of the story passing before her, told me she understood; and my heart was carried out to her with an impulse of sympathy and pity. It was only a passing glance at first, and did not reveal what struck my attention, like a thunderclap, the very next moment. For, closely fastened to her bodice was a bunch of forget-me-nots, with its cluster of lilies of the valley, and all tied with the same ribbon of scarlet!

That second look gave inspiration for the moment. I resolved to play to that poor creature as one who would know what life must mean to Zaza. From time to time I glanced down to catch the play of emotions as she followed the unfolding of the drama. There was never a break in the absolute sympathy, the greedy understanding with which she absorbed every smallest word.

The fourth act came and was finished. The demonstration at its close was tremendous. The curtain rose, and rose again, and yet again, times almost without number, and each time my eyes sought instinctively for the verdict of the woman with the forget-me-nots and lilies and scarlet ribbon. She sat absolutely motionless, her head bent forward, her face pale and almost frightened, and her fingers tightly pressing her handkerchief. There was not the slightest question that, by one poor heart at least, the human story of Zaza's joys and griefs had been understood.

Rehearsal Time in New York.

More and harder work is being done now actors in New York theatres that are shut th at any time in the open season. Five times as many plays are being performed daily in tha city without audiences as will be given publicly a month hence. Tho labor of the actor is light, under the modern conditions of the stage, except when the piece for which he is engaged is in rehearsal. After it has gone into regular use his service is ordinarily confined to four hours in the evening and as much more on matinee afternoons. But the last half of August is a time of preparation. Every theatrical stage in town is occupied all day long and sometimes at night by the rehearsals of one or more companies. All the available small halls are utilized for the same purpose. In four cases of plays to be sent out simultaneously on three routes, the three casts are assembled at the same hours, and the members not under drill sit to watch and listen while the others are in action. The time and patience of the director are thus economized. The actors range in talent from those of the highest culture to the lowest crudity and the plays from excellent literature to poor buffoonery. Several prizefighters are being trained assiduously to enact pugilistic heroes. Some women of vicious notoriety are being coached as actresses in roles embodying their own personalities and exploits. At the top side of the business many of the dramatic artists are called upon to realize characters already familiar to readers of books, because an unprecedently large number of dramatized novels are to be put on the stage next month. So this is a trying time of study and practice in stageland. But the tasks set are easier now than they used to be. The directors of rehearsals generally know what they want and most of the actors know how to do it.

The Mac rts' Dogs

Mrs. Macart, who assists her husband in training the animal troupe now performing at the Orpheum, says that she does not believe in hydrophobia. She has been bitten over 150 times by dogs and monkeys in the course of several years' experience, and never suffered worse inconvenience than would be caused by an ordinary cut.

Two acts in this performance are decidedly new. One is a boxing-match between two Scotch terriers. Canine boxing-matches have been shown on the stage before, but the others are mainly scrambles, which require a great deal of imagination on the part of the audience. These two, however, stand up, square off, and for three rounds swing at one another realistically, without fouling with teeth or hind legs. The other is a skirt dance, a la Loie Fuller, done by a fox-terrier. Macart jealously guards the secret of his methods in drilling these effects into his pets. "It is like sawing a log with a grindstone" is all that he will say.

Avedano hors de Combat.

Owing to the uncertainties of the climate of San Francisco, Signor Avedano, the leading tenor of the Tivoli Grand Opera Company, was laid out with throat trouble last week and forced to take a complete rest. The management immediately telegraphed to New York for a substitute in the person of Berthald, the greatest Tannhauser in the country. The change lost only one performance of "Tannhauser," that of Tuesday night, when "The Masked Ball," the regular Monday, Wednesday and Friday night bill, was substituted. Avedano will be in condition by next week. His trouble is with his tonsils. which have a tendency toward quinzy. He intends to have them removed after the present season, in order to prevent a recurrence of the complaint.

The Grismer's Californian Home.

Joseph Grismer and his wife, Phœbe Davis, have a summer home near Fresno. It is near the foothills, and is in the centre of a raisin vineyard. The house is in the style of a Swiss chalet, and occupies a commanding site at the end of an avenue of giant eucalyptus trees, whose long branches form an arch of living green over the roadway. The cottage is em-

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law. Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 24, Chronicle Building.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone [illegible]

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured. Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glasgow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist. 806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU. Main office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment.
Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations.
DR. WM. SCHMITT,
502 Taylor St., cor. Geary.
San Francisco.
CONSULTATION FREE.

A TOILET NECESSITY
Wakelee's
Cold Cream of Roses
—MADE WITH—
Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM
A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy-makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

N. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.
A Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials, 155 Geary St., S.F.

Orpheum

Howe, Wall and Walters; Mansfield and Wilbur; Westman and Wren; Frances Kaplar; Lew Hawkins, Herbert Lancaster and Thomson [illegible].

Reserved Seats [illegible] Opera Chairs and Box Seats [illegible]. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY
Matinee Wednesday and Saturday

A Double Star Cast

Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell will inaugurate their joint starring tour on Monday, September 3rd

by presenting—with superb scenic environment—an adaption of Charles Dickens and Wilkie Collins' "No Thoroughfare," entitled

A GREAT OBSTACLE

Prices, $1, 75c, 50c, 35c, and 25c.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, Sept. 3rd
Beginning with Labor Day matinee

Opening of the new stock season, Dorothey Dorr and Howard Hall in an elaborate and costly production of

The Masqueraders

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.
Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

To follow—"The Girl I Left Behind Me."

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Last nights of "The Silver King" Week beginning Monday Sept 3rd. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Monday matinee

Children of the Ghetto

Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and Saturday and Sunday matinees

Trilby

Farewell week of Milton Lackaye.
Next play—"Quo Vadis."

Prices: 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.

Saturday matinee, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents.
Branch Ticket Office, Emporium

★TIVOLI★

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.

Tonight, "Masked Ball."Sunday night, "Tannhauser',

Week of September 3rd

Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights

ERNANI

Russo, Ferrari, Nicolini, Zani and Stewart

Tuesday, Thursday, Sunday nights, Saturday matinee

CARMEN

Graham, Poletini, Lichter, Repetto,Salassa, Schuster Zani and Barron Berthald

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents Telephone Bush 9
Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

Sherman, Clay & Co.'s Hall.

Tuesday Evening, Sept. 4th

Song Recital by

MISS CLARA KALISHER

Contralto

Dr. H. J. Stewart at the Piano

Seats $1.00. On sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s beginning Saturday morning, Sept. 1st, at 9 o'clock.

PAIN'S BATTLE OF SAN JUAN

Pain's $1,000 Fireworks

Opens Saturday September 1st.

Fireworks Changed Nightly.

and for Two weeks Thereafter, excepting Sunday night, September 2nd.

Seats for 10,000.
Box seats $1.00 Grand stand, reserved, 75 cents Seats on sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s. Others 25 and 50 cents. Children, first four nights, 15 and 25.

Harvey vs. Miller in "The Only Way"

By Robert Porter

In "The Only Way" as Sidney Carton, Mr. Henry Miller has given San Francisco the year's theatrical sensation. In the same character, in London last year, Martin Harvey won his spurs and stepped into his present place as the premier actor manager of that new school of acting of which he had been a notable exponent.

Comparisons are ever odious, but inevitably when one sees two men so distinctly divergent as Martin Harvey and Henry Miller in the same role, comparisons will creep in. In the American theater Mr. Miller stands for a good deal. He is conscientious, ambitious and highly trained rather than subtle, but his work is invariably intellectual and the performances given under his direction are always well rendered. Indeed, he alone among American actors occupies a position analogous to that of the English actor-manager. But he represents character and will-power rather than temperament. It would hardly be exaggeration to say that in London, Martin Harvey is the theater-goers' darling. In type the two are poles apart and this divergence must tint and color their renderings of so reckless, dissolute but charming a personality as that of Sydney Carton. Dissimilarities of training are apparent even though the business of the two conceptions is almost identical. Harvey is of a new school of actors that has risen within the last few years, a school that one might call the naturalistic. It is a protest against both the old school of modified Irving mannerisms, and the recent type of work that carried repression to a degree that threatened to smother expression. Forbes Robertson was the original exponent of the revolt. So quietly as hardly to be realized,a dozen or more young men who will make the acting of the next decade have followed in his path. Mrs. Campbell, Miss Davis, Harvey, Holbrook Blinn, Harvey's right hand man, well known in San Francisco; Frank Mills, who began at the Alcazar, Hawtrey, Berte Thomas, the younger Irving and Henry Esmond, are of this new school of which, since Robertson's illness, Harvey has been the chief exponent.

A comparison in detail of the two renderings severs to demonstrate the points of divergence. In the drunken scene of the first act Miller brings the recklessness and degradation of Carton more strongly to mind and, without offense, gets more comedy from the scene with Mr. Styver; perhaps the fact that Styver is better done by Brennan than it was in England helps him score, but in the scene with Darnay with its revelation of love for Lucy and in the scene with Defarge Harvey's preponderance of temperament gave him the power to leave with the audience a clearer, simpler and more dramatic picture of the real battle of Sidney Carton, the man, with Sidney Carton, the brute.

The Harvey temperament and training are better fitted to picture the Carton that is developed under the stress of threatening ill to the woman he loves. In the trial scene it is his temperament that tells.

He is smiling, scornful, reckless, cajoling, masterful by turns. One moment the student of the Latin Quarter, hail-fellow-well-met.with his cronies carousing in Defarge's wine shop, the next the skillful advocate doing special pleading. Here Harvey was Carton; Miller gave a clever picture but it was an evident picture. In realism and effectiveness the Miller mob that made the background for the scene was, perhaps superior, but there was little to choose.

In the latter scenes of the play the advantage, to my mind, was decidedly with the English actor. Miller's affectations of manner and propensity to emphasized action robbed his conception of its higher effectiveness. Among his contemporaries few are without a tendency to overact under the stress of parts that call for deep feeling, and it is, perhaps, Miller's worst characteristic. In the scenes with Lucy, in the reconciliation with Mr. Lorry and at the final scene with Mimi, his forced pose and declamatory speech marred the rendering, Perhaps it is because Mr. Harvey has learned that a true man under the stress of real grief or in the face of death can never be theatric that his work in this part of the play seems superior. Certainly in it there is neither pose nor declamation, but the quiet, convincing acting that ceases to be acting because the identity of the actor has become blended with that of the character he portrays.

Not until one has seen E. J. Morgan as Defarge does one realize how remarkable an actor is Holbrook Blinn. On entirely different lines these two men give powerful original pictures of the avenging Defarge. Blinn's is the picture of a gross man of the people, leading them by virtue of his animal courage and dominant virility. A monomaniac, revenge on the St. Evermonds is the force that urges an otherwise dull brain. Morgan, on the other hand, shows us a man of the people who has risen above his surroundings, clever, cold and cruel, with whom revenge is a point of honor. Brains is the dominant note of his Defarge, brains and cruelty. Watching his playing with enthusiastic admiration I could not help but think how great a Robespierre he would make in the Sardou play.

It is a pity that the guillotine scene is turned into broad farce by the gentleman who plays the exquisite Marquis in the Miller Company It is a part that may be made to stand out cameo-like, and on the delicacy of its handling depends much of the effectiveness of the passing of Carton and Mimi. When all is said, however, there is little room for cavilling at either player's presentation of "The Only Way." Having seen Martin Harvey one gains much in pleasure, in profit and in education at the agreeable task of watching Henry Miller.

HEATRICALS

bowered in a grove of umbrella, pepper, orange, lemon, and Adriatic fig trees, while palms and ferns lend their sinuous graces to the ensemble. Refreshing waters are brought in a long race from the mountains and are spread over the grounds to nourish the luxuriant vegetation and sustain a fine turf, so essential to landscap beauty in the American eye. Mrs. Grismer is a ferrless horsewoman and thinks nothing of a jaunt along through the hills. Her rifle is her companion on these trips, and has more than one notch for big game that she has brought down.

Miss Kalisher's Concert.

In Emma Nevada's recent tour of the States, she had as a member of her concert company Miss Clara Kalisher. They journeyed together as far as Detroit, singing en-route in the large New England cities. At Detroit Miss Kalisher retired. She was a victim of criticism but not in the way that criticism generally affects vocalists. It seems the critics treated her as the star and devoted the larger part of their space to discussing her voice. This was flattering but unfortunate for the subject. However, after the retirement of Miss Kalisher, Miss Nevada had no cause of complaint. She was the only cricket on the hearth. An opportunity is offered to hear the singer next Thursday evening at Sherman & Clay Hall in a long programme which should afford her a good opportunity to evince her ability. It is a chronological programme, commencing with "Vittoria Vittoria" by Carissimi (1604) to the latest expression of the vocal art. Dr. Stewart assists as accompanist.

Theatrical Notes

The long-expected "Battle of San Juan," in conjunction with Pain's magnificent fireworks, will be given at the Sixteenth and Folsom Street Grounds to-night. Five hundred soldiers, Red Cross nurses and other accessories will participate in the production, and in anticipation of great crowds seats for ten thousand spectators have been provided. With the exception of to-morrow night, the spectacle wil be continued for two weeks, with a change of fire works nightly. Monday will be Labor night, Tuesday, "Ladies" night, when portraits of Mrs. Hearst and Mrs. Stanford will be shown; Wednesday, Republican night; Thursday, Olympic Club night; Friday, Children's night and Saturday, Democratic. For the second and last week many novelties are in preparation.

* *

The bill at the Orpheum for next week is entirely new. Howe, Wall and Walters are instrumental comedians. Gertrude Mansfield and Caryl Wilbur appear in a comedy sketch, "A Bird and a Bottle." Westman and Wren present "In Hayin' Time," a rural playlet. Little Frances Kappler is a clever juvenile performer.

* *

At the Grand Opera House next week two of the most successful productions of the company will be revived—"Trilby" and "Children of the Ghetto." These performances close Wilton Lackaye's engagement with the Frawley Company. The following week will be devoted to an elaborate presentation of "Quo Vadis," with Adgie and her lions as a feature.

* *

The California Theatre will be reopened a week from to-night with the Azali Italian Grand Opera Company from Milan, via Jamaica and Centra America. They come with an excellent reputation, and among the forty-five in the company some important vocal discoveries are expected. Their repertoire includes many operas seldom heard.

* *

At the Tivoli next week "Ernani" on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings and "Carmen" on alternate nights. Russo, Ferrari and Effie Stewart have the leading roles in the first, while in "Carmen" Frances Graham and Lia Poletini will alternate in the leading role. Salassa will be the torcador and Barron Berthold will be Don Jose.

* *

At the Alcazar next week the new stock company inaugurates its season in "The Masqueraders." A very good combination has been got together, headed by Dorothy Dorr and Howard Hall, and some interesting performances should be seen.

* *

"A 'Great Obstacle" at the Columbia next week, with Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell in the leading roles.

WHY A RICH YANKEE DID NOT SETTLE IN CALIFORNIA,

120 pages octavo, cloth, illustrated, price $1.50. Sent to any address, postage free, on receipt of price. Inquire at leading Bookstores, or address CUBERY & COMPANY, Publishers, 587 Mission st., S. F. Cal.

CAFE ZINKAND

Go where the crowd goes

Listen to the matchless string band and enjoy the finest wines, beers and supper.

The Cafe Zinkand is society's gathering place after the show is over.

EXCURSION

—TO—Monterey

Pacific Grove
Del Monte

Sunday September 2

Round Trip Tickets $2.

UNDER THE PERSONAL SUPERVISION OF WM. H. MENTON, EXCURSION PASSENGER AGENT SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY.

5 HOURS

AT THIS DELIGHTFUL RENDEZVOUS
BATH HOUSE ON BAY SHORE
SWIMMING IN THE SURF
AMPLE TIME TO TAKE THE CELEBRATED EIGHTEEN-MILE DRIVE

Train leaves San Francisco, Third and Townsend Street Depot, 8 A. M. Returning, leaves Pacific Grove, 4:45 P. M.

Residents of Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley should take the 6 A. M. local for San Francisco.

SPECIAL EXCURSION TICKETS

Will be placed on sale at 613—Market St.—613 (Grand Hotel ticket office), August 29, 30, 31, and September 1, and at Third and Townsend and Valencia Street Depots on morning of the excursion.

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

HAVE YOU A PIANO THAT YOU DO NOT USE?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is Bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers.

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

Nothing more refreshing than "Jackson's NAPA SODA Lemonade"

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.

HIGH GRADE Half-tone & Line

CUTS

Yosemite Engraving Co....
24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco

For Catalogues Books Souvenirs Newspapers Letter-heads Etc.....

DR. CLYDE PAYNE

Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at

135 GEARY ST.

Phone M in 9. Sp ing Val'ey Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office 10 W. King St., HONOLULU, H I

The Sign of the Peacock

229 GEARY ST.

Theatre Suppers

Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast

ORDERS DELIVERED

The Saturday Wave

Is Printed by

THE STANLEY-TAYLOR CO.

424 SANSOME STREET, S. F.

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits $20.00
Pants 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM

THE TAILOR

SAMPLES SENT FREE

1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

New Stories Re-Told.

UNMISTAKABLE HANDWRITING. In a Kansas City Court a deliberate witness named Jones was being pressed by the District Attorney as to the character of the prisoner at the bar, named Smith, both being citizens of Grundy. Jones hedged the questions several times. Finally the District Attorney said: "Now, Mr. Jones, I want you to tell me plainly whether Mr. Smith has the reputation in his neighbourhood of being an honest man." Jones took deliberate aim at a knothole in the floor about ten feet away, struck it with great precision in expectoration, and then slowly answered: "No, sir, he has not. Any man who would look into his face and say that he was an honest man would deny the handwriting of God Almighty Himself."

OGILVIE'S ALARM CLOCK. While stopping in a Denver Hotel, Hon. Lyulph Ogilvie, a cow-puncher of note, asked that he be called at daybreak, it being his habit to rise with the sun. Daybreak is an indefinite term, and several times he had cause to complain of the inattention of the clerk. Next morning, however, the corridors of the hotel resounded with the crowing of a cock. The watchman traced the sound to Ogilvie's door, and entering, saw a huge rooster perched on the rail of the bed. "You see," explained Ogilvie, "you won't attend to my instructions to wake me at dawn, so I have to find means to wake myself. Take him away now, but be sure in future to wake me at daybreak."

KNOWLEDGE AT FIRST HAND.—On one of the British transports going to South Africa was a company of the Duke of Cambridge's Yeomanry—a regiment recruited from among the millionaires of England. These men performed every menial service on board as ordinary soldiers might. In a gale off the Benin coast, one of the officers observed a trooper swabbing the decks, and doing it in good shape. "You seem to have good sea-legs, my man," he remarked in a patronizing way. "I've kept a yacht for the last ten years," was the reply.

WHAT STRUCK HIM MOST. An Irishman who after honorable service in India returned to England and found a place as butler in a country family was telling his experience in a battle—the advance, the gallop, the charge, and how, as one rider fell dead from his saddle, the death-grip of his fingers on his pistol discharged it and killed his own horse. "What struck you most forcibly when all was over and you looked back to it?" asked a friend. "Ah," said the old servant reflectively, "I think, sir, that what struck me most forcible, sir, was the bullets that missed me!"

HAD TO SING BASS.—A Dorset clergyman, returning home late on a cold, wet windy night, found one of his parishioners shivering under a railway bridge. Wondering what the man could be doing standing on a cold, wet night in the most draughty place imaginable, the clergyman asked him what he did there, and the reply was, "Please, sir, I be going to sing bass next Sunday in the anthem, and I be trying to catch a hooze" (wheeze).

HIS FORM OF PUNISHMENT.—The Queen of Italy had taken to wearing glasses when reading, and the King did not like to see them. "Margherita, put down those glasses," he said, but was not obeyed. Then he threatened, "Margherita, if you don't take off those glasses I will sing." And the Queen has had such a dread of his Majesty's false notes that she obeyed at once to save herself from that torment."

LORD ROBERTS REPLIED.—An orderly in South Africa who happened not to know the Commander-in-Chief, for whom he was bearing a dispatch, asked another orderly in a loud voice "Where's Bobs?" In reply the cheery voice of Lord Roberts answered: "Here I am, my lad. What can I do for you?"

Palace Hotel

The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man, will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.

Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management, 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE

White Pass and Yukon Route

Through Freight and Passenger Service to

Dawson, Atlin, White Horse AND OTHER POINTS.

All Rail From Skaguay, Alaska, to White Horse, Y. T.

Beginning August 1, both passenger and freight trains will be operated, Skaguay to White Horse, a distance of 112 miles. At White Horse, the ten fine river steamers of the Canadian Development Company,

Connect directly with the railway train and afford DAILY service to Dawson and all other Yukon River points. Through connections are made at BENNETT and CARIBOU with the

Irving Navigation Company's Lake Steamers

For ATLIN, TAKU, and GOLDEN GATE MINING CAMPS.

This system now affords best of facilities for handling perishable freight.

A SCENIC AND PLEASURE TRIP TO NOME.

FOR RATES AND PARTICULARS APPLY TO

S. M. IRWIN
TRAFFIC MANAGER
Skaguay, Alaska, and Seattle, Wash.

[Phone Main 574]

M. P. BRASCH
COMMERCIAL AGENT
536 Market Street, S. F.

WHEN LEAVING THE CITY PLACE YOUR VALUABLES IN THE

Safe Deposit Vaults

OF THE

First National Bank

N. W Corner Bush and Sansome Sts.

EVERY POSSIBLE SAFEGUARD TO PROPERTY

REASONABLE RATES
PROMPT ATTENTION

Office Hours: 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

From Admiral George Dewey:

Mr. George Mayerle, German Expert Optician, 1071½ Market street, San Francisco—Dear Sir: I am still using with much satisfaction the glasses you sent at Manila; also, the new ones suit my eyes perfectly. Very truly yours,

GEORGE DEWEY

A GRADUATE

George Mayerle

German Expert Optician

Consultation, Examination and advice free.

OPTICIAN HONORED

1071½ Market St.

near Seventh

Telephone Mint 257

German Eye Wate 50 cents.

From General Wm. R. Shafter:

Mr. George Mayerle, San Francisco—Dear Sir: The glasses made by you received yesterday. I have never been better fitted than with this pair.

Very truly yours,

WM. R. SHAFTER,
Major-General, U. S. V

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT

STATE LIBRARY
This Paper not to be taken from the Library

Views in Canton and Shanghai
The Modern Hotel — by Ralph Francis
Uncle Sam's New Battleship
"Who was Brown" — by George Vincent
A Religious Festival in Japan

Paco Cemetery in Manila — Wilford W. Wells
Political Issues Cartooned
Extraordinary Verdicts — by George A. Browne
In the Track of the Trade Wind
A Harvest Festival at Newport — by Robert Johnston

Legation Life in PeKing

THE treaty which closed the French and English war in 1860 first granted to the Powers the right to maintain their embassies in the Chinese capital. In the early days, before the building of the railroad from Tientsin to Pekin, the line of travel was up the river to Tungchow, and thence into the capital through the eastern one of the southern gates of the city. Entering Pekin through this gate, the Forbidden City with its imperial palaces lay to the west, and it was but natural that the first Envoys should turn up the first street leading toward the palaces. It so happened that this street had been for centuries the quarter in which lodged the Envoys from the tribute-paying neighbors of the Chinese Empire, Coreans, Mongols, Tibetans and Indo-Chinese, and the street which is known among the foreigners as Legation street is called by the Chinese the Street of Tributary Nations. The fact that the foreigners established themselves in this quarter has in a large measure influenced the Chinese in their treatment of them, and while a mistake was made in this respect, still the early Ambassadors chose wisely in selecting for their residences the handsomest of the then unoccupied palaces belonging to the Crown.

The English selected a large palace which lay along the west side of a canal that drains the lakes within the Forbidden City and lies just north of Legation street. The quaintness and Oriental magnificence of these ducal palaces have been largely preserved by the legations that have occupied them. The massive entrances stand unchanged; the open pavilions with their lacquered pillars and rich carvings are used as ball rooms. The courts and arbors and walks, with their rookeries and terraces still stand; but the details of the dwelling houses have been changed to suit the requirements of modern comfort, and there is little comparison between the severely simple furnishings of the former Chinese occupants and the luxuriously furnished salons of the modern Ambassadors. Glass windows and tight doors have replaced the old Chinese fretwork and paper windows, while chimneys have been built in every available corner. The winters in Pekin are cold, and where the Chinese find comfort in wearing additional suits of clothes, the white man insists on his fires to keep warm and the many chimneys built in these old palaces have so disturbed the spirits of their former occupants that they have caused more discussion than affairs of State.

Advantage of Thick Walls.

The heavy walls which surround these legations have proved effective means of defence, while the Chinese method of building houses up against one another and their numerous alleys and courts and narrow passages and their many back gates offer facilities for communication that can be found in no other city in the world. The British legation, in which a small band of marines has been able to defy Chinese mobs numbering tens of thousands, is adjoined on both the north and south by the compounds of friendly Chinese. At the northwest corner were the Imperial carriage yards; on the west were still other inclosures of friendly Chinese, while the stable gates at the southwest corner of the legation opened into a large Chinese market. The walls around the legation, almost three feet thick, have been cut through into the compounds of the unfriendly Chinese and through them, and from the Chinese market it was an easy matter to smuggle supplies and provisions, and also to spy on the besieging mobs around them. These legations are, in fact, little cities within themselves. The English legation has on its premises no less than eight or ten different walls and covers an area of about six acres. There are separate establishments for the minister and for the first and second secretaries of legation, extensive quarters and barracks for consular students and military escorts, private stables for the minister and general stables for others of the legation, a doctor's house and a hospital, a parsonage and a chapel, a school and homes for teachers, beside extensive quarters for servants.

The other legations, except the American, are maintained on the same general plan, though none of them on so elaborate a scale as that maintained by the English. The American legation occupies the most humble quarters of any foreign mission. On the south side of Legation street, just beyond the old marble bridge that crosses the canal, it lies in the shadow of the great wall of the Tartar city. The Chinese can not understand and have never ceased to wonder and speculate on how one who lives so simply as the American minister can expect such consideration and respect from the representatives of the other powers who maintain court with oriental splendor in the magnificent old palaces of the Manchu Princes.

Life in Peking.

Some have complained that life in Peking was almost exile. For many years it was comparatively quiet. The Ministers had little to do looking after the interests of their governments and there were few complaints from their citizens engaged in trade throughout the Empire. The delightful summers were spent in the old temples on the famous western hills overlooking the plains surrounding Peking. Excursions and side trips to the great wall, the Ming tombs, the summer palace, the beautiful deer park, or the royal potteries, where the beautiful yellow, green and blue porcelains which adorn the Imperial palaces are made under the direction of a descendant of the original inventor, furnished about all the excitement that was to be found. In the winter time the succession of State dinners and legation balls was varied with ice carnivals held in the skating rinks, which were made by flooding the tennis courts in the legation grounds and housing them over with sheds of bamboo matting.

Ever since the outbreak of the Japanese war the moving armies of Chinese soldiers from provinces where foreigners were unknown began to make it dangerous to wander about the city as the legation people had formerly done. There have been secret treaties, waves of reform and great reactions, riots, beheadings, hurried flights, rumors of uprisings, abdications, the coming and going of legation guards, and now, at last, the deluge.

Standing Room Only on Earth

WHILE man is looking forward apprehensively to the time when his supplies of coal will be exhausted, he appears to give no thought to a much more serious and imminent source of anxiety in the fact that long before our coal deposits are exhausted the world will literally be "full up," and will be no longer able to support new lives.

The first contingency which, to most people, perhaps, seems as remote as the millennium or the Greek Kalends, is really no more distant from us than the days of James I., an interval which three healthy lives would easily bridge, and, beyond that, happily at a distance of a thousand years, looms the day when it will be necessary to affix to the earth the ominous notice, "standing room only."

Crowded Countries.

This is assuming that the population only maintains present rate of growth, an assumption which errs, if at all, on the side of moderation, but before either contingency happens there is ample room for a very large increase in population. It is commonly and wrongly stated that Belgium is the most crowded country in the world. It is true that each square mile of Belgium accommodates an average population of 580, allowing only a little more than one and one-tenth acres to each inhabitant; but on each square mile of England are crowded no fewer than 600 people, so that England will very shortly reach the stage of "one man, one acre."

Italy ranks high among crowded countries, with a population of 281 to each square mile, or, roughly, one to every two and one-quarter acres. Germany has nearly two and three-fifths acres for each inhabitant, and Austria-Hungary an acre less. Spain has only ninety-one of her population for each square mile, and European-Russia fifty one.

Room in Asiatic Russia.

In Asiatic Russia there is ample elbow room, for each inhabitant has a comfortable estate of nearly 180 acres, or, at least, he ought to have if the land were equitably divided. In spite of its "teeming millions" China, on the basis of our own population, has room for at least 600,000,000 more people, for each square mile only has an average population of 200; and India, with 170 to the square mile, is still less crowded.

It is interesting, however, to note that Bombay is the most crowded city in the world, for within its limits no fewer than 700 persons are crowded on each acre.

But there are continents into which almost countless millions can be poured without any danger of overcrowding. The whole continent of Africa has only an average population of 14.5 to each square mile, so that to each African we might add forty-three new inhabitants without reaching a population as dense as our own.

Africa's Vacant Areas.

Cape Colony has a square mile for every 5.8 persons, Natal for 30, the Transvaal for 6.3, and the Orange River Colony has a square mile for every 4.3 inhabitants. Thus, on the basis of an English population, the Transvaal has ample room for 39,000,000 new colonists, and the Orange River Colony can equally find room for nearly 16,000,000. Into South Africa alone could thus be poured a new population at least twice as great as that of the United Kingdom without any in convenient crowding.

In the Dominion of Canada there is four times as much room as in the Transvaal even; for Canada can allot nearly two square miles to every three inhabitants. In Australia, which has a population of 1.5 to every square mile, there is slightly more room than in Canada.

But, unfortunately, there is a limit to the supporting capacity of the earth, and, according to scientists, this limit will be reached when the earth's population is 6,000,000,000, or four times as much as its present estimated number. As the earth doubles her children every 140 years, it is easily to calculate that in 280 years, or in the year 2180, there will positively be no room for more, and unless by that time there are facilities for emigrating to other planets some serious steps will have to be taken to restrict the growth of our numbers.

Just Standing Room.

If by any chance it should be possible to surmount the difficulty of support, and if the population continues to increase at present rates, a more difficult problem still will have to be faced a thousand years or so later, in the year 3160. For by that year—which, happily, none of us may see—the earth's brood will have grown to such proportions that every square yard of solid ground will have its population of three persons, each inhabitant of the earth being thus strictly limited to three square feet of land for all purposes of support and domicile. And here we may leave the problem, confessing our impotence to cope with it and selfishly congratulating ourselves that for our time at least the earth will furnish ample elbow room.

The Battleship "Alabama"

THE successful trial trip of the battleship Alabama has drawn the attention of the world to this remarkable fighting machine which differs in style from her predecessors, the Kearsage and Kentucky, and more particularly from the Oregon and Iowa types. The Alabama is the first of a type which seems likely to become permanent. This type has been reached by a process of selection and embodies the experience of our own and other warship builders the world over. The later ships of the Maine and New Jersey classes are simply improved Alabamas, incorporating as they do the later ideas as to speed, armor, and batteries, with such increase in displacement as is rendered necessary.

The Alabama was launched in 1898 and is of the same displacement, coal capacity and contract speed as the Kearsage, but there the likeness ceases. In the first place a lofty spar deck with a freeboard of about 20 feet as in the Iowa extends from the bow for two-thirds of the length, and above this is carried the forward pair of 13-inch guns at an elevation of about 24 feet above the water. This deck not only improves the sea-going qualities, but it also affords splendid berthing accommodations for the crew. The 8-inch gun has disappeared altogether and the intermediate battery is made up of fourteen 6-inch rapid-fire guns, with the result that the total energy of gun-fire per minute is greatly increased though the destructiveness of the 6-inch shell is far less than that of the 8-inch. The 6-inch rapid-fire battery is distributed on two decks. Eight of these guns are carried on the main deck within a central citadel protected with 6 inches of steel, two are mounted forward in 6-inch casemates, one on each bow, and two amidships in casemates on each beam on the spar deck. The after pair of 13-inch guns is carried on the main deck. The armor is 16½ inches on the belt, 5½ or 6 inches on the sides above the belt, 14 inches on the turrets and 15 inches on the barbettes. The contract speed is 16 knots and reached 17 knots on the official trial.

Following the Alabama is the Maine type. The original plans called for a 16-knot ship, but were changed to admit of her making the more modern speed of 18 knots. Twenty feet were added to the length, and 1,000 tons to the displacement. This enlargement, together with the reduction in thickness of the armor, due to its higher resisting qualities, and the saving in weight due to the substitution of the 12-inch for the 13-inch gun, enabled the coal capacity to be increased and a more liberal amount of stores to be carried. The bunker capacity is 2,000 tons, and two additional 6-inch guns appear in the intermediate battery, making 16 of this type in all.

On her trial trip the Alabama made a speed of 17 knots over the official course of 33 nautical miles. Her sister battleships, the Texas, Massachusetts, Indiana, Kentucky and Kearsage were used as stake-boats. She developed 11,500 horse-power and the maximum revolutions of her engines was 118. Though she is called the "Queen of the American Navy" by her builders, it must be admitted she has hardly equaled the Iowa's speed, 17.04 knots over the same distance.

The facts as to the Alabama are as follows: Displacement, 11,521 tons; speed, 17 knots; maximum coal supply, 1,600 tons; armor: belt, 9½ to 16½ inches; deck, 2¾ inches; barbettes, 15 inches; turrets, 14 inches; torpedo tubes, 4. Complement 489.

In the Foreign Settlement, Shanghai.
Pagoda Tower at Canton.

House Boats on Pearl River.

The Foreign Legations at Canton.
Street Scene in Canton.

DISTURBED CHINA.

Who Was Brown

By George Vincent

IT was a number of years ago when we, as newspaper people became acquainted with Brown. His nationality was a mystery to us. He might have been Polish, Hungarian, anything. It was only his pronunciation of the letter "w" which gave him away, for you never could "catch on" as to whether he called himself "Brown," "Bown," or "Boun." His English was fluent, that is, conversationally, but faulty, or meagre when he tried to write it. He was attached to a paper in good repute, and did the police business; that is to say, gleaned the facts and somebody else worked them up into correct English for him. He really showed much ability in discovering things. Nobody was especially fond of Brown, though when he had money he was lavish with it. As a story teller he showed considerable talent, but his tongue was only loosed when he had taken a drop too much. Then certain sinister traits were effaced and he was pleasant enough.

That Brown had traveled a great deal was certain, for we would come to him for the name of a street or a locality, if it were wanted in any European city, and he would give it correctly. He spoke many languages, though wanting in general education. He made it a point to tell us that he had been once attached to a great London journal, which we may call The Thumper—for so he designated it. We all tried to size Brown, and were unsuccessful. There was little Jo Pettit, a plucky chap, who was one of the early comers from Chicago, who wanted to make his mark in New York journalism, and Pettit, who did not like Brown, swore he was a Russian spy—and offered to prove it. Pettit did not belong to our particular set, and so we did not know what was the exact sequel, only this, that Pettit went back to Chicago with several of his front teeth knocked out, and Brown wore a black eye for some time. Supposably the two had had a row, and Pettit, who was undersized, got rather the worst of it.

The way Brown was induced to tell the following story was because there had been a murder, and the clue to it hung on the discovery of who it was who had driven a fish peddler's truck in an out-of-the-way part of New York, and Brown's assignment, so it seemed, had been to work up the case. Brown had found out nothing at all, and was not in a good temper. The night was a severe one, in mid-Winter, snowing hard, and Brown had come into our little clubroom (back of an eating house) covered with sleet. We proffered him several glasses of hot Scotch, and Brown soon "thawed out."

We referred incidentally to the case of the fish peddler's wagon, and the possibility of finding it.

"You never will find it," said Brown. "You Americans are stuck up with your detective ideas worse than the English, and Vinegar Yard can give you points. By this time that peddler's cart has vanished off the face of the earth. An incriminating letter or a suspected cart can both be burnt, and in the latter case, the horse walks off or is spirited away. Now, let me tell you a little experience of mine.

"When I was attached to The Thumper I was on duty at Munich. Our people had a swell representative chap there, who had to follow up the pranks of that lunatic, King Ludwig. Years before I had insisted that the King was mad enough to be locked up. I was sent to Munich to help out our man, who was an idiot, and an idiot who put on airs.

"Munich is a dull hole, and though I could drink beer with any Bavarian, I soon tired of it. Then I was not accustomed to be ordered about by such an ass as was the Thumper's man. One day, when I brought him some important information about the King, he was inclined to doubt the truth of my story, so I turned on him quickly, told him he was a dunce, in as many languages as I could conveniently command, and I sent in my resignation to the Thumper.

"It was a foolish thing, perhaps, for me to have done, for in my pocket I had not more than a dollar and a half, or its equivalent in American money. There was no more money coming to me, for I had been paid in advance. I might have asked the Thumper man for money enough to get me back to London, but I was above that kind of thing.

"You can live cheaply enough on bread and beer in Munich, and I was not fastidious as to my lodgings. Ten cents a day would carry me on for two weeks, and on that I had to exist. My clothes, however, were getting shabby, and my shoes were broken. Pretty soon I felt the last few coppers in my breeches' pocket. There were exactly five of them. But as you say here, 'I had been there before,' so I was not afraid. I was only terribly eager, wan-eyed, and hungry, and let me tell you that there is nothing like a hungry hound to catch a hare.

"You don't know where the Englisher Garten is in Munich? It's only English by name. It lies near the river. It used to be a fairish kind of a park. Now, not far from the park, on one of the cross streets, I had found a baker who sold stale bread cheap, and I could get more bread for a penny there than elsewhere. With my five cents I had to diminish my rations; there could be no more beer, but water. I might get along for two days more, but after that—what?

"It was about dusk. I was skirting the park, when I saw a hack coming slowly toward me. You know that in our special business you must take in everything at a glance. The hack was a shabby one, with only one lamp flickering, and the other out. It was too dark, or the evening too thick, for me to make out a number. It was a dilapidated vehicle. What struck me with surprise were the horses. They were little, active Polish horses, and showed sleek sides and grooming, though the harness was patched up, good for nothing, and did not fit the team. Just as sure as could be, the man who held the reins knew nothing at all about driving. He had, too, a scared look. He wore a stiff coachman's hat, which was a size too small for him, so that he kept mashing his hat down over his forehead.

"All that might have passed before my eyes without making much of an impression on me. The curtains were down on the side and front of the hack, when I noticed a hand come out from the front, nudge the driver in the back, and a voice cried out in good—well, no matter what was the language—the voice said: 'You fool! Hurry up, or we can't manage it. Whip up your horses.' Then the driver clutched at his whip, and took it with his left hand. Fancy, with his left hand! Then I was positive that the coachman was in a business quite foreign to him. Naturally, with his left hand he could not give the horses any kind of a blow, and more than that, the lash of his whip got tangled in the traces of the off horse.

"'Ah,' said I, 'this is indeed a funny business. Let us see what will follow.' Then the driver screamed at his horses, and one of them, becoming restive at what was probably a strange voice, wanted to bolt, while the other would not budge. If not for that, the hack would have passed me in an instant.

"I have quick ears, and I caught what sounded like a scuffle in the vehicle. Then the driver, by dint of tugging, unloosed his whip and plied the horses with the lash, and an arm—a man's arm—was thrust out of the window nearest to me, and something was dropped. Then the horses with a dash sprang along with full speed, ventre a terre, and in another second the whole concern had whirled out of sight.

I Opened the Wallet.

"I saw either a policeman or one of the custodians of the park, coming leisurely along, but he was so far away that he could never have noticed anything. Presently he took the other side of the walk and disappeared. What had been dropped out of the hack? I had no difficulty in finding it. It was a pocketbook—what you would call a wallet—lying in the mud of the roadbed. I used no precautions in picking it up, for I was positive that no one had taken in the incident. I slipped the muddy wallet in my pocket. Whatever it might contain I would find out later.

"You understand the nature of my finances. I was hungry but I did not hunt up the baker. I made up my mind that I would extend my walk indefinitely for all that night. I wandered up and down Munich, and a sorry time I had of it, for it rained hard, and kept raining until sunrise. In the early dawn I was in one of the suburbs of Munich, towards Marsfield. I had fingered the wallet from the outside, and I felt something outside of it which I took to be of metal. I pondered over the reason for the struggle in the hack, and for the wallet's having been thrown out of the window. Had murder been committed, somebody assassinated for money? Was it an attempted abduction, the end being robbery? Then the victim had thwarted the thieves, for they had not secured his money. It could not have been a woman, or she would have squealed—women always squeal under such circumstances—and it was a man who had dropped the wallet.

"I reached a little clump of woods just about dawn, and nobody being in sight, I opened the wallet. It was a fairly new wallet of black morocco, and had outside a gilt Count's coronet. The coronet had some of its gold rubbed off, as if the wallet had been in use for a certain time. As to the contents, I knew there must be money there. I was not in the least startled when I pulled out a sheaf of French banknotes. Here were twenty-seven notes of 500f. each, with six one-hundred franc ones. There were other notes, Bavarian, Prussian, wnd a wad of Russian ones. The clue to the owner, save an ordinary Count's coronet, was entirely wanting. There was no shred or loose paper, memoranda, letters, or visiting cards in the wallet. All that I could find out was this: The French notes were secured by a slip of ordinary tissue paper, such as bankers use when they make a bundle of notes, and on that slip was written in lead pencil in a foreign language what I am certain were what you call in English I O U's, as, for instance, 'Count X owes me 7,800f.' There was no date. There were several of there scribblings, with amounts indicated.

"I made up my mind that these were gambling accounts. I summed up about what was the total amount in the wallet. It figured up in all what would be about $7,000 in American money.

"Now, what was I to do? Wait for what was to turn up? There would be a mysterious disappearance, but as the whole business had just happened there could be nothing about it in the Munich papers on that day. Seven thousand dollars! That was a fair amount of money for a man with five cents. It seemed ludicrous with these thousands within my grasp that I had not money enough to buy a newspaper.

"I made up my mind at once that it would be risky for me to keep the wallet and its entire contents. I took out four bills of 100f. each, put them in my shoe, and buried the wallet with the rest of the bills, having wrapped it all up in my handkerchief, which handkerchief had nothing on it in the way of an initial letter. As the ground was damp, where the exact place was soon became undiscoverable. I raked old leaves over the spot, and then sat down on the place.

"I went back to Munich determined to see what would turn up. If there was a mystery, I had the key of the situation. I was afraid, however, to change my hundred-franc bills, at least in Munich. Two days passed and there was nothing in the papers. Then I was nearly starving. By great luck I met an Englishman, who was an artist, and I borrowed from him a small sum, about sufficient to keep me for a week, say $2. I bought at once a sheet of paper, envelope, and a stamp, and inclosed the four hundred-franc notes to a trusted friend, who was in London on The Thumper. I begged him to get me letters of credit, one for 200f. on Munich and one for 200f. on Paris, and to reply by the return mail. It would probably take a week before I could get an answer.

"I spent every morning in one of those reading-rooms in Munich where you can find the papers. There never was a syllable about the occurrence. On the sixth day, when I had but a few pennies left, came the much desired letter, addressed "poste restante." If the police were working quietly on the case and watching the post office, at least they Continuea on Page 15.

In the Track of the Trade Wind.

The Russian Tea Trade.

NEXT to the English, the Russians are the greatest tea drinkers in the world. English tea now comes chiefly from Ceylon and India, while the samovars of Russia are filled exclusively with Chinese leaves. This, with the exception of a small amount from Fu Chow, comes entirely from Hankow, a treaty port 600 miles up the Yang-tse-Kiang. The Russian tea industry there is in the hands of four leading firms, three of which make brick tea, and another smaller concern, whose efforts are spent in the leaf tea industry exclusively. The best tea that reaches Hankow is bought by the Russians at any price. During the season large crowds of farmers and laborers crowd into Hankow, and the city presents a lively scene, while the leaves are packed or pressed into bricks and transferred to the large ocean steamships, which have come up the river expressly to carry their savory cargo back to Russia. The brick tea and the choice grades of leaves are shipped either by boat or land to Tien-tsin and Tung Chow, there to be loaded on camels for their overland journey to Mongolia, Siberia and Russia. Some is also shipped directly north through Shansi to Kiakhta, since the finest tea is said to lose flavor during an ocean voyage.

The camel caravans which transport the tea overland form a weird sight to a stranger. During the summer, owing to the excessive heat, they travel by night and rest during the day. Caravans of a thousand people and camels are no unusual sight. They travel in sets of four camels to a set, with a driver for each of these. The last camel has a bell attached to him, and this enables the next set following to keep in line.

The tea is rolled and dried where it is grown, but most of that shipped to Russia is in the form of bricks, which require heavy and expensive machinery for their manufacture. The largest brick tea factory in the world is located at Hankow. Its owners live in Warsaw, and are fabulously wealthy. They manufacture only when orders are on hand, but nevertheless they are kept running nearly all the year around.

Brick tea is made in two forms. The finer quality is pressed into small flat cakes with ridges for breaking, and is of about the same shape as our cakes of chocolate. This is neatly wrapped in tin foil and sold in Russia and to a small extent in Germany. The cheaper bricks of tea are made into bricks weighing from one to one and one-fourth pinculs (133-166 pounds). These usually consist of three layers with the poorest quality in the center. One cake is the average load for a man and two for a camel. These large bricks are sold exclusively in Mongolia and Russian Turkestan, where they pass as a sort of currency and form a staple article of food when mixed with other ingredients into a thick soup.

Development of the Oriental Trade.

THE trade of the United States across the Pacific is growing at a wonderful rate and holds out most flattering prospects for the future. The sugar producers of the Hawaiian Islands look to us to-day for all they consume, except sugar. They even buy their vegetables on the Pacific coast. A large part of the cotton produced in the Southern states finds a market around the Gulf of Pechili and in other parts of China. Lately we have been furnishing ties for the railroads of Asia. Canned goods from our packing-houses are going to China and Japan in large quantities, and the wheat growers of the Middle West will soon have a market in the Orient.

At present we sell twice as much to Hong Kong as we did ten years ago. Our total exports to China, apart from Hong Kong, have risen from $2,791,128 in 1889 to $14,493,440 in 1899. Seventy-five per cent of our exports to Hong Kong are farm products. Last year we shipped to that port over $4,000,000 worth of wheat flour, $46,830 worth of canned fruit, $20,841 worth of beans and peas, $9,026 worth of green or ripe apples, $8,464 worth of canned vegetables, $3,398 worth of potatoes and $6,503 worth of butter.

Our most important article of export to the Orient is raw cotton. Most of it goes to Japan where it is converted into cotton cloth, but in China we are competing with Japan in the sale of manufactured cotton goods of which we sold ten millions of dollars worth last year. We sent about 1,200,000 barrels of wheat flour to China, Hong Kong and Japan in 1899. The bulk of it went to Hong Kong—a great entrepot through which American goods of various kinds are distributed over a large part of China and the archipelagoes of the Southern Pacific. Next after raw cotton, our most important export to the Orient is kerosene oil, of which we shipped to that part of the world last year about 74,000,000 gallons. Now the Chinese have begun to take to American condensed milk of which $50,000 worth was shipped in 1899. The Chinese have taken to it with avidity, eating it as a sweetmeat, and regarding it as a great delicacy. For our eggs and butter, too, a market is springing up in those parts, and it seems to offer attractive possibilities. Next in line is butter with which experiments are now being made. Eggs are also in line and it is not impossible that in the future when refrigerating steamers ply between Pacific and Oriental ports that we may be supplying the foreign residents of China and Japan with their meats and vegetables as well as butter and eggs.

Growth of the Flower Trade.

THE growth of the flower trade in the United States during the last decade has been enormous. There are now 9,000 commercial florists' establishments in the country. These florists use 22,500,000 square feet of glass. New York State alone has 1,200 florists' establishments, which use 4,500,000 square feet of glass. Illinois has 800 establishments, with 4,250,000 square feet of glass. The estimated value of all the establishments in the United States is $11,250,000, and of their total annual output, $27,500,000. The greatest enemy of the Eastern florist is the hailstone. There is now a Florists' Hail Association, which has insurance on over thirteen million feet of glass, and it had to pay last year losses on 70,000 feet destroyed by tempestuous weather. An estimate of the value of cut flowers disposed of gives the following figures: Roses, $9,000,000; carnations, $4,000,000; violets, $750,000; chrysanthemums, $500,000; and miscellaneous, $1,250,000. The estimated number of roses annually sold is 100,000,000; carnations, 100,000,000; violets, 75,000,000; total, 275,000,000. The capital invested in carnations alone at the present day is $2,000,000. The total annual sales of cut flowers in New York City is $3,000,000, and of plants, $1,500,000.

Apropos of the plaint of the public that exorbitant prices are exacted for flowers in the holiday season, it is pointed out that the effort to produce roses and carnations in quantity for the holiday season is costly. Often a whole crop is sacrificed in order that the trees and shrubs may bear in quantity for Christmas week. If it were not for this, but half the quantity would be available. The fact is, however, that the exorbitant prices are only obtained for the few flowers which are called exhibition flowers. If the grower depended for his income upon this class of his product, there would not be a commercial foot of glass in existence for the growth of cut flowers. It is to the vast volume of second, third and fourth class flowers, and that demand which comes from the middle as well as the poorer class of people, who never pay high prices for them, that the grower, and in large measure the florist, depends for his success.

A Mercantile Invasion of England.

THE mercantile invasion of England by Americans keeps on at a great pace. Our type of electric traction is being introduced to the British. Mr. Cooper, of Seigel-Cooper & Co., has gone to London to start a big department store on the American principle. He declares the English, called by Napoleon a nation of shop keepers, are not up to date. Now, it has transpired that we supplied shirt waists to H. B. M's. subjects this season to the extent of many hundreds of thousands of dollars. The season, which was unprecedentedly hot, created a demand for cool garments, and the demand exceeded the supply. Indeed, the shirt waist absolutely dominated the market to a degree unprecedented in history. It seems, too, that the American suspender has invaded the homes of England. A certain American manufacturer, finding several years ago he could no longer compete in common cottons at his New England mill with the cheap labor of North Carolina, sold his old machinery to a company then building a Southern mill and studied the process of suspender manufacture in England and on the Continent. Now he boasts that while the British manufacturer has only about eighteen styles, he manufactured about one hundred and fifty-eight styles his first season, and claims his suspenders were better and cheaper, for he had adopted all the good processes, rejecting those he thought merely traditional, and had put in labor-saving machinery.

Monopolies in Panama.

THE government of Panama derives the greater part of its revenues from the sale to private parties of exclusive rights to carry on certain kinds of business. The particular articles which are thus monopolized are necessaries for which there is a large demand. The most desirable commodities and privileges thus leased out are tobacco, cigarettes, salt, matches, ice, opium, beef and gambling.

The concessions for articles of a decided mercantile value cover the right of importing, buying in the department, and selling the article, to the exclusion of all competitors. These concessions are placed for sale every year by the government and go to the highest bidder, generally for a period of one year. For 1900, the tobacco concession sold for $55,000 (about $26,400 gold) and was divided into two divisions. The concession for cigarettes was sold for $30,000 ($13,200 gold) to one party and the concession for tobacco, cigars, etc., was sold for $25,000 ($11,000 gold). The gambling concession was also divided into two parts. The lottery, which consists of prizes and drawings for which tickets are sold, brings the government something like $42,000 ($18,500 gold) per annum; while the right to carry on gambling games, consisting of roulette tables, dice tables, slot machines, wheels of fortune, and other devices of this character, was bought for $69,000 ($30,400 gold). Thus, the gambling right alone for the department brings the government annually over $100,000 ($44,000 gold). It can readily be seen how desirable these monopolies are, if they can be secured for anything like a reasonable price.

The Chicago Strike Dying Out.

IN Chicago the strike in the building trades is dying out. The men, weary and destitute from six long months of idleness, are deserting their unions and going back to work as individuals under the contractors' rules. Building operations are being resumed in every part of the windy city. Workmen in most of the trades seem to be plentiful, and there is no delay in work or haggling over trifling points. So long as the men are granted the wages and hours which were in force before the trouble started, and concerning which there has never at any time been any question, they seem satisfied. They work with a will, and do not appear to be troubled as to the amount of labor they shall do in a day, or the other points which have stood in the way of a formal settlement.

The contractors are as determined as the labor leaders not to settle except on the terms outlined by themselves, and will not employ a workman who is a member of a union affiliated with the Building Trades Council. They insist that the man shall sign his resignation to his union in duplicate before he is given work. The resignation in the original is sent to the union. In this way the strength of many of the organizations is being sapped to such an extent that in a short time they may exist in name only. The bricklayers were the first to give way, and the carpenters followed. The Hoisting Engineers Union have withdrawn from the Building Trades Council and are at work. The Brotherhood of Electrical Mechanics is arranging its differences with the contractors and it seems now that the war will be over within a few weeks at the outside.

Commerce in the Philippines.

FROM the War Department's summary of the commerce of the Philippines it seems American goods are not in good demand there. The summary issued covers the period for the seven months ending January 31, 1900. The total value of merchandise imported during this term was $12,670,436, and the duty collected was a little less than two and one-half millions. These are large sums, but of the amounts Europe is responsible for $5,270,000, North America only $888,000, Asia $7,591,000, and Australia $507,000. In this matter of imports China leads; the United Kingdom ranks second, Spain third, British East Indies fourth and the United States fifth. In the matter of exports during the above named period, China again leads with $2,335,414 worth, the United States second with $2,150,630 worth, Japan third and Spain fourth. The impression prevails in Manila that Americans are slow in taking advantage of their opportunities. The canned fruit sold is from Australia; the army is eating Australia butter and beef. We raise more cotton than any other land, but the cotton goods used in Manila come from England and Germany. We have the chief iron mines and the best hardware, but Germany and England are supplying the Philippines. California is nearer Manila than either Spain or France, but the wines consumed are from the latter countries. Machinery, paper and silks come from France, furniture of the bentwood variety from Austria and glass and glassware, as well as iron, paper and cement, from Belgium.

However, the Manila customs house is managed on the Spanish system and the duties exacted by Spain are still in force. Tariff is determined chiefly by weight, quality and quantity, making but little difference. A pound of canned tomatoes, selling for ten cents in gold, and a pound of potted chicken, worth fifty cents, pay the same tariff. Furniture pays its way by the pound, and so do silks, velvets and wrapping papers. It is the same with carpets and cottons, with hemp, marble and drugs, and, in fact, with almost every importation.

DUELS IN ITALY.—During the past year 2,400 duels were fought by Italian officers, and 480 officers were killed. This shows that the Italian officers are not afraid of each other; when they have to fight Abyssinians it is different. It shows, also, that one duel in every five was fatal, which is far above the average of French duels.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.25; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—September 8, 1900—Seattle

On Investing Small Sums of Money.

A YOUNG woman, making her living at dressmaking, fell heir to $2000. Not being accustomed to handling "large sums of money" the young person in question wrote the Examiner editor, whose experience is large in this direction, asking his advice as to how to invest her "fortune." Editorially, and with that elusive sagacity which advises investment in a specific thing and then warns the inquirer against the very investment it suggests, the Examiner says "Loan your money on a mortgage in your own town" but it adds "sometimes property depreciates in value so rapidly it is not worth the amount of the mortgage. If you can get 5 per cent for your money in a first-class bank, of unimpeachable standing it would probably be a better investment than the mortgage." But then for fear the "dressmaker" might take its advice, it adds, in the next paragraph, out of abundance of caution: "We would be inclined to doubt the ability of any savings bank to honestly pay more than 4 per cent." But the editorial financier then begins again in a more hopeful strain and says "commercial banks that are permitted to enter into speculative investments * * can pay a higher rate of interest to stockholders." Then he recommends stock in commercial banks? No, indeed; for not to be caught with definite views this financial sage kicks the props from under the commercial bank investment by adding "also they sometimes go into insolvency."

The "Santa Cruz dressmaker" at this stage of the editorial has undergone six stages of "hope" each followed by the collapse of despair If she be an intelligent "dressmaker" she must, at this point, find herself and her two thousand dollars in a hopeless muddle and feel strongly inclined to throw the wretched stuff out of the window. The writer had a friend who was sick unto death with a troublesome liver. The sick man had heard a great deal of Byron Springs and the curative powers of its waters. There are a full dozen springs at Byron of different qualities and kinds and the man with the liver sought advice from his doctor on the subject. "Are you familiar with these springs?" inquired the sick man. "Yes, indeed," responded the medico. "Which spring would you recommend a man in my condition to use?" asked he of the liver. "Well," responded the doctor contemplatively, "I think if I were you I would pick out one of the springs and drink the water regularly. If that did not help me I would try another, and so on until you find the spring that benefits you the most, and then I would advise you to stick to that spring." This is about where the "Santa Cruz dressmaker" finds herself. If she has her two thousand dollars wrapped up in a newspaper and hidden away in an oyster-can, so far as the Examiner goes she had better let it remain there. Or if she takes her wisdom from the Examiner she must believe that Mr. Bryan will be our next president, and that then silver will double in value. She might go out and buy silver bullion and double her money in a few months. How did the Examiner sage happen to overlook this investment? But the Examiner financier then takes up stocks of private corporations and tosses them to one side, into the "unreliable" heap. Municipal bonds are treated in quite the same disdainful way. To sum up the advice given the "dressmaker," the only safe thing for her to do, is to deposit her money in the Hibernia Bank which "only pays 3½ per cent" per annum interest. This surely is a most doleful conclusion, and the wonder is why the editor ever wrote himself the letter, if he had no better answer to make.

Now let us tell the "Santa Cruz dressmaker" just why there are no investments for the widow, or for the funds of estates or for people like her who are without business experience. The Examiner has for years headed a demagogic assault upon all forms of securities that offered investment for just such capital as that of the "dressmaker." The funds of widows and orphans were usually invested by men wise in such matters, in the dividend-paying stocks of the Spring Valley Water Works, the Gas Company and similar institutions. But backed by the Examiner and the demagogue, raid after raid his been made upon these corporations, their earning capacity has been crippled, their stocks have been battered down, they have been threatened with rate reductions, and stringent regulations, and only recently the present "very honorable" Board of Supervisors attempted to coerce the Water Company into naming a selling figure for its plant, at a panic price, by threatening to destroy the Water Company's property, if it did not comply with the Board's demands. The young lady down in Santa Cruz who is stitching her life away making fine raiment for her more fortunate sisters, and who has unluckily fallen heir to a snug little sum, might have invested her money in Spring Valley stock we will say ten years ago. Her two thousand dollars would possibly have bought her twenty-two shares, on which she would have received eleven dollars per month income. If she did not disturb the interest or principal, she might on an average have added a new share to her capital every eight months, and within the ten years she would have thirty-seven shares paying her $18.50 per month. A little saving here and there from the income of her work would have added a tidy number of shares to this number, and when age or sickness or weariness came upon her, she would be far beyond want. We have in mind a man who started saving in just this manner. He wrote a letter to the Wave several years ago, recounting the self-denial he had practiced to put himself beyond want. He told the story of a man who was struggling to put himself out of reach of the poorhouse, and he bitterly denounced the Examiner and the demagogues who were attacking the only securities in the State that were open to the investment of the poor man. The Examiner derided our correspondent. That man sold every dollar of his California investments and placed his money in Eastern stocks of the same character, where they have no Examiners nor Phelans. He is now on a trip around the world. Before starting, he wrote us that such a trip had been the dream of his life. The man who wrote to the Wave worked for a living, just as the "Santa Cruz dressmaker" is working for her living. But the "dressmaker" may not now invest in similar securities in California, because the Examiner and the rest of the agitators have made such investments hazardous. Perhaps the "dressmaker" has read the attacks of this virtuous journal upon the rapacious corporations of San Francisco; perhaps she has applauded its "manly" stand on behalf of the "people." Perhaps, too, she has noticed that the real "people" never took part in these assaults; that it was always the same old gang of water disturbers, not the multitude of water consumers who raised the hullabaloo, and perhaps now this patient, hopeful, hard-driven little "dressmaker" with her inquiring two thousand dollars hidden away in a tomato can or poked up the fire-place or under the carpet, may come to realize all of the great good this journalistic friend of hers has accomplished. We advise the lady to buy some stock in the Examiner. It escapes taxation; it may make any and all kinds of profits without fear of a regulating hand; it has the longest leased wire in the world; it is always gaining in circulation without the expense of printing more papers and always gaining in advertisements without increasing in size. It is a good investment for the "dressmaker's "two thou."

Russian Diplomacy in China.

RUSSIAN diplomacy clearly has the upper hand thus far in Chinese affairs, but there is at least one opportunity for the other nations to make a final coup and defeat her diplomatically. In passing, one is impressed with a peculiar feature of the news discussion of the American-Russian agreement. The assertion is repeatedly made that the United States has "gone over" to Russia. The contrary is true. Russia has come over to America. The position of the United States has not changed a hair's breadth, from our declared attitude at the beginning of this trouble; while Russia has turned squarely "about face" from her position of years standing. Of all the allied powers, probably the United States is more genuinely opposed to dismembering China than any of her sister nations. We have everything to lose by such a partition and nothing to gain We can not take, and do not want to take any portion of the empire, and it is very much to our interest that China should remain, as it is, undiminished in size, and independent as a nation. We have nothing to gain by its dismemberment and have much to lose if we permit other nations to control and divert its trade. If Russia represents any sentiment at all, it is one diametrically opposite to that of America. She desires a partition of China, but she wants in that partition to be the sole recipient of territory. She neither wants Japan nor England, nor any other country to share in it.

She could not afford at this juncture to take off the thinnest sort of a slice, no matter how much she desired it, for, with the allied armies on Chinese soil, the land-hungry nations of the world are in a position to enforce similar claims and take similar territory. Russia must stand for the integrity of the empire, so long as present conditions continue. The stage will not be set for Russia's play until it has been cleared of the allied troops. Naturally she gravitated toward the only power that was genuinely against a division of the empire, and by this ruse is attempting to wrest from the other powers an agreement against partition and a recognition of her ally Li Hung Chang. It was a clever move.

There is one more play left for Japan. She may engage England and Germany to join her in refusing to recognize Li; and, while expressing a willingness to stand for the integrity of the empire, demand the appointment of another Chinese diplomat (naming him) to act as peace envoy. By this process might be forced the appointment of a man of known hostility to Russia, or at least one not partial to that country. This would be a great victory for Japan. The United States could not afford to hold out for Li. We are bent on establishing a principle—not a man. Russia with her friend deposed, and peace negotiations lodged in unfriendly hands, would be left in a most unpleasant predicament.

It seems pretty clear that unless some definite action looking to a rational settlement of Chinese affairs be taken very soon, that the United States might as well withdraw her troops, and await the struggle that is likely to ensue between the civilized powers. We have not a life to offer for the maintenance of the integrity of China. We have some patience, some brains, and some diplomatic skill that we are perfectly willing to contribute to secure that end, but we wish neither to imperil the life of a single soldier nor to take the life of a single man in that connection.

After the body of a murdered monarch has been put away forever in the tomb, and his successor has taken on the imperial robes and crown, and all of the muniments of power, where does the satisfaction come to the anarchist? One can readily understand wanton murder, perpetrated by a maniac. He has no reason with which to hold communion. It would be impossible for a dozen inmates of a mad-house to come together and plot a murder, and subsequently meet to rejoice in the deed. The men who adhere to the red flag of anarchy move about unnoticed among their fellow men, are engaged in the common occupations of life, are not insane, and to all appearances have the ordinary intelligence common to the run of men. It surpasses human comprehension how any human being, be he ever so slightly equipped with commonsense, can take satisfaction from the murder of a ruler like Humbert. Where does anarchy profit by it? Wherein are the people of Italy made happier? Where can the diseased mind of anarchy find the slightest comfort or encouragement in the cowardly, brutal and purposeless murder of the Empress of Austria? France is a republic, and the selection of its ruler is intrusted to the people; there was no tyranny, no oppression present in that country when Sadi-Carnot was murdered by an Italian anarchist, and yet it is probable, though scarcely conceivable, that all over the world little colonies of anarchists have met in secret and gloated over these very achievements. Why this should be, the intelligent man cannot fathom, and probably never will.

Events Current.

The Chinese Embroglio.

The Chinese situation is not, this week, so kaleidoscopic in its rapid changes of condition. The allied troops are still at Pekin, with no present prospect of their retiring from Tien Tsin. The Japanese landing force has been withdrawn from Amoy, and that "complication" seems at an end. Chinese rioting, however, is still feared by the foreign residents, and it is likely the United States Castine will remain at that port to insure protection to our people there. A cable from Hongkong reports a threatened uprising and a growing anti-foreign feeling in the Canton and other southern provinces. Stories of wanton murder and robbery on the part of foreign troops continue to trickle out of China, and at the door of Russia has been laid acts of barbarous cruelty that put even the Boxers to shame. Beating kneeling women over the head with the butts of guns, picking up children by the ankles and dashing their brains out against the pavement, are among the brutalities charged up against the Cossacks. Some space has been given an alleged renewal of the alliance between France and Russia. President Loubet has been decorated by Emperor Nicholas with the order of St. Andrew, and men wise in such matters affect to discover great significance to this proceeding. General Chaffee reports five thousand effectives as the military force of the United States in China, including cavalry, artillery, and infantry.

It is promised that the arrival of Count Von Waldersee will mark the beginning of a new chapter in Chinese affairs, and the world is waiting with some interest the promised developments. The threatened move of the government ordering the withdrawal of the United States troops from Pekin to Tien Tsin met with such a vigorous protest from our people at home and our representatives abroad that the idea for the time being at least, seems to have been abandoned.

The War in the Transvaal.

The important fact in the Transvaal campaign this week is Lord Roberts' proclamation annexing the South African Republic, which will hereafter be known as The Transvaal. In England this is taken to mean that the war is practically over. Its effect will be to cause the Transvaal burgers now in arms to be treated as rebels and forfeit belligerent rights.

For all this, there seems to be a great deal of fighting still going on. General Buller has followed Botha in the direction of Lydenburg and encountered 2,000 burgers holding a pass, who dispute his further progress. The Boers opened with three Long Toms, but did little harm. It is thought this position may be held for some time. In the meantime commandos invested the British garrison at Ladybrand, but after several desperate attempts to captnre the town and its little army of defenders they were driven off by the arrival of General Hunter. No late news has been received of Baden-Powell's attack on Groblaar's force which, from late accounts, he was engaging August 30th. It seems probable that Roberts will soon return to England, to succeed Lord Wolsley as commander-in-chief of the British army. Either General Buller or Lord Kitchener will succeed him in supreme command.

The Filipino Commission in Power.

The Filipino Commission has entered upon the administration of the islands, but until the estsblishment of a central civil government or congress, General Macarthur remains chief executive and is completely in charge of the department for the enforcement of law and order. It may be said that the Commission enters upon its duties under reasonably good conditions. A majority of the natives desire peace and the resumption of business under American rule, but are so cowed by the murderous atrocities and destruction of property by their armed countrymen that they dare not actively express their feelings. Insurgents and ladrones throughout the country still exercise a veritable reign of terror. For example, the insurgent general, Cailles, in the Province of Laguna recently put to death the president and office holders of the town of Bay who had been installed by the Americans. Filipinos who had sold their rifles to the Americans were killed. Rarely does a day pass in Southern Luzon without an encounter between the United States troops and the insurgents, and life is not safe outside the garrisoned towns. General Bates commands 18,000 troops in that district. In the northern end of the island, however, conditions are more satisfactory. It may be stated on the best authority the time is by no means ripe for withdrawal of the United States troops.

Progress of the Campaign.

The Republican majority for the state and congressional ticket in Vermont turned out to be so much greater than expectations that Republicans feel reassured, if reassurance was necessary. Local issues cut down the majority but not to the extent that even Republicans conceded it would be. Utah is reported to be strong for McKinley and Roosevelt. In New York the party is on a harmonious footing. B. P. Odell was nominated for governor and Woodruff was renominated for lieutenant-governor. Men wise in matters political freely predict Bryan's defeat in New York. The Democratic party cannot be charged with idleness in this campaign. The party managers are putting up a far better fight in the East and middle West than they are in California. A very pessimistic view of the general situation gives victory to McKinley and Roosevelt by a majority of one in the electoral college. The greatest danger to the McKinley ticket, according to the eastern dispatches, lies in the apathy of voters who believe that the Republican ticket is bound to win. A very good politician is reported to have said that every speech Bryan makes, every reported accession to his following, every boast that he is likely to carry with him the lower house, serves the Republican party more than it serves Democracy, for it breeds a fear in the mind of the man who has believed Mr. McKinley's election certain, and hurries him off to get on the register.

Bryan's Personal Prosperity.

Nature and the market quotations seems to be combining against Mr. Bryan. He is not in a position to talk to the farmer this year about the low price of grain and the high price of the material he must buy. Bryan's own experience with the small farm he owns, near Lincoln, is itself such a refutation of his previous fallacies that Nebraska farmers are laughing at the Fusion leader. Bryan had an oat field of 120 acres. His oats averaged a yield of forty bushels to the acre. These oats were sold within two weeks after being harvested at 30 cents a bushel, netting the Fusion leader something like $1,400. This is twice as much as the land cost Mr. Bryan. There are hundreds of farmers to-day in Nebraska and Kansas whose wheat and oats crop paid for their farms twice over this year, and there is not a cornfield in either of these two states to-day that will not net more money than the land cost on which the corn is growing. This is the condition that confronts the Bryan forces to-day in the West. Again, the price of wire nails and fencing wire has declined in the last three months enormously, a keg of nails which sold four years ago for $2.25, to-day bringing at Nebraska interior points only $1.25.

It is asserted, of course, that this condition is temporary, and that the Nail Trust merely forced the price of its product down for the purpose of forcing out the small stockholders. Be that as it may, Mr. Bryan is fencing his farm to-day at a cost of one-half less than he could have done the work for four years ago, and at the same time he is receiving thirty cents a bushel for his oats, which four years ago he could have sold for only sixteen and eighteen cents a bushel. In other words, while the Fusion leader claiming through the west that no real prosperity exists, and that the farmer is to-day paying more for his living than at any time in the history of the Republic, while he receives less for his products, he knows that the contrary is true from his own personal experience.

This is the situation as it exists to-day in Nebraska. This is the reason that the cries of alarm from the Popocratic camps cause no corresponding flutter among Nebraska business men. For this reason the speeches of Mr. Bryan and his associates admonishing the masses to beware of "four years more of McKinleyism" are received with jeers and ridicule among people of the west who four years ago were deceived by these same arguments and were stampeded for the Fusion ticket.

General Wood in Cuba

An era of tranquillity and satisfaction seems to be beginning in Cuba, thanks to Governor-General Wood's liberality, common-sense and unfailing tact. At a banquet given to the Governor at Santiago de Cuba by the Republican and Democratic parties on August 26th, the native population was represented by all the judicial and official dignitaries—including the civil governor and the archbishop of the island—and by a deputation of a hundred representative merchants. This is a pleasing contrast to the tendency hitherto shown by the population to keep aloof from the American authorities. General Wood's speech was a most happy one. He said that the mission of the United States in Cuba was to give the Cubans liberty and exhorted the Cuban people to lay aside all petty differences and send their best and truest men to the convention which is to frame a constitution for the island. "You want liberty for all and for no particular party" were his closing words. "The United States insists that you shall have it. This is possible and easily possible. We have said it to the world. It lies with you to help us make our word good. Your enemies predict failure. The people of the United States and their representatives hope to see you defeat these predictions. If we were not your friends, we would not seek the best men you have, but would seek the disturbed and malcontent to represent you in the convention. We seek and demand the best you have. Again I say, send people to the convention who will hereafter make your political system workable and permanent."

The Cuban flag was raised over the palace by General Wood's permission during the day, and in the evening at the principal theatre, where the Governor was present. American, Cuban, and Spanish banners were festooned in decoration symbolical of appeasement and good-will. With such spirit maintained, the words "Cuba Libre" are bound to soon be a reality.

The Jewish Movement Toward Palestine.

The fourth Zionist congress has just been held in London—the largest gathering yet held in the Zionist cause. The enthusiasm this year is largely due to the fact that the plan of securing permission from the Sultan of Turkey for the return of the Jews to Palestine could and would be carried out. The congress included such men as Dr. Max Nordau, Dr. Theodore Herzl of Vienna, Dr. Alexander Mamoret of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, Professor Richard Gottheil of Columbia University, New York; Professor Mandelstamm of Kieff, the eminent oculist; Professor Belkowsky of St. Petersburg; the Rev. Dr. Moses Gaster of London, Dr. Bodonheimer of Cologne and Sir Francis Montefiore.

One of the officers of the congress explains the situation in these words: "The Jewish race throughout the world numbers between 10,000,000 and 15,000,000. The great mass are in Europe, divided between Russia and Austria. It is very evident that the Jews are not wanted in these countries. They are subjected to horrible persecutions. The English-speaking countries, America and England, are the only ones where the Jews are tolerated and are permitted to enjoy equal rights and privileges. In America there is absolute freedom from the oppression seen in other countries. Now, where shall our people go if not to Palestine? Palestine is to-day a desolate waste. Why should our people not restore it? Here are several millions seeking a home. Here is the home for them. Of course, it will entail enormous expense, but the money will be forthcoming as soon as the arrangements are completed. Palestine is under Turkish rule. We do not seek to disturb these conditions. Our mission is one of peace. We expect to pay for our new possessions. And when we settle down just as any other propertyowners do, we shall become good and loyal subjects to the Sultan and shall conform to whatever laws that country imposes. Al we ask is religious liberty. Our people have for generations lived in Turkish territory, and we never had any trouble. We mind our own business and do not seek to interfere with other people in the exercise of their religious faith. That was the cause of the Armenian troubles. We don't anticipate any such trouble. You see, I speak as though it was already settled. I cannot tell you how we expect to bring about this scheme, but I will say that I do not anticipate any further trouble. It is not yet entirely settled, but I am confident we have overcome all obstacles."

The Vatican Press and China.

The attitude of the Vatican press in the Chinese question has caused considerable surprise in European non-clerical circles. The Catholic church possesses in China thirty-nine Catholic missions, with 693 European and 370 native missionaries, 3,119 churches and chapels, 2,739 schools, 39 seminaries and 600,000 native converts yet it was more than a month after the late King of Italy had ordered prayers to be said for the safety of those in Peking that the Vatican gave any sign that Catholic missionaries were being massacred and that the powers of the world were attempting the rescue of the survivors.

On the very day that the populace of Rome were acclaiming the departure of the Bersaglieri for China, the organ of the Vatican, the Osservatore Romano, observed:

"We cannot but notice that more wine than holy water is being sprinkled on the Italian soldiers, that nothing but flowers is showered upon them, and that no care is taken officially to invoke for them the blessings of Heaven."

A few days later, when it was thought that the massacre of the envoys in Peking was an actual fact, La Voce delia Verita declared in a leading editorial article, entitled "The Humiliation of the Powers:"

"Europe is paid in the coin she deserves. Nothing is more monstrous than her impiety and rebellion against God, and it is just that everything should be monstrous in regard to her. The powers are already humiliated. Let them consider while there is time, if they can, lest they be wholly undone."

It is understood that the Pope is more determined than ever to obtain the restoration of temporal power in Rome. During the latter days of King Humbert's life, negotiations were under way between the Vatican and the Quirinal. Queen Margherita is said to favor the relinquishment of the holy city but the King held out. Whether Victor Emanuel II. will be more amenable remains to be seen. In the meantime the Vatican has been exerting itself to bring outside pressure to bear on the throne but without success and La Tribuna di Roma declares that it sees in the attitude of the clerical press the resentment of the Cardinals because Catholic Europe takes no steps to re-establish the temporal power of His Holiness.

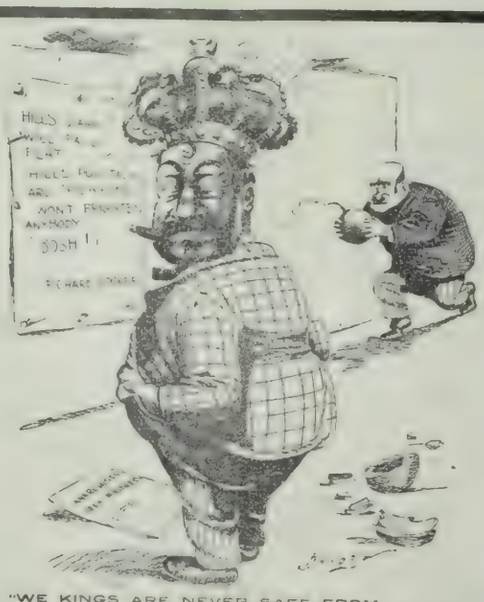
BRYAN OPENS HIS CAMPAIGN.

ALL OUT OF THE SAME BOTTLE

NEVER MIND MARK, THERE ARE OTHER BEANS

Walk right up, gentlemen; now's your chance to Pe(e)k in.

—From the Minneapolis Tribune.



"WE KINGS ARE NEVER SAFE FROM THOSE ANARCHIST FELLOWS"

R. CROKER.

OUR NEXT GOVERNOR.

Hon. Richard Thomas Collier Platt-Croker—Being a composite picture of the state ...

Nelan in N. Y. Herald
Cory in N. Y. World
Briggs in N. Y. Journal

Nelan in N. Y. Herald
Brown in Minneapolis Tribune
Cory in N. Y. World

Political Issues Cartooned

Boys' Festival in May

Festival Lanterns, Bentendori, Yokohama.

Ornamented Festival Car.

Religious Festivals in Japan.

Paco Cemetery in Manila

By Wilford W. Wells

The Crypts.

Four Generations of Manila's Dead.

Toombs, Paco Cemetery.

THE Paco Cemetery is one of the most interesting spots in Manila. From a distance it resembles rather a fortified retreat for the living than a last resting place for the dead. It is inclosed in two massive stone walls forming a circle surrounding the grounds. The outer and inner walls, some twelve feet in height and eight in thickness, are honeycombed with crypts which open into the interior. Inside the inner wall is a park-like space set out in noble palms, lawns and flowering shrubs, a veritable tropical garden. At one side is a small chapel wherein the services for the dead are conducted.

Paco Cemetery is an institution of the Catholic Church, and like burial grounds the world over, is conducted on a business basis. The crypts in the walls are rented out for burial purposes, the charges being determined by location. I believe the average cost is about $20 for five years' occupancy. At the end of that term, unless the lease is renewed, the crypt reverts to the church. So, if there are none of the living relatives of the deceased who care enough for the peaceful repose of their dead to meet the rental, the silence of the tomb is broken by the crowbar of the sexton as he demolishes the entrance preparatory to casting forth the remains.

Beloved Conchita. One day last month when I was in Paco Cemetery I noticed a group of employees busy at a place on the lowest tier. They were opening one of the large crypts sealed with a costly slab elaborately carved. It bore the inscription in Spanish "Beloved Conchita now with the angels." Evidently it was the tomb of a once idolized daughter whose death had doubtless reduced a family to despair. I thought of the funeral, the weeping parents, the last sad rites, and now there was not a soul to keep from sacrilegious hands the bones of poor Conchita. But Filipino sorrow, however intense at the moment, expends itself in the trappings and expressions of woe. The living forget the dead—as they do elsewhere, indeed, though here the conditions of indifference are painful to one with an atom of sentiment. I watched the men pry off the decorated slab and with a rake gather the bones and the grinning skull into a basket. Thence, with many a laugh and jest, they carried all that was left of "beloved Conchita" to the bone pile at the rear of the cemetery.

Manila's Bone Heap. It is an extraordinary sight, this bone heap. It is hard to express the suggestion of callous disregard and brute indifference with which this gruesome array of bleaching skeletons and staring skulls affects one. Nowhere else in the world is there such a spectacle. Truly, I thought, here is equality. There is no favoritism here. The rich and the beautiful, the poor and the ugly, sooner or later, are cast forth to whiten and disintegrate together under the pitiless Philippino sun. Here are some three or four generations of Manila's dead—the dead whose claims on the living have expired.

America's Dead. Within the inner wall, under the cool shade of wide spreading trees, were the graves of the Americans who fell in the early engagements of the war or who succumbed to exposure or the ravages of disease. This quarter of the Paco Cemetery has somewhat the character of one of our own burying places. Here are marble shafts and headstones. On one large granite monument I noted this inscription: "You helped to make this American soil. Rest in peace." Other tablets, not so elaborate, made of wood testify perhaps to a higher worth for they are the tribute of loving comradeship, hewn out by hand to testify to the honor, courage and gentleness of him who had fallen by the way. I trust that these graves will be preserved against the influence of Spanish civilization. These men died in the service of their country, and surely they have earned and deserved a resting place in which they may sleep the long sleep undisturbed by ghoulish Filipino sextons.

A Soldier's Funeral. Most informal are the funerals of the men who fell in the numerous skirmishes with the insurgents in the Philippines. Here is an episode:

In the afternoon they buried the man who had been killed in the brush of the evening before. In the tumble-down chapel at the gate of the old Campo Santo they found a box that would do for a coffin. Six men carried it down through the street draped with the headquarters flag, the dead man's hat resting on it. In the little procession that followed, the Colonel and a half dozen other officers walked bare-headed. Down by the far wall of the Campo Santo the grave had been dug. When the body had been lowered into the grave an officer stepped to its head and said:

"Men, in the absence of a chaplain, we are unable to give our comrade such a funeral as we would have liked to give him. Let us repeat the Lord's Prayer."

With bowed heads the little company followed the officer through the prayer. A corporal's squad stood at the side of the grave.

"Load!" said the corporal. "Aim, fire!" Twice more he gave the commands and each time the bullets crashed clear through the stone wall at the other side of the holy field. Then taps sounded and Private Freeman was mustered out.

A Soldier's Funeral in Manila.

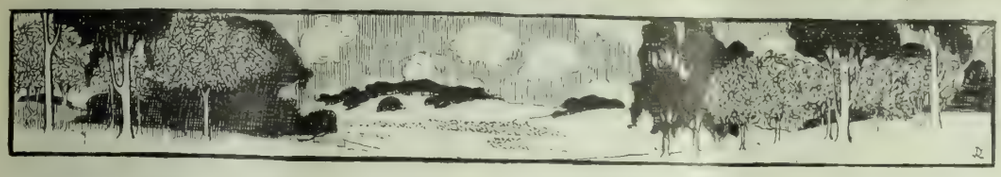
A Church Festival in Manila. The Feast of the Circumcision is celebrated with more pomp and circumstance in Manila than any other of the great festivals of the church. There are services all day throughout the city, and at five o'clock the great ceremonial occurred in the cathedral. The body of the church slowly filled with people, who represented almost entirely the old regime in Manila. Over the gallery of a house on the Calle Palacio, which skirts one side of the large building, hung the orange and red and the castle and lion of Spain, while except for the special guard which had been ordered by the Provost Marshal to keep order in the Plaza, and a few Americans so thinly dotted here and there throughout the audience that they were hardly noticeable, there was scarcely anything to indicate on this afternoon the change that has taken place in the Philippines.

Besides the civilian populace gathered together in the the cathedral, there were the pupils from all the church schools, under the watchful eyes of the "padres" or the "hermanas"—sisters—the boys of the Jesuit school, in their immaculate white trousers and double breasted blue coats, the "ninas" from Santa Isabel, Santa Rosa or Santa Catalina, hundreds of girls dressed in black, with red medal ribbons around their necks, from which depended a scapular, and their heads covered with black veils or mantillas. Inside a large square space in the center of the nave, inclosed by an iron grating, sat a number of "padres," who took no active part in the service, but who, later on, joined in the procession.

The archbishop entered in robes of bright scarlet, the long train of which was held up by some young native priests, and, after crossing himself, entered the chancel, where he stood at the left of the high altar, under a red canopy. Here, while various prayers were offered up, his scarlet robe was taken off, and he was assisted into a long white alb. Over this was placed a stole and a small cope, and over all a magnificent and heavily embroidered cope with a long train. Some twenty priests assisted. It is said that in old times five hundred priests were connected with the cathedral, and some of the duties assigned to them were made manifest. In the mean time acolytes with crosses and long brass candlesticks had been collecting at the right of the cathedral. They wore red cassocks, over which were cottas of lace, and, following a Filipino band, were to head the procession. It took about three-quarters of an hour for the pageant to file around the square. There were three bands of Filipino musicians, and all the religious orders in Manila were represented by white, blue, brown and black robed friars, with tonsured heads. About the archbishop himself were the various bishops of the islands, who long ago were obliged to take refuge in Manila—those of Cebu, Iloilo and Vigan—in long copes.

HATS OF GREAT MEN. Dr. Collins has gathered many statistics concerning the hats worn by great men. He mentions that Mr. Gladstone's number in hats was seven and three-eighths. A number-seven hat is the regular English size. Sir Walter Scott's and Lord Beaconsfield's hats were of this size. The hats of John Bright, Robert Burns, and Charles Dickens were seven and one eighth, Lord John Russell's seven and a quarter—all smaller than Mr. Gladstone's. But the Gladstone hat was exceeded in size by that of Dr. Chalmers, seven and three-quarters. Daniel O'Connell, whom Gladstone styled the greatest Irishman who ever lived, wore a hat of the size of eight. The late Dr. Thomson, Archbishop of York, wore a large eight, and Joseph Hume's was emphatically abnormal, eight and a quarter. At a meeting of the convention of London University, Dr. Collins had 126 hats measured, and found that between forty and forty-one per cent were above the English average, between twenty-five and thirty per cent were just the average size, and thirty-four per cent were under the average.

Personalities of the Day.



Whistler's Mischievous Ways.

SOON after leaving school, James McNeil Whistler was apprenticed to some engineers who were etching elaborate maps on copper. One day his employer asked him if he also could etch maps on copper. "Oh, yes! I can etch," promptly answered young Whistler. As a matter of fact, he had never used an etching needle in all his life. However, they gave him the copper and he set to work, making a very fine and beautiful map. But round the edges of the plate, which, when bitten in with acid, are always stopped out, he etched some characteristic little sketches of the different members of the firm, including a very humorous one of the chief himself. Shortly after, he happened to go away for a week or two for his holiday. Meantime, the plate had been bitten in and printed, with all the dreadful caricatures that he had forgotten to stop out, appearing in startling prominence, the sketch of the chief being especially remarkable because of its great resemblance to that gentleman, who was so enraged at the indignity of the thing, that, immediately on Whistler's return, he dismissed him.

Just as young Whistler was leaving the office he passed through the proprietor's room, and his eye was caught by a huge magnifying glass that lay on the chief's desk. Now this glass was no ordinary one, but was used on the most solemn occasions by the "old man" and was held in most sacred awe by his employees. Whistler, full of bitter thoughts, stooped over the desk for a moment, and painted a sprightly little red demon right in the center of the sacred magnifying glass, and passed on his way with a smile. The next day, when the great man solemnly lifted his glass to inspect something, he saw nothing but a horrid little grinning devil, and dropped it on the table with a howl, thinking that he had gone out of his mind!

Robert O. Wolcott, who succeeds Hon. Wm. F. Draper as U. S. Ambassador to Italy.

The Shah of Persia in Paris.

THE Shah of Persia has rather disappointed the Parisians. They expected an extraordinary oriental figure laden with treasure and decorated with diamonds. Instead here is a very modern and practical personage who is at the exposition purely for business. His importance, in his own eyes, is terrific. He vouchsafes to chat with the great people, who are introduced to him, and even endeavors to be cordial, but it is with an ill-dissimulated contempt and hauteur. Very rarely, he displays a certain childish curiosity; but it does not last. One jeweller who saw him examining a tray of rings attentively, began to give detailed explanations—to deliver himself of the "patter" of his trade. The Shah silenced him with one gesture, imperiously, authoritatively. He often repeats the words: "Content! Content!" It is one of the few French phrases he has been taught, and he utters it apropos of everything. He rang the changes on it to M. Loubet, but never so heartily as when watching the cuirassiers of the escort. These fine troopers fill him with as much admiration as he is capable of showing, if not of feeling.

The Shah is as cool in his daily drives as if no madman had tried to take a pot shot at him from the foot-board of his carriage. Never once have his unblinking, inscrutable eyes worn the haunted look of the Tsar of Russia. He allows himself to be approached easily, and affects affability—rather unsuccessfully. For his opinion of his authority, his prestige, and himself is immense, and obvious. The speech of welcome made by the Papal Nuncio, on behalf of the diplomatic body, having been very short, the Shah replied in a speech of just three words. The interpreter rendered it literally: "I thank you." Whereupon the Shah, with a curt bow, went across the room to the Russian Ambassador, without taking the slightest notice of the all-unconsciously offending Papal Minister.

Every night, the Shah works for an hour with the Grand Vizier, drawing up the list of decorations, rewards and presents. Even the reporters will have their share, perhaps more than their share. As it is they make their exits and their entrances pretty much as they like, for the mot d'ordre of the Shah is that they be treated with the most perfect courtesy. There are even some of these knights of the pen who lunch with the Shah's suite, and spend their afternoons strolling about the grounds of the Hotel des Souverains.

Difficult Royal Marriages.

THE present King of Italy had been long a drug upon the royal matrimonial market before he met Helene of Montenegro. In his early youth, the Prince of Naples was so discouragingly puny and insignificant in appearance, that all efforts to negotiate a union with a princess of his own rank proved fruitless—the chosen daughters of royal houses all rebelled. Finally this hapless royal youth met the beautiful princess of Montenegro at Athens, while on a cruise, and fell in love with her. King Humbert, despairing of finding a more brilliant parti for his unappreciated first born gave his sanction, and everything was lovely.

Helene, on her side, had not been without her prematrimonial tribulations. One of the seven daughters of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, of remarkable beauty, it was felt early that her personal charms could be used to advantage to bolster up the poor, little, valiant principality of the Balkans. The father of the present Czar of Russia thought of her for his son and she was taken to St. Petersburg where she developed into one of the most beautiful and gifted women of the Russian court. The throne of all Russia seemed within her reach, when Czar Nicholas suddenly fell in love—a regretable failing which seems to be overtaking nineteenth century royal personages. The object of the imperial affection was Princess Alix of Hesse and the unhappy Helene wended her humbled way back to the poor little court of her father at Cettinge.

Alexander of Servia risked a proposal but was haughtily rejected and a while later came the meeting with the Italian heir. Marriage followed somewhat quickly, and the couple are now said to be very happy.

A "New Woman" in Industry.

A WOMAN who runs gigantic brass and copper mills with such success as to alarm her masculine competitors is the last evolved product of the "New Woman" movement. She is not a virago either, nor a bearded, strutting, heavy-voiced feminine mistake, but a charming, refined woman with beautiful dark eyes, a velvet voice, and is the affectionate mother of a little four-year-old son. Her name is Mrs. May Clark Avery.

Frank M. Avery, her husband, was president of a large copper mill of which he owned all the stock. His wife, pampered and petted, lived the life of a thorough society woman with slight artistic tendencies. The man died suddenly and the dainty little woman decided to take up his work. She spent her days in the foundry until no details were unknown to her. At night she perused chemistries and such works as Thurston's Alloys Brasses and Bronzes. Then she set out on a tour of inspection amongst the great foundries of the world and came back with new ideas. She evolved a scheme for more economic production and with indomitable energy carried it through. The works were moved to Kenosha, Wisconsin, where the crude material could be obtained more easily and an addition was built for the turning of refuse scraps into table-ware. In two years she had reduced the running expenses twenty per cent and had become a dangerous competitor of other brass and copper men.

Mrs. Avery's sole ambition is to make her son a man in the best sense of the word, and she has resolutely taken up her industrial work so he would be brought up with an example of honest toil before his eyes. When he becomes of age, he will find an intelligent pursuit open to him. But she has accomplished more than that. She has shown that woman can be man's equal even in the broader or more serious ventures of commerce.

Russia's New Foreign Minister.

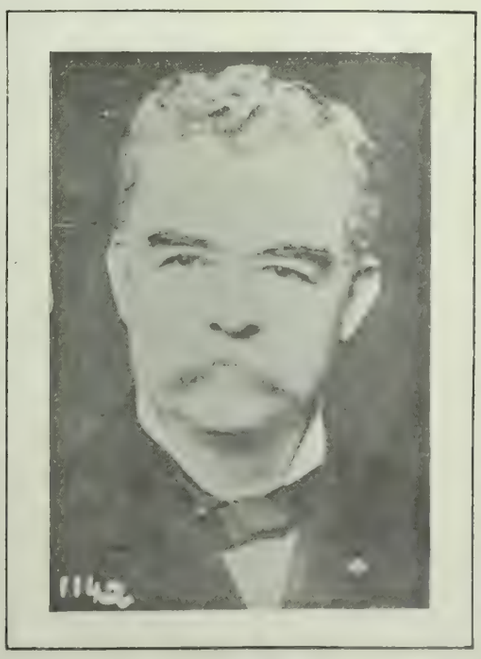
COUNT LAMDORFF, who succeeded Count Mourameff as foreign minister of Russia, lives in rooms in the Russian foreign office, and has done so for forty years. He never goes into society, and has hardly any friends. Methodical in his work and regular in his hours, one day of the week is just like another, unless in the changes of clothing the weather necessitates. Every day he has his constitutional walk. Nobody ever heard of him being poorly. He does not seem to need change of air or change of scene. The greatest authority that there is on the diplomatic history of Russia, he knows nothing of what goes on in Russia.

BISHOP DAVID H. MOORE of the Methodist Episcopal Church sails from San Francisco to China August 29th to reorganize the Methodist missions in China and to personally investigate conditions that exist. Upon his report will depend not only the missionary work of Methodism in China so far as the United States is concerned, but the missionary work of the Methodism of the world. Bishop Moore was known during the War of the Rebellion as a "fighting parson." He left his ministry and enlisted as a private in the army, and two years later was lieutenant-colonel of an Ohio regiment. He is one of the most aggressive men of the Methodist Church.

IF ever a man was Boston born and bred he is the Hon. Roger Wolcott just appointed ambassador to Italy. At the same time, he has not a trace of the uncomfortable characteristics usually attributed to Bostonese partricians. He has exceeding good looks, education, a manly, dignified bearing and great wealth, and his wife, formerly Edith Prescott, granddaughter of the historian, is also handsome, has brains, is queenly in appearance and bearing, and will grace the Court at Rome.

Ingalls on "Mummies."

THE late John J. Ingalls was a member of the class of '55 at Williams College and took a high place as a student and as editor of the college publication. On a winter's night in the last year of his term, the boys took a trip across the hills to a neighboring town and Ingalls was a member of the party. Returning, the crowd had to pass a young ladies' seminary and a serenade was proposed. There were many tin horns in the party with which a raucous volume of sound was developed. A day later, President Hopkins kept his class a few minutes after chapel services and in his slow, impressive way he remarked on the barbarity of awakening young ladies from their slumbers and concluded by observing: "In my time I have seen several men who tooted their own horns and I have observed that they have been tooting ever since."



Bishop David H. Moore.

This remark nettled Ingalls who, like most men with sharp tongues, was very sensitive to sarcasm. He declared an intention to "get even" but declared he would await a good opportunity. Commencement week for the class of '55 came around. 'Mummies' was the subject which Ingalls had chosen. Every one expected something brilliant from him. Once on the platform the speaker made his peroration short. Then he began to sketch some mummies that he had seen. There was no mistaking the members of the faculty whom he was holding up to view. Faculty and students alike sat spell bound, held as much by the ability of the man as by his audacity. Ingalls left the platform without a diploma. Later the faculty considered, and at the close of commencement week, Ingalls left Williamstown with his diploma.

The U. S. Battleship Alabama, Fastest of Her Class Afloat.

Photo by Chas. Culver Johnson.

The Modern Hotel

By Ralph Francis

THE luxury of modern hotels is rather a fertile subject in America. Though San Francisco is fairly well provided with houses of entertainment and has in the Palace an excellent exemplar of the best, yet one must go to New York to find the highest and richest manifestation of the institution. It is known to connoisseurs that one lives better in California for less money than anywhere else in the world, but no such magnificence as that of The Savoy or the Waldorf-Astoria exists out of New York. However, one pays for the decorated ballrooms, the ornate dining halls, the superlative furniture—pays a per diem charge which seems extravagantly out of proportion to the accommodation provided. Yet these palatial establishments are always full and their administration nets a splendid return on the vast sums invested, which may be taken to indicate their popularity. It is the luxurious hotels, the hotels with notable frescoes, marble tiling, ornate salons, silk velvet hangings, onyx bathrooms and fabulous rates that are profitable nowadays, not the medium-priced establishments which cater to moderate purses. The fact is well understood and is true, not only in New York but throughout the country. The Astor estate proposes to erect another palatial caravansary on Broadway above 44th street; on the site of the Hotel Brunswick there will be a five million dollar hotel of much splendor and proportion. In course of erection is a four million dollar hotel on Broadway between 73d and 74th streets. On the site of the Hotel Stratford in Philadelphia Geo. C. Boldt, who manages the Waldorf-Astoria, proposes to place a three million dollar structure. In Washington the old Hotel Willard is to be replaced by a two million dollar establishment. It is said that at least fifty million dollars is now being expended on the erection of new hotels the country through.

Entrance to Grill Room, Palace Hotel, San Francisco.

The Waldorf-Astoria.

For many years the Palace Hotel of San Francisco ranked as the largest and most luxurious caravansary in the United States. It was the precursor of the great institutions of New York and Chicago. It cost several millions of dollars and was described and commented upon the world over as a colossal extravagance far beyond the necessities of San Francisco. Yet, it has served as the model of the others, though not one of them is constructed with so magnificent a disregard of the value of ground rent. There are few finer dining-rooms in the country than those of the Palace, and it is certain that the showy office of the Waldorf-Astoria does not compare for spaciousness or architectural beauty with that of the San Francisco establishment. The actual cost of the Waldorf-Astoria is said to have been twelve millions of dollars, and to furnish it involved another million. All told, 1,400 persons are employed at the height of the season, or an employee for every guest, which is the average in most of the larger hotels. One hundred and thirty men are engaged in the kitchen, and the catering department as a whole utilizes the services of 730 persons. On an average over 6,000 meals a day are served, and it is not an uncommon thing for a man with four or five guests to get a seventy-five dollar dinner in any of the dozen or more public dining-rooms. In the sub-basement are the wine cellars, and the great cigar humidors. Just now $250,000 worth of wine and $400,000 worth of cigars are stored there. The Savoy Hotel, and its neighbor, the Netherlands, the public rooms of which are more gorgeous, if less expensive, than those of the Waldorf-Astoria, represent an immense investment. Situated on Fifth avenue, just outside the entrance to Central Park, they are classed rather as family hotels than as public institutions. The Netherlands is all marble and polished granite; the Savoy has a superb office and a delightful palm garden in which its guests may sit after dinner. For their most advantageous suites these two caravansaries command very high rates. For a corner suite overlooking Central Park one old gentleman paid seventy-five dollars a day. Nor did this charge include meals. There are scores of people paying as much and more than this for high-class suites. The average charge at these establishments and at the Holland House is the same as at the Waldorf-Astoria. The price for a parlor, two bedrooms and bath run as high as $35 and $40 a day ordinarily, and often special suites bring even more, $400 a week not being unheard of. The ballroom at the Savoy rents for as much as $250 a night.

The Open Air Promenade of the St. Charles, New Orleans.

Dining Room in the Netherlands Hotel.

The Waldorf-Astoria has a royal suite for which the rate used to be $500 per day. This fabulous charge has been paid several times. Latterly this royal suite has been curtailed to meet the requirements of a certain multi-millionaire who makes his home at the hotel. In his suite of apartments he is completely isolated from the rest of the institution, for there is a private hall. His guests are received in a drawing-room as superbly furnished as an apartment in a king's palace. In a large dining-room opening therefrom his meals are served. These quarters he has by the year, and is assessed at least $150 per day for them—a total of $54,750 per annum. He entertains extensively and lavishly, frequently having large luncheon and dinner parties therein, so his living expenses doubtless average $50 per day additional. Another multi-millionaire lives almost as luxuriously at the same caravansary. He has occupied for almost two years the private hall corner suite fronting on Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street. This suite has a drawing-room, dining-room and pantry, bedrooms and bathrooms for the family and servants; in fact, all the advantages of a private apartment combined with those of the hotel. Probably these two men pay the largest individual hotel bills in the United States, if not in the world.

At present Philadelphia is rather poorly equipped in hotels. The Walton, which served as headquarters for the Republican National Committee at the convention recently, is the best of the set and its tariff approaches New York standards. In comparison with the Holland or the Savoy it is second rate, however. The Bellevue is a squat, small structure at which the best eating in the Quaker City is found. A great hotel would have all the patronage, and that the new caravansary alluded to will be.

A magnificent hotel is the new St. Charles in New Orleans, which cost $1,600,000 and was furnished at a cost of one-quarter of a million more. A great open air promenade, filled with tropical plants and shrubbery, occupying the space between the wings of the building on the second floor, with entrances from the halls and dining-rooms, affords a delightful lounging place in sunshine or shade. The Coronado Hotel at Coronado Beach is one of the show places of the Pacific Coast. It covers an immense acreage. Indeed, it is one of the largest hotels in the world. Among its features is a superb tropical garden in the interior court yard. The Hotel Del Monte at Monterey is a beautiful structure set in the midst of one of the finest parks in America. It is surrounded by giant cypress trees and a spreading area of lawns and gardens. Almost every flowering shrub known to botany is included therein. An Arizona garden, planted with extraordinary cacti, is one of its features; a maze, another. The structure itself forms a model of its kind—wide halls, spacious, airy apartments, charmingly furnished, a superb dining-room. It is, perhaps, unique in the variety of interests it offers its visitors.

Like the Waldorf-Astoria, the Palace Hotel is the most popular meeting and gathering place in San Francisco. One does not see such feminine congregations in its corridors as in the New York caravansary but its Ladies' Grill is the most notable restaurant on the Pacific Coast and one is liable to meet there the beauty and fashion of the region. Favorite corner suites command large prices at the Palace, but no such extraordinary exactions as are the rule in Eastern institutions of the same rank. Besides, the apartments of the Waldorf-Astoria are mere thimbles in comparison to the lofty and spacious rooms of the Palace. With its neighbor, the Grand, the Palace has 1,400 rooms for rental, 900 of which have baths. The Waldorf-Astoria has 1,300 rooms. Of the other important hotels on the Pacific Coast the Hotel Portland is the best. It is a handsome structure and is headquarters for the Oregon metropolis. Returning to the East, the Auditorium with its annex, in Chicago, is the one great caravansary of the Windy City, and its charges are commensurate with its importance. One may ask, however, to what extent the great expense of hotel life is justified. The papers, recently, have brimmed over with accounts of men and families who conducted

Continued on page 15.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Heart-to-Heart Editorial

THE Examiner is treating its subscribers to something new in the editorial vein. The idea is that of the heart-to-heart talk with the reader, explaining how success in life is won, what to do in various emergencies, and other topics dealing with the problem of the man and his work. The idea was originated by Arthur Brisbane in the Evening Journal in New York and to the familiar editorials on its last page is attributed the tremendous circulation that publication has attained. It easily leads in sales the evening editions of the other dailies, and is said to have great influence with its clientelle. In journalism anything is good that goes and it may be that the intimate editorial page will achieve remarkable results in San Francisco as it has done in New York. It is said that but few people read editorials nowadays, though they do glance over them to see what subjects are treated. I think, however, that the idea would work better on an evening paper then on a morning daily, which, like editorial expression, generally, is purely a matter of personal opinion.

* * *

Apropos of the Hearst journalistic enterprises there seems now no reason to doubt the success of the Chicago American. A circulation of 200,000 is claimed for the daily and the Sabbath edition is now said to have excelled its competitors. With the advertising methods Mr. Hearst utilizes, success is commanded. Chicago is plastered with bills announcing the enterprise. Every dead wall in the Windy City and in Milwaukee and St. Paul and other subsidiary towns is embroidered with flaring papers calling attention to the American's literary stars and artistic planets. However, the days of the minor journalistic enterprise are behind us. Gradually it has become a matter of dailies with Sunday editions or weeklies and monthlies circulated from New York. A newspaper, like any other commercial enterprise, must be elaborately advertised if it would attract general attention. The Chicago American was handled as though it had been a new beer, or a late make of soap, or a circus—hence its success. By October it will be paying expenses and the operation will represent the creation of a million and a half dollar property out of an investment of half a million.

***

The Jubilee Celebration.

THE Native Sons' Jubilee celebration will be a much greater affair than most people expected. The average San Franciscan has had so many celebrations these latter years that he has grown rather indifferent and cannot be persuaded to enthuse save in some monumental cause. Already the city is filling up at a great rate. The hotels are already crowded; the Grand had 600 cots strung along its halls the other night and a similar condition prevails at the Lick. The committee on rooms has had applications from 180,000 people for accommodations. A tremendous crush—infinitely greater than that at the homecoming of the volunteers will witness the parade on Monday. I am told that excursion tickets for the night parade are all sold. The character of the decorations in the business streets are neat and graceful, and by Monday, the whole city will be decked in gala array.

***

A Guarantee for Grau.

IT is by no means certain that San Francisco will be privileged to hear the singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Now it is said that Maurice Grau is not entirely satisfied to trust to our good judgment to patronize his performance, but will exact a guarantee of $100,000. This is a great deal of money to raise in California, but one must remember the expense of the performances and the immense remuneration the eminent tenori, soprani, etc., command. The proposition as presented is for a season of 20 performances, tickets for which will cost $100. Per seat the charge will be $7.00. M. Grau expects that 1000 season tickets should be disposed of—a goodly number, as all who have engineered advance sales are well aware. The Ellis Opera Company did not exact a guarantee and made a good profit in San Francisco. It gave 12 performances for $50.

***

The Tenderfoot at Nome.

IT is the "tenderfoot" who is making all the outcry against Nome. For the experienced miner, for the man who has learned the business of trafficking in mines and how to live within the Arctic circle, the region is fertile in opportunity. To begin with there is quartz in quantity. Already several good strikes have been made but it may be taken for granted that the prizes will not go to the "tenderfoot." There is nothing quite so foolish as the business of rushing to an unknown region to engage in an occupation for which one's previous condition has not fitted one. Innumerable clerks and farmers rushed to Nome under the impression that gold might be picked up in the streets. Gold is there—more by far than in Dawson, but like other prizes it does not yield itself to the first comer. A sensible man finding himself in Nome would get what he could to do for a start, and wait his opportunity. Several fortunes were made on the Klondike by men who eschewed mining and merely loaned money. Jeremiah Lynch, well known in San Francisco, made a coup his first winter by cornering sugar and thus it goes. The experience of one young man who has recently returned from the far north seems specific. "I went to the Klondike," he explained," to wrest a fortune from the bowels of the earth. I found my competitors in this direction were Swedes, and that I was no match for them at the pick and shovel. After rather hard experience I concluded to try my fortune in Dawson. I found there employment at the occupation in which I had been engaged in civilization. Subsequently I purchased mining property but this time a Swede did the 'wresting.' I superintended and found the scheme much more profitable."

***

"Lucky" Baldwin as a Reformer.

IT cannot yet be said that "Lucky" Baldwin's investments at Nome have proved particularly profitable. On the contrary he has sunk a great deal of coin without any return so far. In his saloon and gambling house enterprises he has had to repine his own ill-fate or the poverty of the camp for he has not made any money. In the meantime he has numerous prospectors with pack trains scouring the country on the lookout for ground that looks good enough to locate and record. Thus far 286 locations have been made in his name and he does not intend to stop until he has stakes on 1000 claims. As the fee is $2.50 for each location his investment in this direction will be pretty heavy. The motive that actuates Mr. Baldwin in thus locating the country side is purely philanthropic, he says. It is preposterous that the law should permit a man to do as he has done without exacting adequate compensation. By carrying the privilege to an extraordinary excess his idea is to draw attention to the abuse and thus secure its correction. An excellent motive, Mr. Baldwin.

***

Sir Michael Foster's Lectures.

IT cannot truly be said that the series of lectures by Sir Michael Foster electrified the students of Cooper Medical College. Appreciating the opportunity of hearing so great a man speak on the topic with which he is most prominently identified, the impression prevailed that he might have found a more profitable phase of it to talk on. The history of physiology seemed well enough for an after course to men who already had mastered physiology, but to students, the subject itself, the opportunities it offered for original research, and the best methods of study would have been much more advantageous. Sir Michael is certainly an able speaker and his narrative of the development of the science was excellently stated. The audiences at the evening lectures were made up chiefly of physicians. One night, in the middle of an impressive period the electric lights went out and there was a moment of darkness.

"I did not know that the lights were ever allowed to go out in San Francisco," he said.

Dr. Levi Lane was equal to the occasion.

"They have paled before a brighter luminary," he said.

***

The Huntington Pictures.

THE value of the Huntington collection of pictures which, according to the will, eventually reverts to the Metropolitan Museum, is variously estimated among the experts, but little is known of the canvases; indeed, it is said that there is no important collection in the country which is less familiar to writers on and lovers of art. The best of the canvases hang in the great hall and in the library of the Huntington mansion on Fifth avenue, New York, but there are at least 100 notable pictures in the gallery of the residence on California street. Though so little can be told of the collection Mr. Huntington was at all times willing, even delighted to show his treasures to any one who expressed a desire to see them. He was averse to newspaper descriptions of his home however. Latterly he made a specialty of portraits especially of the English school. One series of these hung in the San Francisco gallery and he was very proud of them, though the finest examples were in New York. The gem of the latter set is an exquisite little Sir Thomas Lawrence "Nature," which is quite the best example of that artist's work in America. There is a fine Vermeer of Delft whose pictures are rarer than those of any other Dutch painter. There is but one other in America, that presented to the museum by Henry Marquand. It seems Mr. Huntington had never heard of Vermeer when he purchased the picture. It was offered to him in Paris for $400 and he liked it and bought it. He made no pretence to expertness but he had fine taste and intuitive judgment. His test of a picture was its personal appeal to him, not the name of the artist. Among other notable pictures are Vibert's "The Missionary's Story," Troyon's "The Lane," said to be that artist's masterpiece; Paul Baudry's "Fortune and the Child," "The Spy" by Alphonse de Neuville. The San Francisco collection includes two superb Murillos, two Daubignys, a magnificent Corot and a superb Diaz, two Lenbachs, one a head of Bismarck, the other a picture of a naughty child, an excellent study; a very fine Turner and two examples of Greuze were also there. In view of the great curiosity aroused by the prospective gift an effort will be made to gain Mrs. Huntington's consent to the temporary exhibition of the pictures in the Metropolitan Museum when the new wing is opened next spring.

***

An Exhibition of Books.

THE Mechanics' Institute library has taken a step of great interest to book lovers in deciding to hold a loan exhibition of books and pictures illustrating the history of English literature. The exhibit will include the works of all the famous contributors to English literature for 600 years. There will be manuscripts of such men as Chaucer and Gowe, who wrote before the days of the printing press; first editions of Shakespeare and his contemporaries—dramatists, poets and prose writers; of Milton and Dryden and the piquant "Restoration" dramatists. Inasmuch as there has been recently a revival of interest in the "Complete Angler," there will doubtless be a long list of editions of Isaac Walton's most famous work. Queen Anne's reign vies with those of Elizabeth and Victoria as a notable epoch in English letters. Addison and Steele, Swift and Defoe, and Pope will be represented adequately. The early masters of fiction, Fielding and Smollett, will be given due space; as will the contemporaries of the great Dr. Johnston, Goldsmith, Sterne, Gibbon, Hume and many others.

* * *

With the year 1800 some rule of exclusion rather than inclusion will probably be put in force for the works of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Cowper, Southey, Lamb, Shelley, Byron, Keats, Scott, will press hard for space on the Victorians, Carlyle, Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot and the many other great names ending with Browning and Tennyson.

In the exhibition only rare and unusual editions will be presented; books, as a rule, unknown to the general reader even when his own copy of the particular work is well-thumbed. In addition to books there will be numerous rare engravings, photographs, fac-similes and other illustrations representing the authors themselves; their surroundings and the various artistic conceptions of the characters in their works. Not only will such an exhibition be of great educational advantage in calling attention to the great works which are less read than spoken about, but it will serve to show what treasures of literature San Francisco possesses.

***

The Press Club's New President.

THE Press Club has just passed through the throes of an annual election and now has Fred Myrtle for its president. Though he is temporarily out of the journalistic field, and officiating as chief deputy in the Recorder's office, Mr. Myrtle, unlike so many other members of the institution, is a veritable newspaper man and a good one. He is chiefly identified with the Bulletin whose court reporter he was for many years. He used also to furnish its syllabi of Supreme Court decisions and did it so excellently as to satisfy even the jurists whose opinions he summarized. I believe the new president has various plans for the Club which will be unfolded as time goes on. He should make a capital president for he is a bright talker and has a capital knack at story-telling.

BOSWELL, JR.

THE IMPERIAL CONSERVATORY OF ST. PETERSBURG has just issued a circular announcing the conditions of entrance for the year 1900-1901, one paragraph of which reads, "Jews will not be admitted to the conservatory unless they present from the chief of police a permit to live in St. Petersburg."

The Value of a Jury's Verdict

By George A. Brown

"I KNEW of a case once" said an old lawyer, "in which a good round million of dollars were involved, and besides this the honor of two eminently respectable men was at stake, that was decided by a pigeon.

"I was attorney for the defendants. The plaintiffs had cooked up a case that was most plausible, but absolutely without any warrant. They had no claim against my clients and not a shred of testimony was brought out to establish their demand. The jury retired to settle on their verdict. They were out for hours. My clients were rich, but not particularly popular. The plaintiffs were poor and insistent. Ballot after ballot was taken without an agreement being reached. The jury stood seven for the defendant and five for the plaintiff. There were a couple of fellows among the five who were inveterate gamblers. While in the jury room they occupied their time matching dimes, quarters, and halves, and finally the foreman appealed to them to be serious. They stopped for a moment. One of them stood looking idly out of the window at two pigeons on the roof of a house. Turning around he said to his companion: 'I'll tell you what I'll do. If the white pigeon flies away first we will both go over to the other side and stay there to a finish. If the black one flies first we will stay where we are to a finish.' The foreman afterwards told me that there were twelve pair of eyes watching those pigeons for the next five minutes with an intentness strong enough to have hypnotized them. The pigeons marched and strutted about in a most inviting way but refused to budge. Excitement in the jury room grew intense. A million dollars were at stake. Finally, as luck would have it, the white pigeon rose on its wings, the black following. The five for the plaintiffs was reduced to three, who came over after a few ballots, and rendered a unanimous verdict for my clients."

"If I have a bad case," continued the attorney "I always demand a jury trial. If I have a good case and the judge is at all fair I want no jury."

"Speaking of juries," said another lawyer, "reminds me of a case where the jury argued over the evidence for two hours and then concluded that they were not the judges of the fact, but of the law. On the first ballot after they had retired the juryman who engineered the scheme found he was the only one who voted for acquittal. Then he began his argument and he really succeeded in convincing the other eleven men that the Judge would have instructed them to convict if the facts warranted a conviction. He argued that the man was indicted for stealing a watch valued at $50 and that the testimony showed that the watch was only worth $25. This, he said, was petty larceny and as the man had been indicted for grand larceny he said there was nothing left for the jury to do but to acquit. Then they returned a verdict for acquittal. That is one of the strange things that juries do. They just do as they please, whether right or wrong.

"I remember another case," said an old lawyer who was present, "wherein the man on trial had been indicted for murder in the first degree. He had killed a girl. His counsel advised him to play the insanity dodge and he came into court every day with his head bent over and his eyes fixed upon the floor. His counsel argued that he was insane and was not responsible for his act. His trial lasted several days and when the jury retired one man wrote upon a slip of paper 'insane.' That was his ballot. The foreman of the jury called for another ballot, and then the juryman who had written 'insane' wrote it again and made a speech saying that this should be the verdict for the reason that the prisoner appeared to be insane and they ought to give him the benefit of the doubt!

"On the third ballot three jurors wrote the word 'insane.' Then a man got up and said that he believed that all insane men ought to be executed so they would do no bodily harm to any one else. Another juror replied that every one who committed murder was insane and that he, the juror, believed that the man ought to have been tried by a jury of physicians. Finally the foreman said: 'Gentlemen, we had better agree on a verdict of murder in the second degree and that is the same as insanity.' Thereupon another ballot was taken and the jury agreed upon murder in the second degree. That young man is now serving a life sentence.

"A good jury lawyer," said the attorney who opened the conversation, "is not alone the man who makes an eloquent appeal, but he must know and understand every man on the jury. In some cases it does not do to take a married man, in some cases you must weed out old men, in some cases you must reject men, otherwise fair, who belong to a particular religion or nationality. The best practitioner in a case where large stakes are at issue tries to find out the names, the habits, the surroundings and every obtainable fact concerning the jurymen serving in the court where his case is to be tried. If they have prejudices or preferences he must ascertain them; if he is a stubborn man with an inclination to be just or to be unjust he must know it. There are the details of the profession that the successful jury lawyer never overlooks."

Who Was Brown

Continued from page 4.

took no notice of me. It is pretty hard to follow me without my knowing it. Nobody was on my track. A good distance from the post office I opened my letter. There were the credits all right. I was so filthy that any banker would have looked askance at me in such dirty clothes. But I had to run that risk. I got the money, and bought myself a second-hand suit. They were a little too nice, and so I spilt some beer on the trousers and applied a handful of dust to the back of the coat. The sooner I left Munich the better, for now I was conscious, not that I was under surveillance, but that something was up. The Bavarian police in those days were all dunces, and you could scent one a mile off. They absolutely jostled me. How could they know that I had the clue to the business they were trying to unearth? I had even gradually made little changes in my appearance, cutting off my hair myself, not all at once, but little by little. I had trimmed my beard and curtailed my mustache. My metamorphose was gradual, not sudden.

"Why did I adopt such measures? If it had been known that I had been cognizant of the hack incident I should have been at once put under arrest, and even had I presented myself as a willing witness I stood the chance of six months' or a year's incarceration, for Bavarian justice is proverbially slow. I had my papers, of course, all right, as a journalist attached to The Thumper of London, so I had them viseed, and, hastening to the railroad depot, took the second-class to Paris via Strasbourg. I bought the evening papers and there was not a word in them of interest to me.

"Nothing happened on the cars. There was a station, some twenty-five miles from Strasbourg, which we reached next day, and here there was time allowed for a hurried breakfast at a railroad buffet. The room was crowded so I had to stand near the counter. While my meal was being served me I bought a Journal des Debats of the day before. As I did so I noted a man alongside of me who was taking a bowl of bouillon. We both were reading the same paper as we ate. There was nothing of interest in the first two pages, but on the third page there was. Then I read something which ran as follows:

"'The mystery of the hack, with the dead man in it, which event has been sedulously concealed by the Bavarian police, is now the talk of Munich. The solution of it is near, thanks to the indefatigable zeal of the authorities. The body has been identified. As there was money in gold in the pocket of the murdered man and a diamond ring of some value on his finger, it is believed that this was no common robbery, but was instigated by revenge, "cherchez la femme." The murdered gentleman bore a title and was well known as an habitue of several of the fastest clubs in Munich, and much given to playing cards for high stakes. To-morrow, at the furthest, your correspondent believes, from certain indications accessible to him alone, the murderers will be caught in the toils of justice. The on dit is that they are now on their way to France.'

"Just then I distinctly heard the click of a spoon, which rattled in my neighbor's soup bowl. He had dropped his paper. Mine I held as a screen before me, so that I could watch him thoroughly. For a hundred thousand millions of rubles—no, dollars I mean—it was the man who had tried to drive those horses in the Munich hack. He was elegantly gotten up, as would be a first-class passenger, quite a swell." Then Brown suddenly stopped.

"But the denouement? How did it end?" we asked.

"I dared not telegraph. I wrote two letters—anonymous, of course—and sent one to police headquarters in Munich, the other to the Rue de Jerusalem in Paris. In both I gave a clear description of the man. To the Munich authorities I indicated the exact spot where I had hidden the wallet. I gave the precise bearings, and told how I had taken 400f. I wrote it in French. I frankly explained my conditions, but with due precautions."

"And then?" we inquired.

"There was no Paris for me. I took a beeline north, and staid a while in Holland."

"And the other man?"

"Just as sure as can be something had startled him. Maybe I did. He, too, probably, gave Paris a wide berth. Now, if anyone of you would like to write it up, just consult some European files of paper of, say, ten years ago, and you will find some of the incidents, but you will be none the wiser."

"And the money—was it found?"

"Certainly it was—and it went, I suppose, to the relatives of the murdered man. But who it was who ran a Khirgis knife into the poor devil will never be known. My idea was that the man had been playing high at the club; had shown his money, and some escrods, with titles, had abducted him, so as to rob him. The trick was done in this way: He was inveigled, tipsy perhaps, into a hack standing, say, at the door of the club, to which were hitched a pair of fast horses, with confederates outside and inside. Maybe he was drugged, and was to have been pitched out after he had been fleeced. He was murdered through a blunder. The hack was found that night standing in an out-of-the-way street of Munich, with the dead man inside, but nothing ever was heard about the horses."

"That is all, gentlemen," said Brown, "only the Bavarian police were duller than donkeys. Good evening," and so Brown left us.

* * * * *

Sometime afterward I met an old newspaperman, who having retired from journalism, represents a firm whose machines find a ready sale in Russia. He told some interesting details of the recent coronation at Moscow, describing the pageant, its magnificence, and he wound up in this way: "At the very fag end of the procession, with the police, there was a man with several orders on his uniform, whose quick glances seemed to shoot all around him. He spotted me, one man in the thousands, and may be you don't know I never forget a face, nor, as for that, a name. It was a mutual recognition, and, as sure as can be, it was Brown, or whatever he called himself. His face had a hard look, but he complimented me with a passing smile. But I never liked the man, and did not respond. I say it has always been a question with me whether Brown, according to his story, only took the small amount he mentioned from the pile and buried the rest, or what hand he had in the business."

"Then," I said, "poor little Jo Pettit was right when he insisted that Brown was a Russian spy."

"I do not think that can be questioned," said the friend who had just returned from Moscow.

The Modern Hotel.

Continued from page 13.

life on small sums per week. In the Mills Hotels in New York the price of a sleeping-room with bath and sitting-room privileges is twenty cents a day and meals are fifteen cents each. These meals are served in courses and more than he can eat is given each guest. Counting permanent and transient guests, the five score high-class hotels in the city of New York take care of about 50,000 people every day. The lowest estimate made by three representative hotel men places the average price paid for rooms and board at $6.25 a day. At that rate the receipts are $312,500 a day, or $114,062,500 a year. This hotel population could live in houses like the Mills Hotels for $32,500 a day, or $11,862,500 a year. Figuring on that basis, $280,000 a day, or $102,200,000 a year is paid for luxury.

GERMANY'S COLONIES.—The expense of the German Government of the African Colonies, together with Kiao-Chao in the Far East, the Caroline and Samoa Islands in the South Seas, and German New Guinea and its dependencies, is estimated at close upon £1,500,000 for 1900, the Imperial Treasury being asked to grant in subsidies a sum nearly double that required last year. Great efforts have been made to encourage German trade with the African colonies, and considerable success has been attained in Southwest Africa, where the total value of goods imported from Germany amounted to £244,187, as against £181,961 in the previous year.

The Little Clock of Bougival

From the French of Alphonse Daudet

SHE was a little mantle-clock of the Second Empire, made of Algerian onyx, ornamented with paintings by Campani. She had been bought on the Boulevard des Italiens with her gilded key hanging to her neck by a pink ribbon. She was a real article de Paris, delicate, dainty, refined, with a sweet voice to tell the hours, but possessing not a grain of common sense, capricious, foolish, thoughtless, ringing the time in a devil-may-care fashion, forgetting the half-hours, unable to get anything straight except the five o'clock tea of Madame. When war broke out, she was spending the summer months at Bougivalle and she seemed made expressly for those fragile summer cottages, pretty fly-cages of cut paper, furnished all in muslin and lace on sky blue background. When the Bavarians arrived, she was one of the first taken away and it must be acknowledged that those German soldiers are mighty good packers for the little toy-clock, hardly bigger than a pigeon-egg, after traveling from Bougival in cars laden with artillery, arrived at Munich without a crack and was able to display herself one morning in the show-case of Augustus Cohn, merchant of curiosities, still fresh and coquettish, her slender little hands still in place and her gilded key hanging from her neck by a new ribbon.

The Illustrious Doctor-Professor Otto von Schwanthaler.

The arrival of the little French clock created a profound sensation in Munich. The good people of this city had never yet seen a Bougiral clock and every one came to look at her with curiosity. In front of the store of August Cohn, three rows of long pipes smoked night and day and the good people asked themselves with eyes round with surprise and many "mein Gotts" of what use this singular little machine could well be. The illustrated papers reproduced drawings of her, her picture was in all the stores and it was in her honor that the illustrious Doctor-Professor Otto von Schwanthaler wrote his famous "Paradox on Time-Pieces," a philosophic-humouristic essay in 1200 pages in which is treated the influence of clocks upon peoples. Therein it is demonstrated logically that a nation so mad as to regulate the employment of its time by such crazy, fool time-pieces as the little clock of Bougival should expect all sorts of catastrophes, just as a vessel might which should go to sea with a deranged compass.

Germans always doing everything carefully, the illustrious Doctor-Professor before writing his "Paradox" thought it proper to have the subject of his study beneath his eyes in order to examine it thoroughly and analyze it minutely, as the entomologist dissects the bug; so he bought the little clock and thus it happened that she passed from the show-case of Augustus Cohn to the salon of the illustrious Doctor-Professor Otto von Schwanthaler, Conservator of the Munich Royal Picture Gallery, Member of the Academy of Sciences and Fine Arts, 24 Ludwig Strasze.

The Salon of the Schwanthalers.

The first thing that struck a visitor on entering the drawingroom of the Schwanthalers —a drawing-room academic and severe like a lecture hall—was a great, solemn black-marble clock, filled with complicated mechanisms and surmounted with a bronze statue of Polyninia. The principal face of this clock was surrounded with a multitude of smaller faces that told the minutes, the seconds, the weeks, the months, the seasons, everything, even to the phases of the moon, realistically represented by a little red moon in a blue cloud. The creak and grind of this powerful machine filled the house. From the bottom of the stairs one could hear the heavy pendulum swinging in a dignified, emphatic movement that seemed to cut up life in a whole lots of little pieces all of the same size; beneath this sonorous tretae could be heard the trepidations of the small second hand rushing around with the feverish energy of a little spider that knows the value of time. At intervals, the hour sounded, sinister and slow, and everytime it did, something took place in the house of the Schwanthalers. The professor, laden with papers and documents, started for the museum; or Frau Schwanthaler with her three daughters, who looked like hop-poles, came back from church or there was a guitar lesson, or a drawing or gymnastic or cooking lesson; pianos were opened, or sewing-machines began to whirr—everything was so well regulated, so methodical and systematic that, to hear the Schwanthalers put themselves in motion at the first stroke, to see them enter the house or go out by the wide-open doors, one was reminded irresistibly of the procession of apostles of the big clock of the Strasbourg cathedral, and half-expected to see at the last stroke the whole Schwanthaler family file in and disappear into their clock. Singular influence of the Bougival clock on a steady family of Munich.

Beside this ponderous monument, the little clock of Bougival was placed. The contrast can be imagined. One evening, as the Schwanthaler ladies were embroidering in the drawing-room and the doctor-professor was reading to his colleagues of the academy of sciences the first pages of his "Paradox," taking up at times the little French clock to illustrate some of his statements, Eva von Schwanthaler was suddenly taken with a diabolical inspiration.

"Oh, papa, make it ring!" she said with a blush.

The doctor untied the key, gave two turns with it and, right away, there was heard a tiny crystalline ring, so clear and joyful that a flutter of gayety suddenly thrilled the grave assemblage. All eyes began to shine.

"How pretty! how pretty!" exclaimed the Schwanthaler frauleins with an animated air, and a shaking of their tresses which was the first expression of vivacity or excitement they had ever been known to give.

But the professor cried in a triumphant voice:

"Look at the little French fool. She is marking three and ringing 8 o'clock!"

Everyhody laughed and, although it was late, the gentlemen started off on endless philosophical cogitations upon the frivolity of the French people. Nobody thought of going. Nobody even heard the great clock ring the terrible stroke of ten, which usually dispersed all gatherings. The big clock could not understand. She had never seen so much jollity in the Schwanthaler home, nor people in the drawing-room so late. And when, at last, the Schwanthaler frauleins had gone up into their rooms, they felt hungry from this unaccustomed excess of laughter and even sentimental Minna murmured:

"I wouldn't mind having a bit of crab salad."

Be Gay, My Children, Be Gay!

Once wound up, the little French clock fell back into her irregular ways, her habits of dissipation. At first the Schwanthalers laughed at its crazy tricks, but little by little from hearing the devil-may-care chime at all times and seasons, the dignified household began to lose all respect for time and to pass the days in amiable carelessness. They thought of nothing but amusement; life seemed so short now that all hours were mixed up. Everything was topsy-turvy—no more sermons, no more study; instead, a continual longing for amusement and excitement. Mendelssohn and Schumann became too monotonous; they were superseded by Offenbach and Meilhae and the frauleins banged away and hopped about all day long. The professor himself, taken with some sort of vertigo, was yelling all the time: "Be gay, children, be gay!" As for the great black-marble clock, it ceased to be heard. One of the frauleins had stopped the pendulum upon the pretext that it kept them from sleeping and the whole household began to mark time to the caprice of the little French clock.

It was then that the famous "Parodox on clocks" appeared. On this occasion the Schwanthalers gave a grand soiree, not one of the dignified entertainments of yore, but a magnificent masked ball in which Frau Schwanthaler and the frauleins appeared as "canotieres" of Bougiral in short sleeves, short skirts and little flat hats flamboyantly beribboned. The whole town talked of it, but it was only the beginning. Comedies, tableaux, suppers, "roulette" parties followed each other in breathless succession that winter in the drawing-room of the professor before the astounded eyes of scandalized Munich. "Be gay, children, be gay!" repeated the good man, now more and more exhilarated, in fact, everybody was gay. Frau von Schwanthaler, delighted with the success she obtained in her costume of canoist now passed her days upon the Isar river, clad in the most extravagant dresses. The frauleins, left alone at home, were taking French lessons from French officers, prisoners in the city, and the little clock, believing herself back in Bougival, rang off the hours with ludicrous disregard of regularity. Invariably when it was three, did she ring eight.

Then, one morning, this whirlwind of mad gayety took off the whole Schwanthaler family to America whither the best Titians of the imperial picture gallery followed in his flight their illustrious conservator.

* * *

Conclusion.

After the departure of the Schwanthalers there began in Munich an epidemic in scandals. A mother superior eloped with a lyric tenor; the dean of the institute married a ballet girl; an Aulie Councillor broke the bank, and the convent of the ladies of the nobility was closed by the police for nocturnal uproar.

It seemed as if the little clock was a fairy and was bewitching all Bavaria. Everywhere that she passed, everywhere her clear saucy note rang out, a strange madness came over the people. One day, from hand to hand, she came at last to the royal residence, and after that, do you know what manuscript King Ludwig, that out-and-out Wagnerian, had always on his piano? Tannhauser? No—"La Fille de Mme. Angot!"

Translated by James Hopper.

Joe Lathrop's Nerve.

IT was down in New Mexico in the palmy days of the cheerful pastimes the citizens of that region were wont to indulge in that Joe Lathrop was called upon to exercise nerve of a peculiar brand. Joe had come into that delectable country with $500 in gold, which he was very solicitous about, for it was his intention to make his fortune with it by investing it in a gold mine a friend of his said he had discovered, a few miles from Pueblo. Joe and his friend, with other travellers, were on their way to Pueblo in the coach that carried the mail, and it was suddenly stopped in one of the wildest spots in all that country, and three rough looking individuals, each at the butt end of a rifle, ordered the passengers to tumble out and line up, with their hands above their heads. One of the three robbers was set to guard the held-up passengers, with emphatic instructions to blow a hole through the first one of them that moved hand or foot, while the other two looted the stage. Joe was scared. He had stood there in a strained position for five minutes, looking square into the muzzle of a rifle, when he rolled his eyes downward to get a more pleasing thing to look at, but he didn't. He saw a centipede at least eight inches long, one of the terrors of that region, hurrying along directly toward town.

"It was soon at the tip of his shoe, but to his intense relief, it avoided the obstacle and passed on. It only went as far as his heel, though. Then it climbed upward, and the hideous and deadly thing was climbing his leg under his trousers, as he knew by the pricking of the long rows of shap claws in his flesh. Joe knew that the least movement he made would disturb the sensitive and acrimonious varmint and it would instantly sink every one of its many claws into his flesh and squirt into his blood from each claw its quota of deadly venom. And then Joe stood, doubly held up. If he moved a hand the desperado on guard would fill him with lead. If he moved a muscle of his leg the centipede would fill him with poison. Slowly the centipede climbed the leg, leaving its itching, burning track in the flesh, something in itself almost beyond human endurance. Joe didn't know how soon the centipede might get mad at something and sock its venom points into him anyhow, but he did know that the robber would soon be through with searching the stage and then begin going through his pockets, while the centipede was exploring him, thus disturbing it and inducing its stinging him.

"The centipede made its way deliberately up one leg, then across Joe's back to the other leg down which it moved more deliberately still, pausing now and then as if it had a notion to go up again. It did start up the leg once, and Joe was on the point of dropping his hand in hope that the robber would put him out of his misery by shooting him, when the centipede turned and went down again, and kept on going until it came out at the bottom of the trouser's leg and went scurrying away. Joe shut his eyes and gave one long breath, and was on the point of relieving himself with a yell, let the consequences be what they might, when the individual with the rifle exclaimed:—

"'Say, pard! you got more nerve than a six-hoss wagon could lug! Damned if I could a

Continued on page 18.

IN THE SWIM.

Regatta Work at Cowes.

REGATTA work at Cowes was dull. It rained, it blew so that no one dared appear without a mackintosh. Still worse were the signs of mourning—mourning for the Duke of Luxe-Coburg for relations killed in South Africa. Every second person was dressed in black, every flag was half-masted, and on Sunday a funereal feeling pervaded the entire town. However, the clerk of the weather repented of his evil ways on Tuesday, and provided a fine day and a fresh breeze. All the world was out of doors, but as might be expected the smart society women were gowned in sombre tones. Black serge and black cloth were almost a livery; and hats were either a white straw sailor with a black band round it, a neat black toque, or a white cloth yachting cap. Lady Londonderry looked well in black serge, as did also Lady Fanny Stanhope. Lady Mary Sackville was, as always, picturesque, with wide muslin collar and picture hat. Lady Dudley was very neatly dressed in black and white, and Lady Evelyn Ward, her beautiful sister-in-law, looked charming in cream-white. The usual entertainments of the week were conspicuous only by their absence, but there were a few quiet luncheons and dinners, and the Hungarian Band certainly tended to the gaiety of Cowes.

Denunciations of Newport.

Its an amusing controversy that has been started over Rev. Braddin Hamilton's sermon at Newport in which he held up to the millionaire set the necessity of remembering that it is the cynosure of all good American eyes. He emphasized the fact that good Americans read the society slush in the dailies and that the morals of the nation were being endangered by the character of diversion in which the "smart set" indulged. He alluded to Sunday golf, tennis and polo. This was bad enough but here cometh Thomas Nelson Page who has gone out of his way to search society declaring that the "400," so called, is not the real society which our true American manhood and womanhood recognize as the fulfillment of their social ideals." My, my. Whereupon Elbridge T. Gerry comes to the rescue of the bleating millionaire flock and declares it is all nonsense. Society people don't gamble, and don't desecrate the Sabbath. Their amusements are rational; their entertainments and costumes tend to keep busy innumerable poor people. Their diversions distribute large sums of money. Lespensard Stewart, another leader of the bon ton, thinks Newport harbors fewer corrupting influences than any fashionable place, either in America or Europe. The handful of people who attempt to extract a little pleasure out of life do so, he believes in a quiet and decorous way.

Gertrude Atherton's Dictum.

Mrs. Atherton, who has also been heard from, contrives to be very sensible on the subject and derides the idea that the example of Newport is liable to corrupt the country. The great mass has something else to think about, she declares, and, moreover, it will take a force several thousand times stronger than Newport's example to de-knob the Puritan backbone of this country. The United States is one huge network of religious semi-religious and temperance societies. To these millions Newport is but a place on the map with a round tower and other historical associations. And as for its example to the fashionable circles of other American cities, the leisure class anywhere is quite capable of originating its own deviltry. It may be grateful for a hint, but it gets on just as well without it."

All of which is very true. It has become the custom in the New York press to give large show and big headlines to whatever happens in society. It is part of the yellow journal's creed that the public is wildly interested in the doings of the Vanderbilt-Astor combination. The millionaires naturally resent the publicity conferred on them which they declare they do not deserve. They seem to show a desire to mind their own business and suggest that their affairs are really their own, after all. In this view the sensational clergyman and the reporters declare to agree—hence the fool controversies to which we have been treated.

A Trilby Party.

There was a Trilby party at Ashbury Park recently. A "Trilby party" may be otherwise described as a much show of feet. The season has been gay at Ashbury, but donkey parties had begun to pall, progressive euchre had lost its charm, the Saturday evening hop had become stale, flat and unprofitable. There was a demand for something new. The bench show was proposed and accepted.

Three judges were appointed and three prizes obtained. The judges studied pedal anatomy and obtained a physician and chiropodist to coach them. The contest took place in the dining-room of the hotel. Several sheets were sewed together and these served as a curtain. Behind this screen on a platform were the contestants, twelve in number. At 9 o'clock, with the dining-room thronged with guests, the master of ceremonies announced that the show was open. Twelve dainty ankles protruded from a profusion of lace skirts, and the spectators were invited to come forward and examine them. Familiarities with the contesting feet were sternly barred by the master of ceremonies Up and down the line, several times, walked the spectators passing judgment or criticism on the feet. After five minutes review, Mr. Schroeder announced that the judges would now take their turn, and determine who were the prize winners. Muffled laughter came from behind the curtain at times, as the examiners picked up some particular foot in order to study its anatomy more closely. It was observed that the extensor brevis digitorum of one contestant's foot was not sufficiently developed and that there was a depression in the plantar region. At last the judges came to a foot that seemed entitled to first prize. All studied it earnestly. They noted that the abductor minimi digiti was all right; that the os cuboides were of the proper size and that the os naviculare was perfect. To the owner was awarded the first prize, a gold necklace. After this the determination as to the second and third prizes, a breastpin and a pair of silk stockings, was an easy matter. It was the privilege of the judges to tie the blue, red and yellow ribbons, representing first, second and third prizes, on the ankles of the winners, and this they did while the orchestra played "Ben Bolt."

The curtain was drawn aside after the contestants had donned their footwear. In the excitement one contestant lost one of her slippers, but it was afterward recovered. The winner of the first prize is a young woman very well known and decidedly popular at the beach.

New Palaces in New York.

New York has the most luxurious homes in the world. Nowhere else are to be found private residences and apartment-houses furnished with such up-to-date conveniences. One of the latest innovations is in a private residence being built on Riverside Drive, where a private infirmary is being equipped in the most approved fashion. The sick room intended for members of the family is an exact reproduction of a hospital ward. It is furnished with the most approved couches, the furniture is made wholly of metal and glass, and all the appliances for illness are kept on hand. The floors and walls are of marble, and the apartment is equipped with fans and ventilating arrangements. The same house contains a billiard room, gymnasium, studio and roof garden.

Many private houses in New York have roof gardens, which may be reached by rapid electric elevators. The up-to-date mansion nowadays must also have an automobile annex. This differs from an ordinary stable in many ways. In addition to its serving as a store-house the annex is usually equipped with a dynamo for rationing the automobiles and a machine stop for making repairs.

Residences with dark rooms for amateur photographers are a novelty. Private Turkish baths are not uncommon. There are also private barber shops which consist of a regular barber's chair with mirrors, basins, and other fittings. One of the latest ideas in building houses is to construct the kitchen, bathrooms, and laundries without corners, all rounded, so that no dirt may collect and the room may be kept thoroughly cleaned. A first-class house has at least three baths, two for the family

Continued on page 20.

MEDITATIONS OF A MATRON.

BY MRS. CRICKET.

I FEAR, my dear Diary, that there is but little news for you this week. Most of our friends have settled down into the humdrum life of between seasons. Nowadays, all girls know how to sew, so the dressmaker is in the house making a few gowns for small dinners, dances, luncheons, and the more elaborate arrangements in which one helps to receive at teas. Very few girls get all their clothes made out. I think it used to be great fun having Leila, mama and me pitch in and work with a dressmaker. As a rule mama would get another seamstress to help, and the amount done was simply wonderful. I had pretty nice clothes too. Now things are different, and I am not half so interested in what I wear. It is a question of the dressmaker telling me what I should have, and I, profiting by her superior judgment, ordering it. It should be superior; I pay a price for superior judgment.

Leila's trousseau is all ready. She, however, has again put off the date of her wedding. Her last idea is to be married on the first of January, 1901. Robert is very angry. I do not know how her fiance feels, but he has allowed Leila all the privileges of either an heiress or an only child. It would not surprise me if Leila never married at all. That would be the expected, however, and the expected has to live up to the platitude of being unexpected if it wishes to take place. She goes East next week and then to Europe with Aunt Sybil who anticipates returning from South America on the fifteenth. They wish to see the end of the Paris Exposition. Robert and I may go too, but it is not quite settled yet. Sometimes it strikes me that I am too young to be married, and have to settle down. I might not mind so much if I had a house but living in a hotel is awful. Twice last week I telephoned Robert I would not be back for dinner. He dined alone. He was very nice about it, went so far as go to a restaurant, so it would not suggest itself to the people we know in the hotel that I was neglecting him. Had we a house, I should never have done such a thing. I suppose he will get tired of me and my exactions after a little. Mama says he is a man of such wonderful tact. When mama says that, I judge that I am being gently treated to a little careful management. I hope with so much management, and so many people anxious to make me a nice first-class wife, that I shall not be absolutely ruined. I always think of the advice that the colored man gave to Arthur, "Mister Arthur," he said, "there are two people to marry, a wife and a woman. When you marry, see you marry a wife."

I am afraid Robert married a woman.

The Holbrooks and Knights have gone to Europe. I wrote to Harry to know had he gone to select Olive's trousseau or his own. You know Harry has excellent taste, and is most particular that Olive wear clothes that are becoming to her. I do not want to hint of Olive's engagement for I know there is no truth in the rumor, so far as Harry is concerned. I shall say nothing, except that it is not the girl that most people suspect.

The engagement has just been announced of Miss May Hooper and Dr. George B. Somers. Dr. Somers just arrived from Europe Friday last. He is a really clever young man and has done a great deal of good work during the time he was head of the Emergency hospital in San Francisco. He also attended to all the work of the Doctor's Daughters. That I consider the most praiseworthy charity in town. I am a member of it. May Hooper is the sort of girl that will make any man happy. She is musical and well read and I for one can congratulate Dr. Somers.

So many of the girls are complaining at present of the interviews that have been written up, purposedly coming from them, in one of the morning papers. Reporters come to see all of us. That is part of life in San Francisco. Most of us see them, and are decently civil, but we certainly do not air ourselves in that chirpy, undignified manner of which we read next morning in the paper. I felt horrible because one came to see me, and asked me some questions about golf and Del Monte. The interview next morning was so absurd I could hardly keep Robert from going down to the newspaper office and attacking the editor. Editors have the whip-hand of one, so the easiest thing to do is remain quiet and let one's friends forget all about it.

Now that Henry Miller has gone all of us are crying for some good show. Everyone in town went wild over "The Only Way." It was very fine, I suppose, but I did not enjoy it particularly. The men pleased me but the women could never have made me sufficiently interested in them to cause me any tears. Most of the people around me were deeply affected. But I think people like to weep, especially at the theatre. So far as I am concerned the "Tyranny of Tears" was infinitely sadder. Just think how much more to be pitied the husband was in that than either Mimi or Sidney Carton, for was not his a living agony? We all know that his wife would only turn over a new leaf for a few days.

* *

So far as the golf links are concerned things are pretty quiet. It is too windy to play at the Presidio. Maude Mullins, who was, perhaps, the most faithful player out there, has gone to London to visit Mrs. Charles Wyndham, wife of the celebrated actor. She will meet some of the most interesting people during her stay, and be received at the best golf clubs in both England and Scotland. Ella Morgan won the cup for "putting" at Del Monte. She did exceedingly good work and made the links in forty-two. Therese came in second. I believe were Ella to work she would be one of our first-class players Most of her time, however, is spent at music. Caro Crockett still plays every day at Burlingame. I hear that Mr. Douty's house has been sold. We shall miss Mrs. Douty and her niece very much. In San Rafael the faithful players still go out every morning. Mrs. Gilman Brown, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Green and Julia Buckbee and the Gerstles never miss a day. Julia had a card party last week. Cards have really been awfully popular this summer. I think that there were at least forty parties since the first of June.

Now, Diary dear, this is all for the present, I do wish someone would do something so I could tell you about it.

How to Succeed at Journalism

A Frank Talk to a Man we Don't Know

MANY young men are confronted with a wife who must be adorned with bric-a-brac and fed with nick-nacks and a son and heir who clamors loudly for food and attention. Fifteen dollars per week is not calculated to satisfy a craving for diamond jewelry or diamond back terrapin poulette, but the fifteen-dollar-a-week young man may increase his income, and satisfy his appetite unless the latter also increases and outruns his income. Here is a letter from a young man seeking advice:

Editor Wave, Dear Sir:

I am a young man engaged as a reporter on a morning paper. My wages are fifteen dollars per week. I have a wife and child to support, and this barely suffices. I work about twelve hours a day; and write articles advocating eight hours work for every other kind of labor except my own. If I had eight hours work I might put in four or five hours keeping books for small stores, but all of my time is taken up. What would you advise me to do?

Yours truly,
Old Ned.

First we would advise this young man to stop being truthful—be scoopful. A scoopful reporter is never a fifteen-dollar man. The very first morgue case you are detailed to write up must be made to yield a sensation. Involve some wealthy or influential man who may have had a vague acquaintance with the subject on the slab. Just a bare acquaintance is enough. Then you may begin this way:

"Stretched on a cold marble slab in the public morgue lies the dead and festering body of a woman once fair, once happy. The grim hand of Sin (with a capital S) has pencilled on her poor, wan face the story of her life, more faithfully and accurately than words could portray and they preach a sermon that is an old, old story, the dominant tone of which rings out a denunciation of man's inhumanity, etc."

Then you can introduce the "gazing, curious crowd," the "calloused souled attendants," and the like. Indeed, it might heighten the effect to have the deputy coroner with the "calloused heart" drop a tear or two over this particular case. You draw a picture of the subject's childhood, of her downfall, of the end, and then rush off to the home of the prominent citizen who once knew the woman. Here you want to be careful. Your interview should read:

"Mr. Proudpurse was found in his elegant home on Van Ness avenue, utterly oblivious of the dead girl on the slab. At first he refused to be interviewed and finally the reporter dragged out of him the admission that he once had been slightly acquainted with a person of her name."

Note every quiver of his eye. If his eye does not quiver or his hand does not clench or his color does not change, note it any how, because he probably did all of these things without your noticing it. Then you can also say:

"It was evident Mr. Proudpurse was not anxious to have his name mentioned in this connection, but justice must be done. He vigorously denied having known the dead woman, except casually twenty years ago, but behind his denials it was evident he was attempting to conceal something."

You should badger Mr. Proudpurse to a certain limit and possibly he will throw you out on the street. This would be a great victory for you, and you can cite "his rage at having his relations with the dead woman made known." Request an interview with his wife. Of course he will refuse point blank. Use this unwillingness by saying:

Mr. Proudpurse was anxious that his connection with the woman's death should not be made known to his wife, and refused to permit the reporter to see the lady. It is regreted that Mrs. Proudpurse knows nothing of the affair. She is a delicate little lady and a fear is expressed that the shock of such an occurrence as this, if known to her, would kill her."

Then interview some of Mrs. Proudpurse's relatives. You will always find some sister-in-law or cousin-in-law or something or other-in-law who "always suspected Mr. Proudpurse." She will possibly put you on the trail of something to be used in the next issue. She will cry copiously over her sister's misfortune, but her tongue will be wagging all the while. She will furnish you with a picture of Mr. P. and the family. If you cannot secure photographs by this means, any picture will do.

If you secure one or two scoops like this, and don't involve any friend of the paper, you will soon cease to be a fifteen per week young man.

Then as a side issue you might study the style of Wm. Dean Howells, Max O'Rell and other prominent men and contribute to the Sunday editorial page a letter from one of these gentlemen on some insane subject like,

"Does love ease the pain of soft corns and ingrowing toe-nails?"

"Are women more gentlemanly than men?"

You must get up something after this fashion:

When we drink water are we really taking our forefathers into our stomachs? Now you know that a human being is seventy-five per cent water. Where does it go when we die? You remember Durrant was cremated down at Los Angeles. He practically went up in vapor. Vapor is always precipated to earth. The people of Los Angeles have probably drank him up before now. And so on.

You might pursue this subject with great effect and ring the changes variously on old lines, such as this: "Imperial Cæsar dead and turned to clay may serve as chink to keep the wind away," to something like this: "Imperial Cæsar dead and in a climate hotter, may serve to keep Spring Valley stocked with drinking water." There is no end to such a subject. Think of Spring Valley crowding Cæsar and Brutus, Napoleon, etc., etc., into galvanized iron pipes and selling them by the gallon.

And then for the yellow Sunday supplement you might grind out a few jokes like this:

Democrat—Bryan is a peerless statesman and orator. He will sweep McKinley off the face of the earth with the force of Niagara.

Republican—Bryan is a good deal like Niagara falls.

Democrat—In what way, sir?

Republican—He never will dry up. Wouldn't it jar you?

Then here is another.

Fond mother (to nurse)—"Mary, what is Reggie eating?"

Nurse—"He's eating a fig, ma'am."

Fond mother—"Well, don't let him swallow the seeds."

Then here is another.

Her Waists Were Not Low Cut.

Swellington (to Miss Hauton at the inaugural ball)—We don't see as much of you these days as we used to.

Miss Hauton—No, the doctor told me that the low-cut corsage was responsible for more pneumonia than any other form of exposure. So I must be careful.

Now, my dear young man, we have gone to some pains to advise you, and we hope before Mr. Bryan is elected President that you will have reached a ripe old age and an over-ripe salary. Stick to your profession. It is a noble calling, but set your boy to driving a truck or some other light occupation.

Be versatile, but don't be particular. Facts are the bones, invention is the muscle and romance is the meat of all good newspaper scoops. If facts are in your way avoid them, and lock truth up in a safe deposit vault, then lose the key. Follow this advice and you will soon cease to be a fifteen per young man.

PALMER BROWNE.

Chips from the Scientific Workshop

A DANGEROUS HABIT.—La Nature reports the curious origin of an epidemic of tuberculosis at Karkow, a city in Russia. An unusual number of cases of consumption were noticed among the municipal officers and clerks. Some accidental suggestion finally led to a bacteriological examination of the library where the city records were kept. It was found that the departmental archives were literally covered with tubercule bacilli. Further investigation traced them to a consumptive employe, whose work had led him to consult the archives very frequently, and who had the common habit of wetting his fingers with salivh to facilitate the turning of the pages, on each one of which he thus deposited a colony of bacilli.

A New Material for Paper-Making.

In the present state of the paper-making industry, when the demand for paper is abnormally great, and the supply of material for its manufacture unprecedentedly scarce, it is interesting news that a mill has been started south of New Orleans to convert into paper the stalks of sugar-cane after the sugar has been extracted. There are from three to fiv million tons of "bagasse," as the exhausted cane is called, turned out of the mills every year, and how to utilize it has been a problem to Louisiana planters for generations. In some mills it is used for fuel, but this has not been considered a profitable way of disposing of it. Although several years ago the suggestion was made that "bagasse" would make as good a material for the manufacture of paper as wood pulp, nothing practical has been done hitherto. A diffusion plant is used in the new factories, and the cane is turned out in dry chips, which are in much better condition for paper manufacture than the soft crushed cane as it comes from the ordinary sugar factories.

Boring Metal Plates With Water.

Some fairly successful experiments have recently been made in drilling holes in and engraving on metal by means of electrolytic solutions. A nozzle of special construction was used. The lower end, which is pressed against the metal plate, is divided into two compartments, through which the electrolytic fluid flows. The upper end has two openings; through one the electrolyte flows in, down to the lower end against the plate, and finally up and out of the other. The end of the nozzle, which is pressed against the plate to be drilled, is fitted with a rubber washer, whose shape determines that of the hole bored. A strong electric current is caused to flow through the plate into the electrolyte and back to the source of electricity. The nozzle circulation of the electrolyte in the nozzle carries off the metal as fast as the electrolyte liberates it. Some of the best results for iron were obtained with sulphuric acid as the electrolyte, but good work was also done with ordinary salt water.

Joe Lathrop's Nerve.

Continued from page 16.

stood that feller a wigglin' over me myself!

"That cold-blooded reprobate had seen the centipede go up into Joe's trouser's leg, and knew all the while what Joe was suffering, and just stood there and watched what the result was going to be! The robbers made off as soon as they had secured all the plunder, and the looted stage and passengers went on to Pueblo. And that was the sort of nerve Joe Lathrop had to have with him that memorable day.

Fainting Spells

Are peculiar to women. Men rarely faint. Many women are liable to what they term "fainting spells," and this liability is always most marked at the monthly period. This alone is sufficient to connect the "fainting spell" with a deranged or diseased condition of the womanly organs. The use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures irregularity, heals inflammation and ulceration, and stops the drains which weaken the body. It builds up the nervous system, increases the vital powers, and so removes the common causes of faintness in women. There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription;" neither does it contain opium, cocaine, nor any other narcotic.

"It gives me much pleasure," writes Miss Ella Sapp, of Jamestown, Guilford Co., N.C., "to thank Dr. Pierce for the great good received from the use of his 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I had suffered for three years or more at monthly periods. It seemed as though I would die with pain in my back and stomach. I could not stand on my feet without fainting; had given up all hope of ever being cured, when one of my friends insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. With but little faith I tried it, and before I had taken half a bottle I felt better, had better appetite and slept better. Now I have taken two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and am happy to say I am entirely cured, and all done in two months' time, when all other medicines had failed to say good."

The Sign of the Peacock

229 GEARY ST.

Theatre Suppers

Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast

ORDERS DELIVERED

MRS. SACHT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

DIRECTIONS.—Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT
Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave.; off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:
Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt
708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.
Telephone Polk 1321
Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.
Mrs. Hansen, 141 Clara Street

VAMOS A MEXICO

A PERSONALLY CONDUCTED
EXCURSION TRAIN
OF PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
WILL BE RUN BY THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY
TO THE
CITY OF MEXICO
LEAVING
San Francisco, Wednesday, Nov. 14
Los Angeles the following day
ROUND TRIP TICKETS
From San Francisco . $80
From Los Angeles . . . $70
GOOD FOR 60 DAYS
RATES FROM OTHER POINTS IN PROPORTION

Most delightful season of the year in the quaint old republic. Complete arrangements for cheap side trips.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS, INQUIRE OF
AGENT S P CO. AT DEPOT

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:
For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.
For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Sept. 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, Oct. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. Sept. 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Oct. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. Sept. 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, Oct. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.
For further information obtain company's folder.
The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.
TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel),
San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company
Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, September 19, at 2 p. m.
S. S. Moana for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday October 3, at 8 p. m.
Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.
TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Topical Verse

Ode to Discontent.

'NEATH the shade of a haystack Populist sat
A-twisting the brim of his last Summer's hat,
And trying to lighten his mind of a load
By humming the words of the following ode:
Oh, for free silver—oh, for a change—
Oh, for McKinley in rifle-shot range—
Oh, for a crack at the National banks—
Oh, for a chance at Plutocracy's ranks—
And so he kept oh-ing for all he had not,
Not contented with owing for all that he'd got.

Town Topics.

The Shirt-Waist Man.

THE shirt waist man is coming—he is strutting into view,
His smile of satisfaction shows he's made his mind up, too.
He wears a look that marks the soul of coolest comfort blest.
He doesn't care what people think—he's doffed his coat and vest.
And now he is devising diplomatic means and ways
Of introducing pantaloons to wear on rainy days.

The shirt waist man—hurra for him! Now let him set the pace,
And give some cooler clothing to one-half the human race.
Let's have a shirt waist with short sleeves and lace insertion, so
They'll catch the faintest sort of breeze that e'er was known to blow.
And don't forget, O tailorman, you must abbreviate
The trousers, so that all the men may be in coolest state.

—Baltimore American.

A Familiar Crank.

"HE hurled anathemata and invectives by the score,
And madly raged and tore his hair and violently swore
And raised a great disturbance in the circumambient air
As he yelled: 'Keep out of China, for we've got no business there!'

"'We've got to take our horns in, and we've got to do it quick,
And if McKinley doesn't, why we'll make McKinley sick.
I hope the Chinks will slaughter every white man in the lot,
And that not an interloper ever leaves the bloody spot.'

"You might miss him on one corner, but you'd meet him on the rest,
And he'd lam his doctrines at you, this circumforaneous pest,
With a wild and frantic frenzy, till you swore like rabid sin
That you'd hamburgize his features if he didn't lock his chin.

"Then one day the news came over, like a ray of summer sun,
That the foreigners were rescued—that the good work had been done—
And this crazy, rabid, frantic, frothing, anarchistic cuss
Kicked a hole clean through his brand new hat and yelled:

'Hooray
For Us!'" —Denver Tribune.

On the Road to Peking.

By S. E. Kiser.

FRANK and Teuton side by side
On the road to Peking;
Lion, eagle, bear, allied,
On the road to Peking
Yankee, Briton, German, Gaul,
Heeding one appealing call,
Sometimes foes, now brothers all,
On the road to Peking!

Shall the lordly lion sway
On the road to Peking?
Shall the eagle show the way
On the road to Peking?
Which shall lead and which be led?
Who shall boast or care or dread,
So they swiftly fare ahead
On the road to Peking!

Jonathan and John allied
On the road to Peking;
Fritz and Francois side by side
On the road to Peking;
There to share what may befall,
Heeding one appalling call—
God commanding o'er them all
On the road to Peking.

Chicago Times-Herald.

Balzac's Literary Habit.

When one considers the stupendous production of Balzac, it is difficult to realize that he had little spontaneity and that creation was always laborious to him. Gavarni, the caricaturist, knew Balzac well. When asked once how Balzac was in conversation he answered shortly.

"Stupid."

"Stupid? You don't mean stupid do you?"

"Yes, stupid. He has wit only with pen in hand, and even then it does not come easily. It is torture for him to get to work. He'll cover sheet after sheet of paper with meaningless words and sentences before he can get started. Once under way, however, he can't be stopped. He'll rush on hours at a time without rest. I have seen him work twenty-six hours at one sitting."

Winston Churchill's New Books.

Mr. Winston Churchill, who has been in no haste to bring fresh wares to the ready market made for him by the astounding popularity of Richard Carvel, is giving the final touches to a second historical romance, The Crisis, which the Macmillan Co. will publish some time in the autumn. In Richard Carvel the author treated of the origin and character of the cavalier in Maryland, and in The Crisis, he takes up the cavalier's history nearly a century later. Though the time and place have changed from those of the earlier novel it is still a record of the clash between the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, the Puritans of New England and Cavaliers of Maryland, Virginia, and the South. Mr. Churchill, in surveying events, has placed the centre of excitement in St. Louis. Lincoln, Grant and Sherman are said to figure among the historical characters, but the romantic side of the story has by no means been neglected. The illustrations for Mr. Churchill's book are by Maxfield Parrish, who, by the way, is an intimate friend and a summer neighbor of the author in the beautiful Vermont hill-town where a congenial little group of settlers gather every spring. Mr. Parrish's home is one of the quaintest, for the artist, having his own ideas of architecture, as well as the pleasure and profit of labor, likes to add a room to his house with his own hands whenever it seems needed and his less practical labors permit.

DELAY IN THE TREATMENT of bronchitis, which generally begins with a chill, hot feverish attacks and a feeling of exhaustion, develops into very serious complications. PAIN-KILLER taken in hot water, as well as rubbing the chest with it clear, will speedily cure. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis. Price 25c. and 50c.

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.
Get full information and handsome folder at
641 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

MARTELL & CO.

Cognac, France,
Established 1715.
TRADE MARK.

J. & F. Martell.

The Highest Grade of Cognac Brandy.

All Martell shipments received by us bear the name of our firm on the bottles. Beware of imitations.

William Wolff & Co.
329 Market Street. Pacific Coast Agents.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-314 POST STREET
SOHMER PIANO AGENCY
SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

Repsold Select Vintage Wines
FOR YOUR HOME DINNER
This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants
Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account July 1st, 1900, $1,453,469.59

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Ladlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank, Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft, China, Japan and East Indies, Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 .....28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary.....George Tourney
Assistant Secretary .....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900 .....$26,952,875
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital.....$1,000,000
Paid Up Capital..... 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

1875 CALIFORNIA 1900

Safe Deposit and Trust Co.

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

PHONE BUSH 165.

Safe-Deposit Boxes from $5.00 per year up. Trunks and Valuables of every Description Stored in Fire and Burglar-Proof Vaults at $1.00 per month.

Office Hours 8 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.
General Agents.

A Harvest Festival at Newport

By Robert Johnson

THE event of the Newport season was the "Harvest Festival" dance at "Crossways," the mansion of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish. The summer has been rather dull. Nothing startling in the way of entertainment had occurred and it seemed to devolve on Mrs. Fish, who is leading in the race for social supremacy, to organize an affair which might establish her right to the throne from which Mrs. Astor has retired.

In order to startle the millionaire set which makes its home at Newport something tremendously effective had to be thought out. The simple is not in line there; what is required is elaborateness harmonized by good taste—a condition that is only met in the families of the Dives and the Midases. The wife of Stuyvesant Fish, chief owner and president of the Illinois Central railway, can afford to splurge magnificently, however, and the festival was worthy of her income.

A DINNER AT "ROSECLIFF."

To begin with there was a dinner at the Herman Oelrichs new villa "Rosecliff." To it some one hundred and twelve of the participants at the festival were invited. On the terraces overlooking the ocean the guests were served. A series of tents were erected covered inside with vines studded with electric lights. The effect was brilliant. Eighty guests, in evening dress, sat at ten tables. At a large table in the center were seated thirty-two, chief figures at the feast, who were to dance the two quadrilles. Mrs. Oelrichs had trained one set of eight couples, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont the other set. The women among the dancers wore flapping headdresses, bodices, skirts to their ankles—almost. The men were attired in collars to their shoulders, blouses, knickerbockers, wooden shoes. The women were pictures of demureness; the men ideals of simplicity; some of their friends did not recognize them.

After dinner a procession of carriages and automobiles set forth for the "Crossways," three-quarters of a mile distant. On the gate posts of this mansion were two huge pumpkins made into "jack-o-lanterns," each twelve feet in circumference. Inside were brilliant calcium lights. Up the driveway were arches of lanterns six feet apart forming an illuminated canopy from entrance to port cochere. Throughout the grounds were illuminated with incandescent bulbs; the roof-trees, arches and gables of the mansion were rimmed with light. The lawn was transformed into a field of harvested grain with sheaves and haystacks—truly rural. There oxen gazed curiously at the electric effects, but, indeed, the scene was fine and worthy human as well as bovine inspection.

LITTLE PIGS AND BANTAMS.

However, to the entertainment itself. It was part of the scheme that the rustics who were to participate in the peasant's quadrille should lay some worthy offering at the feet of the queen of the festival. Quite a degree of competition was developed in this direction. Some brought ducks, others geese, more had chickens. It was amusing for the onlookers to witness the struggles of the guests with their barn yard attractions. When you think of it, conveying live stock is not altogether a joke. I actually saw a very pretty girl with her hands and arms all pecked and scratched by a vicious little bantam rooster. The plight of Mr. Norman Whitehouse was even worse. He had procured a sucking pig of some shape and substance and considerable activity. In order not to lose "piggy" he had him wrapped up in an old piece of fishnet or lawn tennis net. Several times this prospective roast offering made breaks for liberty and finally got off, chased by a bevy of policemen. One Italian nobleman, who was lugging a big rooster, looked as if he would rather be fighting Boxers within the Sacred City. At the end of the procession, and to cap the climax, appeared Herman Oelrichs struggling with a calf. He wanted to get it to Mrs. Fish, but the animal would not go, and it was only after impetus had been added at the rear that it was presented to the hostess.

These minor difficulties were all adjusted after a bit. Servants took charge of the live-stock and conveyed it to more appropriate quarters. Then the guests had an opportunity to inspect the interior decorations which certainly were tremendously swell. Sheaves of wheat lined the port cochere. The main hall was wainscoted with wheat studded with sunflowers and clusters of poppies. At intervals were panels of agricultural implements, and sheaves of corn tied with red ribbon. Green garlands with scarlet poppies were suspended from the ceiling and looped with sash ribbon of red and yellow. Innumerable sun flowers and poppies were used in the decorative scheme, and the effect was really beautiful. In the hall queening it in the midst of this bucolic array sat Mrs. "Stuy" Fish on an agricultural dias, garbed in a ball gown of orange-colored silk which was garlanded with a small row of poppies over the shoulder running down on the skirt. To her the arrivals made obeisance and then assembled for the peasant's quadrille which took place in the drawing room. There were sixteen couples who had been well rehearsed for the occasion. The dancing was done in rural style. Bows and courtesies gave way to countrified ducks and dips. After that there was dancing in ordinary, and then supper which was followed by a cotillion that Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr. and Mr. Harry Lehr led. The favors were miniature agricultural implements in gold and silver, which were brought into the ball room in a gilded wheelbarrow.

A RUSTIC SUPPER.

But the supper must not be forgotten. The rustic quadrillists in their rural garb were led to the eastern piazza which had been transformed into a country grape arbor. Here a long table was spread with burlap over which ran squash and pumpkin vines. A pyramid of cabbages, squashes, and celery formed the counter-piece. Board benches were the seats. The courses were served in dishes improvised from squashes, and knives and forks and spoons, made out of crooked-necked squashes and carrots, were the instruments of consumption. There was great joy at this table, and shouts of merriment were heard from it. Each of the other tables had a sheaf of wheat done up in ribbons, or a basket of poppies, or an illuminated pumpkin curiously covered, all carrying out the harvest festival idea.

As for the gowning—it was, of course, as glorious as usual and the display of diamonds was what might be expected of guests with incomes ranging from a paltry hundred thousand to half a million and a million per annum.

Your medicine chest is incomplete if it is not stocked with Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey.

New Palaces In New York.

Continued from page 17.

and one for the servants, and frequently more.

Several apartment buildings which contain flats rented from $3,000 to $7,000 a year are supplied with cold-air shafts, enabling tenants to cool their apartments or preserve their food merely by turning on a faucet.

Electric lights are used exclusively. Many apartments contain permanent mirrors surrounded by electric bulbs. Electric fans are often a permanent fixture. In a well-appointed house every closet of any size may be illuminated by electricity.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

ON CHOLLAR MINING COMPANY.—LOCATION of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 3d day of August, 1900, an assessment, No. 52, of ten cents (10c) per share, was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 79, Nevada block, No: 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 6th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on THURSDAY, the 27th day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors. CHAS. E. ELLIOT, Secretary.

Office—Room 79, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco California.

BEST & BELCHER MINING COMPANY.—Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia District, Storey county, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the third (3d) day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 71) of fifteen (15) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the company, room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpa d on the seventh (7th) day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on FRIDAY, the twenty-eighth (28th) day of September, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

M. JAFFE, Secretary.

Office—Room 33, Nevada block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

GOULD & CURRY SILVER MINING COMPANY. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 6th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 91) of fifteen cents (15c) per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the secretary, at the office of the company, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 8th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1900, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors,

ALFRED K. DURBROW, Secretary.

Office, room No. 69, Nevada Block, No. 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT.—SAVAGE MINING Company. Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Virginia City, Storey County, Nevada.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 13th day of August, 1900, an assessment (No. 101) of ten cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 18th day of September, 1900, will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Monday, the 8th day of October, 1900, at the hour of 2 o'clock, p.m., to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the costs of advertising and the expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

JOHN W. TWIGGS, Secretary.

Office—Room 20-22, Nevada Block, 309 Montgomery street, San Francisco, California.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters "Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. ☞Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199
DEALERS IN Paper
55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS
Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?
It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!
IT WILL DO AWAY WITH
Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.
Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

lfred Cane — Luther A. Teague — Frederick Teague
TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE
Dentists
Claus Spreckels Building
gel. Main 1459 — Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

THEATRICALS

A Shrewd Distinction.

Chester Bailey Fernald, the San Francisco writer, is now a factor in English stage life. His play, "A Moonlight Blossom," was not, it is true, a success, but the critics discerned in it certain rare virtues which preserved his rank among dramatists. He was engaged, subsequently, to adapt an Ibsen play for Mrs. Brown Potter, and during the first rehearsal he and the distinguished leading lady had a difference of opinion. Mr. Fernald laid down the law. Mrs. Potter replied, "You seem to forget that I've been an actress for thirteen years." "I beg your pardon, Mrs. Potter," corrected Fernald, "you have been on the stage thirteen years."

The Busy Belasco.

While in Europe recently David Belasco arranged to produce Ibsen's latest play "When We Dead Awaken" in America. Mrs. Leslie Carter is to portray the heroine and very naively Belasco says that with this actress in the leading role "I see no reason why the Norwegian dramatist's work should not be thoroughly understood and appreciated." Models of the original scenery and costumes were contracted for in Berlin and the astute Belasco is to give us Ibsen as a novelty. Mrs. Carter seems to be his dearest care just now. She is to be La Du Barry in the Jean Richepin play of that name, which Belasco is adapting. She is to have "The Red Mouse" in which Belasco and Harry Dam are collaborating; with John Luther Long, Belasco is developing a third Carter opportunity; a fourth is a new play, by Belasco alone, "Carmela," the strongest he has yet written, and a fifth a comedy thrown in as a relief after these heavier roles. When one learns that Belasco is further collaborating with Egerton Castle and purposes to adapt his "Bath Comedy," that he has contracted to write a play for Ada Rehan, that George Wyndham, the English actor, has commissioned a play, that he has finished a play "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch" in collaboration with Mrs. Burton Harrison, one naturally wonders where he finds time to accomplish so much. These are but a few of the Belasco undertakings. He is becoming a wholesale dealer in plays just like Charles Frohman but whether he has the extraordinary energy and executive ability of that Napoleonic personage is another story.

Decline of the Coon Song.

No longer does the popular entertainer at the vaudeville shows in New York introduce himself with the coon song. As a feature of the ragtime music's waning vogue, the decline of the negro performer's favor is to be expected and probably there is as much cause for congratulation in one case as in another. What the successor of the ragtime tune will be nobody has yet attempted to prophesy. Good Irish songs are scarce, but there is a belief that public taste might turn to them. The languidly sentimental seems just now to be struggling with the patriotic for temporary supremacy in the music halls. Whether or not the winner is to survive as the successor to the ragtime epidemic it is not possible to say. But it is quite certain that the sentimental "mother" songs are now altogether a taste of the past.

The Pessimistic Duse.

Eleanora Duse has recently been discussing with more than her usual pessimism the condition of the stage to-day and the failure of her own ambitions. She said in effect that the theatre of the present in order to be saved would first have to be destroyed, and that all actors and actresses would have to be killed by a plague, as they poison the air and make art impossible. They do not act dramas in the opinion of the Italian actress, only pieces prepared for the theatre, and only by returning to the tragedy of the Greeks and giving plays in the open air was there hope for the salvation of the drama. It was being killed, she said, by the parquets and the boxes and the persons who came in evening dress to the theatre to digest their dinner. Since the days of the Greeks and Shakespeare there have been no great dramatists, and these represented the entire life of the people and the highest achievement of their contemporaries. Ibsen does not satisfy the actress, presumably from the narrowness of his views as the details of his dramas reveal it, and she longs for Rome, the Colisseum, the Acropolis, Athens, beauty and the living flame of life. She adores Maeterlinck, but his figures are to her in the clouds, childlike and spiritual. She has tried to act the plays of Sardou and Pinero, but finds it impossible.

Patti Still Sings.

Adelina Patti is still singing in London and from all accounts her voice is in excellent condition. See has not been in America since 1892, and it is curious some enterprising manager has not given her another farewell jaunt. Marcus Mayer, who has several times dared disaster with the great prima donna, declares that every season fears a new generation of Americans has arisen that wants to hear Patti and says he would give the diva $100,000 for thirty concerts. She will not sing in opera any longer as the exactions of acting are too great for her strength.

The Career of William A. Brady.

William A. Brady, who now ranks among the most successful of American managers, began life as a train-boy twenty years ago. His father was a New York newspaper man, and when the boy developed a desire to come to San Francisco he was serving as messenger in the New York Press Club. So insistent was this ambition in the breast of the future millionaire that the newspaper men made up a purse and started young Brady for the Coast. There followed a long period of "butchering" on the Oakland trains, and it must be said that Brady was one of the brightest boys who ever peddled peanuts and cheap literature on the Southern Pacific system. But he wanted to be an actor and finally got a place in the Grand Opera House as call-boy. Bartley Campbell took to young Brady and cast him for a part, but the company for some unaccountable reason refused to play with a novice. There was a period of ill fortune for the ex-peanut "butcher" until he met Joseph R. Grismer who recognized his talent for stage direction and made him manager of his troupe. Since then life has beeen an upward progress with Mr. Brady. He has made money at various things, but most of all with "Way Down East" which has drawn phenomenally. It was written by Lottie Blair Parker, but was crude and lacked finish. Joseph Grismer reshaped and re-wrote the drama and staged it as it is played to-day, and I believe the splendid winnings of "Shenandoah" pale before the receipts of this, the latest rural drama.

A Mnemonic System.

The leading man of a small stock company in Illinois used in memorizing lines a curious mnemonic system of his own invention. While studying a role he made it a rule to drink a certain liquor, and when the piece recurred again in the company's repertoire he drank the same liquor. In this way, without any mental effort, he recalled every word of the various parts, together with the appropriate business pertaining thereto. It happened, in the course of events, that the leading lady had a birthday and the company celebrated the occasion with an elaborate punch. It was one of those punches which cannot be brewed save at a bar, for it contained dashes of every liquor and liqueur known to the art. The decoction appealed especially to the leading man, who imbibed plentifully, though without causing any misgivings as to his sobriety. "The Lady of Lyons" was the play set for performance that night, and the first act went swimmingly. In the second the leading man appeared and spoke his first speech. Horrors!—he was do-

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

[illegible] and Country Orders promptly [illegible] and Price Lists sent on application. [illegible] solicited. Mention The Wave.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law, [illegible] Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office: Room 24 Chronicle [illegible]

A. K. DAGGETT. Drawing of deeds, wills, papers a specialty. Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone [illegible]

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured; Shampooing and Bleaching. Professional Hair [illegible] Glasgow Block, 106 Ellis Street. Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist, 806 Market Street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU. Main office 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. [illegible] on all kinds of Newspaper information. Valuable Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Bush and Mason streets. Private [illegible] and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BREN, Proprietors.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment. Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations. DR. WM. SCHMITT, 502 Taylor St., cor. Geary, San Francisco. CONSULTATION FREE.

A TOILET NECESSITY
Wakelee's
Cold Cream of Roses
MADE WITH
Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM
A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents.

Don't Borrow a Home!
BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, breweries, bath houses, billiard tables, breweries, booksellers, candy [illegible], dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stables, [illegible] roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.
BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 3478] A. [illegible]
Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.
A Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials. 488 Geary St., S. F.

THEATRICALS

Orpheum

Jessie Bartlett Davis, Young American Quintette; Querita Vincent, Johnson and Dean, Howe, Wall and Walters, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Westman and Wren, Frances Kaplan, Bioscraph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

ONE WEEK, BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY
Special Holiday Matinee Monday and Tuesday
All next week

Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell

and a strong company presenting Clay Clement's new comedy

The New Dominion

Prices, $1, 75c, 50c, 35c, and 25c.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, Sept. 10th
Extra matinee Monday and Tuesday Sept. 10 and 11.
A thrilling story of frontier life

The Girl I Left Behind Me.

Written by David Belasco and Franklin Fyles
Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.
Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.
To follow "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Last nights of "Trilby." Week beginning Monday Sept. 10th, THE NEW FRAWLEY COMPANY presenting a stupendously spectacular production of

QUO VADIS

Special engagement of Adgie's lions as a feature of the arena scene.
Matinees Monday, Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday
Next play "Blue Jeans."
Prices:—10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.
Saturday matinee, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents.
Branch Ticket Office, Emporium

★TIVOLI★

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.
Tonight, "Ernani" Sunday night, "Carmen"
Now comes the event of the season

Week of September 10th

Every evening and Saturday matinee, the great double bill.

Cavalleria Rusticana and I 'Pagliacci

Produced with alternating casts, including Greene, Avedano, Salassa, Berthald, Russo, Ferrari, Schuster, Zani, Boyce,—Lichter, Graham, Poletini, and Stewart

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents Telephone Bush 9
Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

PAIN'S BATTLE OF SAN JUAN

Pain's $1,000 Fireworks
Opens Saturday September 1st.
Fireworks Changed Nightly.

At the Sixteenth and Folsom street Grounds.

Tonight Democratic night and Electric Fireworks. Sunday night, Sept. 9th, Native Son's night. Monday night, Sept. 10th, Native Daughter's night.
Seats for 10,000.
Box seats $1.00 Grand stand, reserved, 75 cents Seats on sale at Sherman, Clay and Co.'s. Others 25 and 50 cents. Children, first four nights, 15 and 25.

BROWN'S Bronchial Troches
(Made only by John I. Brown & Son, Boston.) give instant relief in Hoarseness

Go where you will, the best saloons sell Jesse Moore Whiskey.

ing "The Silver King." The leading juvenile caught the cue and continued "The Silver King." The ingenue followed suit. It was again the leading man's turn, but by this time another ingredient in the punch had the ascendancy over his brain cells for he started off with a line from "The Texas Steer." The low comedian took it up and soon the whole company was doing Hoyt's play. A little later the leading man gave Anthony's oration, the company falling in as a Roman populace. At this juncture, mercifully, the curtain fell. The manager of the troupe was a man fruitful in expedients. Realizing exactly the condition he stepped in front of the stage and explained to the audience that he had, in the interest of high art, perpetrated a base deception, but noticing the evident refinement and culture of the city, he had decided to substitute for "The Lady of Lyons" the latest psychological drama of the gifted Ibsen. He retired amidst loud applause. The leading man carried the performance through two more acts in the style of the first. There were fourteen plays in the repertoire and he managed to get in extracts from every one of them, and breathlessly the company followed his cues. When the final curtain fell he had got to the tomb scene in "Romeo and Juliet." Next day, about noon, there came to the leading man's hotel a deputation from the Ladies' Reading Club of the city to ask him to give them a lecture on Symbolist Poets before the company left town.

Mrs Langtry's Romance Faded.

When the former Mrs. Langtry was playing the heroine of "The Degenerates" in New York last winter nothing else interested her so much as the welfare of her husband, Mr. Hugo de Bathe. Her efforts to collect money for the English soldiers, in which she met with great success, were in large measure inspired by the fact that her young husband was an officer in the British army. So long as Mr. de Bathe remained in South Africa, his wife's interest in him is said to have been touchingly devoted and absorbing; but since his return to London the affection between this newly married pair is so lukewarm that husband and wife have met only once and then but for a few minutes under very formal circumstances. Mr. De Bathe, moreover, is said to be once more on good terms with his family, who objected strenuously to his marriage to Mrs. Langtry. The Jersey Lily preserves her customary complacency under the circumstances and has given no intimation of what the final step in this affair will be. But she has stopped reciting "The Absent-Minded Beggar" and organizing charity fairs for the English soldier.

Ringling's Circus.

The new circus of Ringling Brothers which opens on Wednesday evening, September 19th, is quite the biggest we have had in San Francisco in many a long year. There is but one ring thank heaven and all that is to be seen may be witnessed through a single pair of eyes. This circus according to its announcements has a remarkable set of clever people. The Fisher family who do remarkable aerial exhibitions, Mlle. Turnour, an equilibrist, and Alvo, Boise and Pickard, do notable aerial bars. The DaComas head the company of acrobats. Madam Noble and her trained horse leads the equestrians.

The trained animal portion of the program includes elephant comedians, Herr Souder's elephant brass band, Marchand's pugilistic elephants, Sunlin's performing bull, O'Brien's equescurriculum, a company of sixty-one horses, which pose, pirouette, form living equine pictures, climb lofty pyramids and perform many other astonishing movements, all without the narrow area of a single ring.

The concert of Miss Clara Kalisher was a great success. Her voice is clear, full and flexible and she sings with admirable taste. Her style showed a marked improvement over that developed at her former concert, and there is little doubt but that she will be prominently heard from later on. Her renderings of the classical numbers on her programme were scholarly as well as expressive, and represented really excellent work.

The new stock company at the Alcazar gave an excellent performance of "The Masqueraders." Miss Dorr, the new leading lady, acted with considerable briskness and vigor, and Mr. Howard Hall showed himself a worthy successor of Ernest Hastings.

Margaret Dale, who has so long been a member of Henry Miller's company, and who particularly distinguished herself playing the role of Lucie Manette in "The Only Way," has been promoted by Charles Frohman, and will hereafter be a member of the Empire stock company. She will play light comedy and ingenue parts.

Theatrical Notes

The magnificent spectacle, "The Battle of San Juan," followed each night by one of the thousand dollar displays of Pain's fireworks, has attracted tens of thousands of delighted spectators to the Sixteenth and Folsom Street Grounds during the past week. Nothing in the way of military and pyrotechnic productions ever seen in this city has approached these performances, and to attend once means to go again. The season here is necessarily limited, and the battle will be continued but a few nights more. To-night will be Democratic night, when pictures in fire of Bryan and Stevenson will be shown.

* *

DuMaurier's popular Drama has repeated its former success and has packed the Grand at every performance. Next week is to be given up to a superb production of an entirely new dramatization of Henryk Sienkiewicz great story of "Quo Vadis." A feature which will lend especial interest to the arena scene will be Adgie's lions, which have been engaged for this occasion. An addition to the company is found in the person of Mr. Carl Koening, a gigantic young native of this State, who will appear as Ursus, Lygia's faithful slave. He is almost seven feet in stature and otherwise huge in dimensions.

* *

Jessie Bartlett Davis will head the Orpheum's new bill. The time of her engagement here is limited, and in view of the temporary increase of the city's population, the management has arranged to give a number of extra Jubilee matinees. These matinees will be given on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The Young American Quintette, an excellent musical organization, Querita Vincent, a California girl who has a sweet voice, knows how to dance, and has won quite a reputation by her character impersonations, and Johnson and Dean, originators of a novelty they call the "Kinetoscope Rag Dance" are the new people.

* *

For the coming week the Tivoli will present the strongest bill of the grand opera season, consisting of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I'Pagliacci," in which the entire company of grand opera artists will be heard, being sung with alternate casts. Last year "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" drew crowded houses for twenty performances.

* *

The Azzali Italian Grand Opera Company, delayed in transit between Jamaica and Vera Cruz, could not arrive in time to open at the California Theatre tonight, and, in consequence, the opening has been postponed until Saturday evening September 15th. "Otello" will be the opening opera.

* *

"The Girl I Left Behind Me" is the attraction at the Alcazar beginning Monday, September 10th, with special Admission Day matinees, September 10th and 11th.

* *

The fourteenth year of musical evenings at Byron Mauzy Hall was inaugurated by the California School of Elocution and Oratory with a recital of Martha Stuart Miller assisted by the choir of St. Marks Church.

* *

For the second week of the Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell Company's engagement, "The New Dominion."

The original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St. stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey—that's because you have signed the pledge.

A Novel Clock.

In the exhibition of clocks and bronzes at the Paris Exposition is a very curious and unique timepiece devised by M. Passerat. On a square pedestal of wood covered with bronze decorations rests a plate of ordinary size. The plate has marked on its upper surface a clock dial, and there is a small figure of a swan lying on the bottom. If a little water is poured into the plate (enough to float the swan), the latter immediately swims to the edge of the plate and indicates the hour with its beak The mechanism is very simple. In the interior of the box is a clock movement acting on a vertical pivot, to which is attached a horizontal arm. On the end of this arm is a powerful magnet. As the arm is revolved, just under the upper side of the box, by the clock mechanism, the swan, which has a piece of soft iron concealed in its beak, closely follows the magnet, when it is left free to move by the presence of water in the plate, and thus the contrivance makes a practical timepiece. A slight mark on the upper surface of the pedestal and a corresponding one on the edge of the plate serve to determine the correct placing of the latter.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, price 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

In the sic room or on your sideboard, Jesse Moores 'AA" Whiskey is indispensable.

CAFE ZINKAND

Go where the crowd goes

Listen to the matchless string band and enjoy the finest wines, beers and supper.
The Cafe Zinkand is society's gathering place after the show is over.

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss
Stereo Binoculars

The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power.
Prices, $47.50 to $80.000
Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.
OPTICIAN.
201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER
KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Did you say rye? Then try the Jessee Moore Ry —the finest in the world.

Clarke's Carlton Cigarettes

Pure Virginia Tobacco

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, Cal.forma

HAVE YOU A PIANO THAT YOU DO NOT USE?

Is the piano in your home a musical instrument, and do you enjoy it as such, or does it remain unused for months at a time and become practically nothing more than an article of furniture.

The Pianola

Is Bringing into use thousands of pianos that have been silent for many years.

It is bringing music into homes where it has long been a stranger.

It is making players of people who, lacking musical training, had never expected to experience the pleasure of producing music for themselves.

It is increasing the repertoire of amateur and professional pianists by making the entire literature of the piano instantly available without study and without practice.

The Pianola looks like a small cabinet. It has small felt-covered fingers that rest on the keys of the piano and, operated by pneumatic power, strike the keys with a pliant, yielding and remarkably sympathetic touch that is almost identical with that of the human fingers.

When not in use the Pianola may be easily detached from the piano and moved to another part of the room.

The Pianola can be used in connection with any Grand or Upright piano, and does not in any way mar or disfigure the instrument. It can be easily and quickly adjusted by any one.

The action of the Pianola is so simple that even a child can readily learn to play it; at the same time it is capable of so much expression that its greatest admirers are those who best understand and appreciate good music.

Price $250 Upward.

The Pianola can be bought by monthly payments. Our instruments are gladly shown to the merely curious as well as to intending purchasers

Kohler & Chase, Sole Agents.

26, 28 and 30 O'FARRELL STREET.

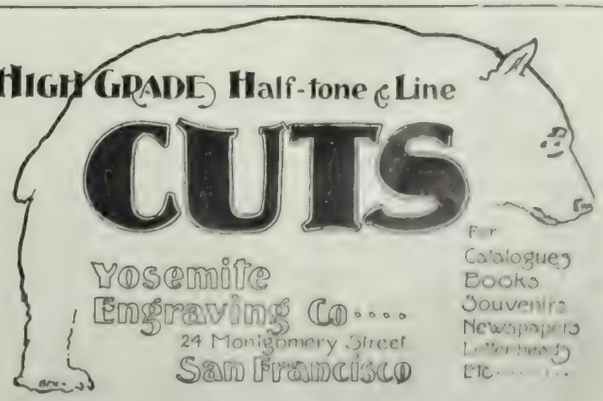
William Jameson's

HARP BRAND

Whiskey

Pure and Matured — Sold Everywhere

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.



OVER A MILLION
Bright Women

say it's easily done and well done with SILVER ELECTRO-SILICON POLISH
It cleans Silver without a blemish whatever the form or finish. If you doubt it's best, why not make the test.
Trial quantity for the asking. Large package 15 cts. in stamps. Grocers and Druggists sell it.
"SILICON," 80 Cliff St., New York.

DR. CLYDE PAYNE
Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at 135 GEARY ST.
Phone Main 9. Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.
Real Estate Brokers
We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.
Office, 10 W. King St., HONOLULU, H. I.

The Saturday Wave
Is Printed by
THE STANLEY-TAYLOR CO.
424 SANSOME STREET, S. F.

Stylish Suits $15.50
Dressy Suits..... $20.00
Pants..... 1.50
My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.
25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.
SAMPLES SENT FREE

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
— BUY —

New Stories Re-Told.

REFORMATION IN CHINA.—Judge Yuan who presided at Chinan Fu had an idea that his territory contained rather more specimens of the frail sisterhood than the law, however liberally interpreted, could sanction. So he ordered a round-up and some hundred were arrested and placed in the courtyard of the Judge's house. A proclamation was issued declaring that the women had to be reclaimed and in the Judge's opinion, this was best accomplished through matrimony. The ladies, he announced, would be sold to the highest bidder, and no one would be allowed to take more than one wife. At first no one had the courage to select a wife, but finally an old farmer pointed to one, and, struggling and kicking, she was carried to a scale and weighed. "Ninety catties," said the weigher. "How much a cattie?" asked the prospective purchaser, in alarm lest he had insufficient funds. "What is the price of pork today?" asked the Judge. "Ninety cash a catty," replied the farmer. "Then sell them at ninety cash a catty," said the Judge, and that was the prevailing price. Before night not one woman was left.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH. A deputation of nonconformist ministers once waited on Lord Thurlow for the purpose of propounding certain grievances which affected their sect. Lord Thurlow listened attentively to them but eventually cut short the addresses with these words: "Gentlemen, I am against you. I am an upholder of the Established Church. Not that I care for the Established Church but I uphold it because it is established. Get your d——d sect established in its place, and then I will uphold it. I wish you good morning, gentlemen."

AN IRISH DEFINER.—An Irish servant, whose name was Connolly, had been convicted on a charge of theft. His master came forward to speak in his favour, and the following conversation occurred:—Said Connolly: "Now, sorr, I only ask ye how many pairs of socks ye had whin first Oi came to ye?" The master replied. "I am sure I don't know." "Thin I'll tell ye, sorr. Ye had six pair. And how many have ye got now, sorr?" persisted Connolly. "I don't know," was again the answer. "Thin I'll tell ye, sorr. Ye have fourteen as beautiful pairs as iver anybody saw."

THE INHABITED CASTLE. A party of Americans was sitting on the upper deck of a Rhine river boat, enjoying the charming scenery. One was reading aloud from a guidebook about the various castles as they came into view. Just as the boat was passing one of the finest of the old buildings, a woman in the party exclaimed to her companions: "Why, that old castle is inhabited. See, there are blinds at the windows." "No," said a man standing by her side; "those are the shades of their ancestors."

ATTENTIONS WASTED.—When Duchenois, the great French actress died, some one met an old man who had been her intimate friend, and who was apparently crushed with sorrow. Kindly-meant professions of sympathy and consolation failed to cheer him. "For," said he, "it is not so much her loss which troubles me as her base ingratitude. Can you credit it? She left me nothing in her will, and yet I dined with her at her own house three times a week regularly for thirty years!"

A CRUSHING RETORT.—John Parsons, one of the first Irish Commissioners of Insolvency, was travelling in a coach with Lord Norbury, the judge. Passing a gibbet, Norbury said, with a chuckle, "Parsons, where would you be now if that gallows had its due?" "Riding alone, Norbury," was the quick reply.

AN UP-TO-DATE EXCUSE.—The teacher in an Ashland Sunday school remonstrated with one of the boys in her class whom she had discovered in the act of taking the eggs from a bird's nest. "Think how the poor mother-bird will feel!" she said. "Ho-ho!" laughed the boy. "You've got the mother-bird on your hat! I 'spect she won't feel very bad!"

AN ECONOMICAL NOBLEMAN.—The former Duke of Westminster was rather inclined to be economical. Driving in Picadilly one day a shower overtook the equipage. He put his hand out the window and called to the coachman who with the footman sat on the box: "John, give me those two new hats; I will keep them under cover until the rain is over."

Palace Hotel
The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man, will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.
Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity
SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE GREAT FAIR AT Tanforan Park
Sept. 24th to Oct. 6th, 1900
Under Management of the San Francisco and San Mateo Agricultural Association
To the live-stock breeders of California, as well as to the lovers of out-door sports this exhibition is dedicated. The attraction will include: A High-class Open-air Horse Show, Select Herds of Prize Cattle, a complete exhibit of Swine, Sheep, Goats, Poultry and Belgian Hares. Extraordinary show of Dogs. Attractive exhibit of high-class Vehicles and other Industrial Displays from leading manufacturers of the State. The outdoor sports will embrace Polo Games, between players from Southern and Central California for championship; Pony Races; Long Distance Race of 25 miles, by noted riders; change of horses each mile, in full view of grandstand. Grand Athletic Field Day—Club Harness Racing: High-class Trotting and Pacing, in which the great stars of the east and west will meet and make world's records. All in all, the entertainment will be clean, dignified and instructive. Grand Musical Concerts Daily. Excellent railroad facilities by both regular and special trains to Grandstand entrance. Entertainment each day, from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.
GEORGE ALMER NEWHALL, Secretary. HENRY J. CROCKER, President.
EDWIN F. SMITH, General Manager.

RINGLING BROS.
World's Greatest Shows
Grand Opening of the San Francisco Season
Wednesday Eve. Sept. 19
and continuing twice daily thereafter until Wednesday Sept 26th inclusive
Exhibition Grounds. 16th and Folsom Streets

The Greatest Circus in the World, and the only Positively Big One ever seen on the Pacific Coast. More Cars, More People, More Horses, More Elephants, More Performers, and More Novel Features than all the other shows combined.
NOTHING LIKE IT EVER SEEN ON EARTH BEFORE.
The talk of the country! The sensation of the day! Wednesday, Sept, 19th, at 10 a.m. the Largest, Richest, Most Resplendent Free Street Parade ever seen in San Francisco. Usual route over the down-town streets.
General admission—50 cents, Children under 12 years half price. Reserved numbered seats and admissions during the circus season at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s music store, corner Kearny and Sutter streets. Unlike other shows prices at down-town office are the same as charged at ticket wagon on show grounds.

PRICE FIVE CENTS

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT.

This paper may not be taken from the Library.

Dedication of the Claus Spreckels Music Stand in Golden Gate Park.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

The Native Sons' Celebration.

THE late Jubilee Celebration has done much for the Native Son. It has enhanced his reputation tremendously in quarters which were disposed to ridicule his pretensions. He has given San Francisco the smartest celebration in her history. It was really capitally managed from one end to the other—the chorus of complaints, the murmurs of omissions, the confession of errors, are not heard. On the contrary, everyone seems satisfied—really an extraordinary condition in San Francisco. From the congratulatory condition of the entire community, one might imagine the millenium had arrived. The main achievement of the affair was the parade, undoubtedly. It was a lengthy pageant—three and a half hours of it, and it traversed its long course almost without interruption or delay. What is better—it began on time and was interesting from vanguard to rear. Prospectively, one does not expect a great deal from the pageant of a fraternal organization, which, after all, is what the N. S. G. W. is, but there was injected into this a deal of Californian enthusiasm, that always works wonders. Not content to appear in the garb of the average citizen, each parlor had designed a distinctive uniform, or an especial hat or cap, or a brilliant scarf, and the result was exceedingly fine. Some parlors revived the Mexican costume, typical of the early days of the State, others came as caballeros on horseback; others were attired in natty tunics of blue or white or black, trimmed with gold lace. There were shirt-waist men with yellow satin ties and badges; another set wore blue, with brass buttons and white hats. Still another section carried pampas plumes. There were all varieties of garbs, and innumerable floats and features—indeed, it was quite the best, as well as the most orderly parade we have ever had.

* * *

Perhaps the prettiest feature in the procession was the star of Estrella Parlor borne by a cortege of maidens in white lace. Really an artistic effect, it was greeted with cheers by the immense concourse of people along the line of march. The vacqueros of Romona Parlor, the Eschscholtzia float, the maidens of Precita Parlor in short blue skirts trimmed with gold and natty drab hats, the bouquet of Orinda girls fluffy pink lace edged with black, the sea shell float, the Sunsets in red vests and Vacquero hats, and Captain Jack Crawford's emigrant train, were the best things in the pageant. To the chorus of commendation one must not forget a testimony to the orderliness of the gathering confined on the sidewalks by wire ropes,nor to the excellent service of the police force which, for once did not figure as a factor in the procession, but confined itself to its legitimate functions along the line of march. All this reflects credit on Chief Sullivan, and as it was the first public occasion in which his executive capacity could be displayed, the results proved his efficiency. There were few accidents, no disorder, but altogether everything was conducted with perfect smoothness, regularity and comfort.

Looking Down Kearny Street on Admission Day

***

A Physical Observation.

WHOEVER retained a recollection of the last great Admission Day parade in San Francisco ten years ago must have noted the tremendous contrast between the physiques of the men who participated then and the fine stalwart fellows who tramped the cobbles last Monday. The decade has certainly worked wonders in the habits of the male Californian. In the eighties and early nineties no one thought of discussing the human product of the Golden State without animadverting on the tremendous physical advantage the Native Daughter had over the Native Son. Ingenious theories were brought forward to account for the slim figures and the pale, peaked faces of our young men as compared with the robust Amazonian type of our daughters. Now, however, one hears no such invidious comparisons. This change is due to the influence of athletics. To-day San Francisco is one of the greatest sporting centers in the world. The State is a big shooting and fishing ground. The two universities first created the interest in athletics and exercise which to-day pervades the community. It began with football. The Olympic Club was a strong factor. Gradually fishing and shooting, tennis and yachting grew in popularity. Later came the bicycle and golf. Nowadays half the community spends its Sundays in sport or in some form of outdoor enjoyment. This interest in athletics is not peculiar to California, but extends throughout the country and will mean much to future generations of Americans.

***

Statistics of the Celebration.

NOW that the celebration is over it is interesting to speculate on the number of people who flocked to San Francisco for the occasion. It was the biggest gathering the city has entertained. From Friday night until Tuesday the streets were crowded with strangers. In the evenings the main thoroughfares were almost jammed by the moving thousands. On a statistical basis it is said that at least 200,000 visitors were entertained here. It is estimated that at least 100,000 came from across the bay. From the central valleys came 20,000 people; from the southern valleys 15,000 more. The California and Northwestern brought in 12,000; on the Santa Fe line 3,500 traveled, and at least 3,000 more arrived by steamer. In the parade there must have been at least 25,000 in line. Grand Marshall Costello figures out 27,500 from his records. There were 2,400 horses 79 bands and 60 floats. Just what sums were spent by the immense concourse is hard to fix, but assuming that 100,000 visitors spent 3 days in San Francisco and expended $5.00 per day, you have a million and a half dollars. I should think the occasion meant at least two millions of dollars, the bulk of which went to the hotels, restaurants, theatres, barbers and dry goods houses.

***

Dedication of the New Music Stand.

SUCH a tremendous concourse of people as Golden Gate Park held last Sunday has not been gathered there since Midwinter Fair days. The occasion was the presentation of the Spreckels' music stand to the city, the donor making the speech of presentation and General Barnes accepting. The photograph presented herewith gives an excellent impression of the structure, which is certainly as imposing and magnificent a monument as any man could desire. It is in Colusa sandstone, gray in tint, and it is set in the central basin which was created at the time of the Fair. With the architecture of the stand, the critics are finding faults—the colonnade is hardly extended enough for the central arch; the pillars are of the "bellied" type that Reed Brothers, its architects, are so prone to introduce into their designs. The figures supporting the arch are too heavy, too obese for grace. An enlargement of the colonnade would certainly add to the beauty and effectiveness of the design, and this might easily be executed. With the carvings and with the embonpoint columns we must perforce be content. Claus Spreckels, in his speech, spoke of his love for California and her generosity to him. He had excellent cause to felicitate himself on the lucky inspiration which sent him westward fifty years ago. To-day he figures as one of the richest men in America, and he has certainly been one of the most useful and productive citizens of the Golden State. It can truly be said that the average man, however envious he be, does not grudge Claus Spreckels his millions. They were earned by force and vigor of an indomitable will and they are invested and spent in the place of their creation. Besides he has given his State a new industry—the cultivation of the beet, which under his vigorous promotion promises to be for years to come a substantial source of wealth to our farmers. So we have all much to be thankful to Claus Spreckels for besides the new music stand and the beautiful Spreckels Building on Market street, which is without doubt the most graceful "sky scraper" in the country.

Scenes at the Launching of the Monitor "Wyoming" at the Union Iron Works

***

Seattle's Census Returns.

THE pretty row that arose between Seattle and Tacoma over the census has been settled in favor of the Queen city. When the enumerators filed the population schedules of Seattle the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce alleged fraud, and an expert was thereupon sent out to investigate. The basis of the charge was jealousy—the strong feeling of Tacoma against her rival being well understood. A member of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. J. B. Meikle, undertook an investigation, the results of which should prove of general value as affording an index of how computations of population may be arrived at. Mr. Meikle compared the names in the directory of 1890 with the census figures. In the former there were 17,514 names; the latter gave 43,835—a multiple of 2½. The last directory, of 1900, showed 39,169, therefore the figures 97,925 may be taken as accurate. The school census and the registration of voters showed an increase in the same ratio, and what is more, the totals for Tacoma, which Mr. Meikle also computed, proved up accurately on a similar basis. Further, the census expert, after a further examination, has declared groundless the charge that an organized attempt to swell Seattle's rolls had been made at the instigation of the city fathers. So the Queen city may now rest on her population laurels.

***

The Dewey Arch.

THERE is now a demand in New York for the removal of the Dewey arch which has fallen into sad disrepair and dilapidation. The wind and the rain and the dust have played havoc with the structure which now is a libel on the original project. Ever since Admiral Dewey turned over the Washington mansion presented to him by a grateful country to his bride, there have been few subscriptions for the perpetuation of the arch. To build it in stone or marble would cost $600,000 and but $200,000 has been subscribed. The project will not be abandoned, however, for a vigorous effort is to be made toward its execution.

***

The "Post's" New Press.

IT is generally admitted that the modern printing press, capable of running off the big papers which our dailies vouchsafe us every morning and evening, represents the highest achievement of mechanical ingenuity. Even the simplest of these great machines, one which will print and fold an eight page paper, is a marvelous complex apparatus, but when it comes to a press built to run off a thirty-two page publication, then you have a wonderful assemblage of cogs and rollers, the intricacies of which require a liberal education in engineering to unravel. The Evening Post has recently imported the latest type of these big machines—a four-story structure it is, which will print and bind up to thirty-two pages and do it in two colors if required. It is a Goss press, and contains all the latest improvements. Its great value is the speed at which it will produce a twelve or sixteen page paper. Every moment counts on an evening paper. It does not have spare hours of production as the morning daily has. The several editions must be printed by the thousand in time for the afternoon trains and the carriers. There is not a second lost between writer and stereotyper. The Post has been gaining on its facilities for a year past, and though it boasted one of the most compact and convenient presses in the country, this did not produce papers fast enough for its rapidly growing circulation. Hence the new Goss, which is indeed a thing of beauty. I sincerely hope Editor Hugh Hume will have to take in another four decker twelve months hence for the same good reasons.

Launch of the Wyoming.

THE Monitor Wyoming which was launched on Saturday last at the Union Iron Works, is one of the four harbor defense monitors authorized by Congress in 1898. On a displacement of 3200 tons, she will have a speed of 12 knots and will carry two modern 12-inch guns in a barbette turret armored with 10 inches and 12 inches of steel. There will be a battery of four 4-inch guns carried at the four angles of the superstructure. The entire battery will use smokeless powder.

The Wyoming, like her three sister ships, will have twin screws worked by two three-cylinder triple expansion engines, quartered in one water-tight compartment. These engines, together with those of the circulating pumps, will have a collective indicated horse-power of 2400 when making 200 revolutions a minute. Steam, at a working pressure of 250 pounds, will be supplied by four water-tube boilers placed in a common water-tight compartment. The coal capacity is about 200 tons, loosely stowed—enough for a considerable radius of action along the coast line. Comfortable quarters are provided for the captain, six other officers and a crew of about 130 persons.

As is well known, naval authorities now agree that the monitor type of war vessel is useful only for coast defense in comparatively smooth water, and it is for that purpose alone that the Wyoming is intended

The ceremony of launching was celebrated with the usual pomp and circumstance. Miss Frances Warren, daughter of Senator Warren of Wyoming, christened the vessel in the presence of Governor Richards and his staff who had come to honor the great occasion. The huge vessel slipped easily down the ways into the bay and a flotilla of steam craft, naptha launchs, tugs, ferry steamers, transports, and the battleship Iowa screamed a riotous greeting to their formidable sister.

Quantrell the Guerilla

By Robert Francis

CHARLES WILLIAM QUANTRELL was the fiercest, wildest, most untamable guerrilla that the civil war produced. He fought for the stars and bars of the Confederacy, but not under them. Over him and his men there always floated the black flag. It was no quarter asked, no quarter given. They shot and hanged and harried and burned over four States, with a relentlessness that finds no parallel in history. Quantrell has been called a murderer, a thug and a robber, with all the variations possible in the English language. It is not necessary to defend him. He acted according to his lights, and in passing it is well to remember that the Anglo-Saxon, once roused, is the most terrible animal in all creation. Qnantrell began life a quiet, unassuming country schoolmaster of literary taste and developed into a red-handed monster, ready to cut and kill every human being not owing allegiance to the Southern cause. This is how it came about.

Quantrell was born in Maryland in 1836 and lived in that State until he was sixteen years old. His mother, during most of his early life, was a poor widow, and the boy had to work hard. When he was sixteen, however, a family friend took him to Cleveland, Ohio, and gave him a good common school education. An older brother of Quantrell had left Maryland and settled in Kansas, where the clash between the North and the South was already on. The fiercest enmity existed between the Kansans, who were Abolitionists, and the Missourians, who were slaveholders. Armed bands patrolled the border and skirmishes were frequent. The Kansans, or Jayhawkers, as they were called, often made raids into Missouri for the purpose of stealing slaves, and the Missourians, or Border Ruffians, raided back. Desperate men arise under such conditions, and Charles Quantrell was one of them. In 1855 his brother sent for him to join him and go overland to California. The boy did so and they started. One night, while encamped on the Little Cottonwood River, on the way, they were set upon by a company of Gen. Jim Lane's Jayhawkers. The brother was shot to death. Quantrell was desperately wounded and left for dead, all their belongings being stolen by the Jayhawkers. For two days Quantrell watched by the side of his dead brother, fighting the buzzards in the daytime and the wolves at night. Death was swooping down on him, too, when an old Indian happened along and rescued him. The brother's body was buried, and Quantrell was carried to the tepee of the Indian and nursed back to health.

In that convalescence he vowed to be revenged. What his plans were he never divulged to any man, but he must have plotted the whole scheme out at that time, for when he left the Indian's tent he was Quantrell no longer, but Charles Hart. Never a word did he tell of the fight that night on the Little Cottonwood. He was willing to bide his time, for he was a patient man. He took a school and taught the remainder of the year in a country town. Then he went to Leavenworth and enlisted in Lane's Jayhawkers. He was a fine soldier. Temperate, industrious, bright, he rose from the ranks to a lieutenancy. The time had come for his revenge. Already the war clouds were thickening. Fights with the Border Ruffians were becoming more frequent. The Indians, too, were troublesome, and Lane's regiment was kept busy. Quantrell was the most indefatigable of them all. Lane was his friend. He admired the modest, clean-shaven, handsomely dressed young Lieutenant who was so prompt to respond to every call. All Lawrence, for it was in this ill-fated town that Lane's regiment had its headquarters, was taken with the young soldier and so upon his shoulders fell a great share of the work of keeping down the slaveholders across the border. So far as any one could discern Quantrell performed his work with the greatest zest.

But there was a peculiar misfortune following the regiment. It was first noticed late in the fall of 1858. One day Quantrell was sent with a detail of three men to convoy a train of stolen slaves that was coming out of Missouri via the underground railway, which was the name applied in those days to the devious route by which negroes were passed along by the abolitionists to Canada and freedom. When the convoy came back one of the men was missing. Quantrell reported with deep regret to Lane that the man had been on sentry duty and when his relief turned out the man was found dead with a navy revolver bullet hole in the middle of his forehead. Some Border Ruffian had shot him and crept away like a coward. Strangely enough the abolitionist who was in charge of the slaves was found dead with his bones picked by the buzzards and a hole in the centre of his skull. He lay near the dead sentry and his death was attributed to the same murderer, an unknown Border Ruffian.

A little later four companies of Lane's men, including Quantrell's, were ordered down around Fort Scott to check the Missourians who had been doing harm across the Kansas border. When they returned sixty men were missing, forty-two of whom had fallen in encounters with the enemy. But the other eighteen! Every one had fallen mysteriously at night with a bullet hole from a navy revolver in the center of his forehead. It was very strange, said the men in the regiment, but a week later it was forgotten, because events were moving swiftly and because death in those days was a frequent visitor and in many guises. But still men kept falling at the sentry posts, always with the navy revolver bullet holes in their foreheads. Every dash after the Indians, every raid across the border counted its one, two or three victims, whom no one saw die and in whose foreheads was always the deadly blue puncture. A panic came upon the men. A murderous traitor was abroad. Suspicion looked slant-eyed in all directions. Lane sought counsel of Quantrell. They laid plans to catch this supernatural assassin who slew always at night and always with one bullet in the forehead, but nothing came of it. There was a lull in the deaths and quiet was soon restored.

One night Quantrell and his company Captain, sitting by a camp fire, went back into their lives and opened pages of their history. The Captain told with much apparent pleasure of a little foray on which he had taken his company several years before. They had fallen upon a camping party on the Little Cottonwood River and wiped them out. The party's belongings they had sold, spending the proceeds on a spree, Quantrell listened with his eyes turned away and said nothing. Three days later the captain's body was found with a bullet hole from a navy revolver in his head. Again there was a hue and cry. Suspicions thickened. No man was free from them, but through it all Quantrell bore himself with matchless coolness. When they brought the Captain's body into camp he stood beside the corpse, pale as the face of the dead man, and apparently stricken with grief. Kneeling beside it, he stroked the man's black hair and took an oath to find his murderer.

Once more there was a lull in the harvest of the avenging angel. The old vigilance was relaxed. Suspicion died with the crowding of events. Quantrell was still the same grave, pleasant man, immaculate in dress, faultless in bearing, all attention to the details of duty. So it was that when a man was needed to ride out into the West and chase a band of ugly indians, Quantrell was chosen. He took with him 114 men, and was gone two months. Not an indian was seen, not a border ruffian met with, and yet, when the command returned, fourteen men were missing. They were dead on the plains, each with a bullet hole in his skull. Quantrell was called on to explain their absence. An extravagant storm of fury was raised about him, bnt he was as calm and cold as stone. He told what little he knew—how the men had gone out on detached duty and never returned. On investigation their bodies would be found, and that was all. Although suspicion against him was not wiped out by his explanations, it was allayed in a measure. He retained his command and men still died that weird death.

How much longer this would have continued no one knows, but something happened which changed everything. Quantrell planned a raid into Missouri. He wanted to steal the slaves of a Jackson county farmer. He called for volunteers, and got seven. When their preparations were complete they rode away across the border and hid in some timber about two miles from the house of the man they were to rob. Then Quantrell went out alone to reconnoitre.

He reported that the negroes were already to skip as soon as the farmer and his three sons should be overpowered. He did not report, however, that he had been in the farmer's house and dined with him. That night under cover of the darkness, the Jayhawkers, with Quantrell at their head, crept stealthily up to the house. Not a dog barked—a strange circumstance in itself to those accustomed to Missouri farmhouses, but no one took notice of it. Arriving in front of the door, Quantrell advanced alone and knocked. The others stood back with their carbines ready. There was no answer to the first summons, and Quantrell rapped again. The door flew open—not on a jar, but wide. Quantrell leaped within. A flash followed his disappearance. Four of the Jayhawkers fell. The three others turned to run. There was another flash. Two more Jayhawkers fell. The third ran on wounded. He was followed and killed in the woods.

"Two days later Quantrell turned up in Lawrence unhurt. He reported his command wiped out. There was a howl of rage. His death was demanded. Treachery was openly charged. The grand jury investigated the matter, but there was no evidence against him. Dead men tell no tales, and neither did the men whom Quantrell chose as his confederates in that crime. He was acquitted, and moved about town as unconcernedly as before. He was as calm and as courteous as though suspicion were dead again in every breast. But this time it would not die. His usefulness was impaired, from his point of view, so he threw off the mask, crossed the border, and openly took up arms against the regiment of which he had so long been an officer. He fought on openly, relentlessly, and with the same cold-blooded, cruel butchering methods until he died in battle, hated and feared throughout the whole north as the most horrible monster of a most horrible war. Quantrell never talked much of his deeds, because it was not his nature, but there are men living today to whom he told that terrible story of assassination which constituted his vengeance for the death of his brother. Of the men who were engaged in that affair on the Little Cottonwood river, he boasted that only two escaped, these two going to California. The last three left in Kansas fell that night in the attempted slave raid on the Missouri farmer.

YELLOW JOURNALISTIC ACCURACY.—Secretary Hay, who has been ill of late, took the trouble to read over an article about politics in the East and the Alaskan treaty, published in one of the yellow journals. He said to a friend who had dropped in to see him at his office at the State Department one afternoon, "I had a little time to spare this afternoon, so I have taken the trouble to go over this three-fourths of a column and mark the iuaccurate statements that it contains. There are in it just twenty-nine lies and two correct statements.

A FIERY AUGUST.—Just how hot August was in New York may be gathered from the fact that the mean temperature throughout the month was 77 degrees—about the average in Manila, by the way. The highest recorded was 95 degrees. The blessings of life in San Francisco, where the thermometer rarely goes into ecstasies and seldom drops into torpidity, need not be dwelt upon in such a connection.

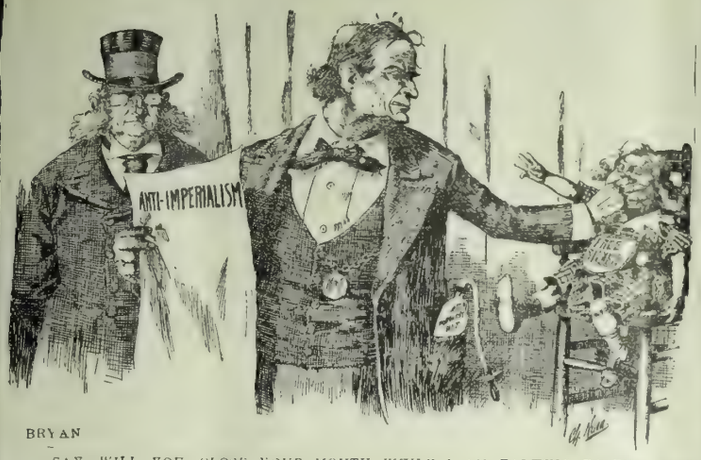
BLIND TYPEWRITERS.—The work of blind women typewriters is one of the interesting features of the United States Treasury Department. It is said that their work is equal to that of the best operators, and as much is expected of them in dictation and copying as those who have their eye-sight. So satisfactory is the work of these blind clerks that it is proposed to give opportunity to many more next year. There are now only three or four employed.

THE VAINEST PEOPLE.—A French explorer has discovered on the west coast of Africa what he regards as the vainest people on earth. They are the Pahonins, a warlike tribe, whose main employment is the adornment of their persons, chiefly by means of tattooing. Great ingenuity is also exhibited in dressing their hair.

ANCIENT CITY WALL OF BABYLON.—Modern research has again strikingly verified ancient records. Herodotus told of the city wall of Babylon as being so thick that upon the top of it there was room for two rows of houses, with a roadway between them wide enough for four chariots to be driven abreast. Dr. Koldeway, the archæologist, now reports the finding of this wall, the top of which is 136½ feet wide. The dimension amply vindicates the record of Herodotus.

ATTENDANCE AT RUSSIAN UNIVERSITIES has suffered a noticeable decrease during the present academic term. The St. Petersburg university has dropped from 3867 students to 3662, and the Moscow university, with its 4408 students has 382 fewer than last year, while the Kief institution has lost 390 students. It is generally believed that the steps taken last year by the authorities, abridging the rights and the liberties of the universities is the cause of of this retrogression.

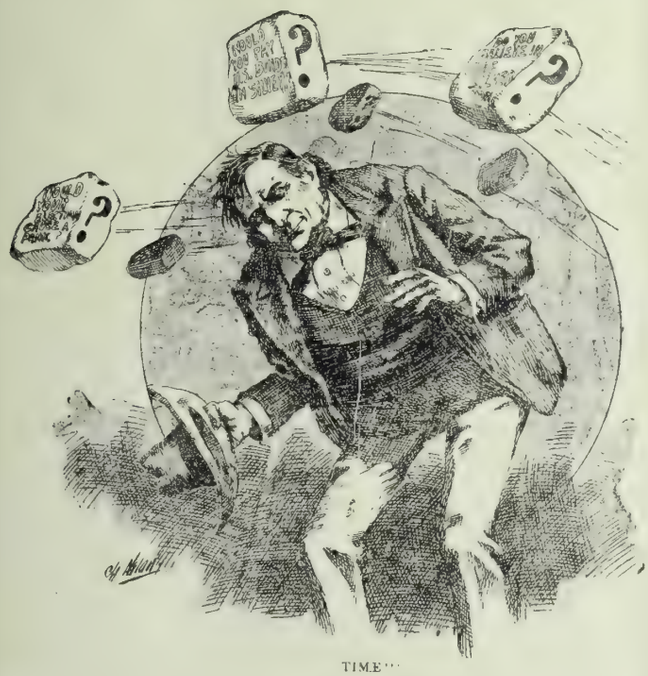
¶ THE ZEALOUS VIENNESE POLICE.—The extreme zeal of the Viennese police is a subject for wonder even in the censored journals of the Austrian metropolis. A lady was walking along the Kaerntuer Ring when the police stopped her, objecting to her dress. Not that she was wearing knickerbockers when on foot instead of on a bicycle, or had in any other way imitated men's dress. Oh! no, nothing of the sort; she had on a very feminine piece of finery, a hat trimmed with the enormous feathers now so much affected by many ladies. That was her offense.



BRYAN

SAY, WILL YOU CLOSE YOUR MOUTH WHILE I AM TALKING TO THE EAST-

Don Quixote Bryan Madly Charging a Flock of Windmills



TIME...

UNCLE DICK'S LESSONS TO THE YOUNG . N°3

'This one-man power is a deadly, dangerous thing, both in business and government

RICHARD CROKER

"THE ABSENT MINDED BEGGAR"—TO DATE.

Smith's son, Brown's son, son of a plutocrat—
Son of a Pittsburg iron man, its all the same today
Each one doing his own good work, but where in the world's the fat!
So write your checks, dig up the dough and Pay! Pay! Pay!

FOLLOWERS OF AQUINALDO AND DON PAUL

The Emperor of China and the Empress Dowager start another perambulating capital.

Courier Republican

Nelan in N. Y. Herald
" " "
Carter in Minneapolis Times

Philadelphia Inquirer
C. G. Bush in Sunday World

CURRENT CARTOONS

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post Office as second class matter. Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months $1.75; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—September 15, 1900—Seattle

The President's Letter of Acceptance.

A MANLY straightforward document is President McKinley's letter of acceptance. Mr. Bryan's poor sophistries, loud pretentions and carefully framed phrases seem poor indeed beside it. It breathes a rugged honesty. It is built upon a sound, secure foundation, and one feels that the county will be safe in the hands of the man who wrote it.

The difference between President McKinley's letter and Mr. Bryan's utterance, is the difference between gold and tinsel, the difference between the house built of enduring stone and the exposition building, graceful to look upon, but built of staff. There are no brilliant catchy phrases to cull from the McKinley letter to tickle the cheap side of one's intellect, but there are some good, wholesome sentences, meaty with plain common sense and unanswerable logic. Pointing out that in all three platforms of the parties nominating Mr. Bryan, there is an emphatic denunciation of the gold standard and a declaration for the immediate restoration of free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Mr. McKinley says:

"It will be noted thas the demand is for the immediate restoration of the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1. If another issue is paramount, this is immediate. It will admit of no delay, and will suffer no postponement. * * * The relative importance of the issnes I do not stop to discuss. All of them are important. Whichever party is successful will be bound in conscience to carry into administration and legislation its several declarations and doctrines. One declaration will be as obligatory as another, but all are not immediate. It is not possible that these parties would treat the doctrine of 16 to 1, the immediate realization of which is demanded by their several platforms, as void and inoperative in the event that they should be clothed with power. * * It is, therefore, the imperative business of those opposed to this financial heresy to prevent the triumph of parties whose union is only assured by adherence to the silver issue."

Dealing with the Tariff, he reiterates full faith and adherence to the principle that has brought so much of prosperity to the country.

"The amount of our exports for the year 1900 over those of the exceptionally prosperous year of 1899, was about half a million dollars for every day of the year, and these sums have gone into the homes and enterprises of the people. There has been an increase of over $50,000,000 in the exports of agricultural products, $92,692,220 in manufactures, and in the products of the mines over $10,000,000. Our trade balances cannot fail to give satisfaction to the people of the country. In 1898 we sold abroad $615,432,676 of products more than we bought abroad; in 1899, $529,874,813, and in 1900, $544,471,701, making during the three years a total balance in our favor of $1,689,779,190—nearly five times the balance of trade in our favor for the whole period of 108 years from 1790 to June 30, 1897 inclusive."

* * * * * *

Five years ago we were selling Government bonds bearing as high as five per cent interest. Now we are redeeming them with a bond at par bearing two per cent interest. We are selling our surplus products and lending our surplus money to Europe. One result of our selling to other nations so much more than we have bought from them during the past three years is a radical improvement of our financial relations. The great amounts of capital which have been borrowed of Europe for our rapid, material development have remained a constant drain upon our resources for interest and dividends, and made our money market liable to constant disturbances by calls for payment or heavy sales of our securities whenever money stringency or panic occurred abroad. We have now been paying these debts and bringing home many of our securities and establishing countervailing credits abroad by our loans, and placing ourselves upon a sure foundation of financial independence.

Speaking of American shipping, the President points out that he has several times directed the attention of Congress to the importance of developing American shipping, and to emphasize his position, he says:

Ninety-one per cent of our exports and imports are now carried by foreign ships. For ocean transportation we pay annually to foreign shipowners over $165,000,000. We ought to own the ships for our carrying trade with the world and we ought to build them in American shipyards and man them with American sailors. Our citizens should receive the transportation charges now paid to foreigners. I have called the attention of Congress to this subject in my several annual messages.

On the question of trusts he has taken the only position that any honest man can take:

Combinations of capital which control the markets in commodities necessary to the general use of the people, by suppressing natural and ordinary competition, thus enhancing prices to the general consumer, are obnoxious to the common law and the public welfare. They are dangerous conspiracies against the public good and should be made the subject for prohibitory or penal legislation. Publicity will be a helpful influence to check this evil. This uniformity of legislation in the several States should be secured. Discrimination between what is injurious and what is useful and necessary in business operations is essential to the wise and effective treatment of this subject. Honest co-operation of capital is necessary to meet new business conditions and extend our rapidly increasing foreign trade, but conspiracies and combinations intended to restrict business, create monopolies and control prices should be effectually restrained.

The letter of acceptance traverses with historical accuracy the Spanish war, and all of its accompanying issues. Step by step it brings the reader up to the time when the Treaty of Paris was laid before the Senate for its approval or disapproval. Up to this point the most rabid anti-expansionist would find it difficult to place his finger on a flaw in the policy of this government toward Spain or the Philippines. Documents, proclamations and instructions regarding the Philippines are collated and are here for the first time brought together for the information of the American people. We advise every American citizen to read them and judge for himself whether or not the administration has evidenced the slightest tendency that would justify the charge of Imperialism. Space will not permit a reproduction of Mr. McKinley's unanswerable logic in connection with Imperialism. He fairly toasts Mr. Bryan. He skins him alive, and pushing the spit through him, roasts him in a quiet, dignified tone that must make that charlatan wince. He says among other things:

Are our opponents against the treaty? If so, they must be reminded that it could not have been ratified in the Senate but for their assistance. The Senate which ratified the treaty and the Congress which added its sanction by a large appropriation, comprised senators and representatives of the people of all parties.

Would our opponents surrender to the insurgents, abandon our sovereignty, or cede it to them? If that be not their purpose, then it should be promptly disclaimed, for only evil can result from the hopes raised by our opponents in the minds of the Filipinos, that with their success at the polls in November there will be a withdrawal of our army and our American sovereignty in the archipelago; the complete independence of the Tagalo people recognized and the powers of government over all other peoples of the archipelago conferred upon Tagalo leaders.

* * * * * *

The American people are asked by our opponents to yield the sovereignty of the islands of the Philippines to a small fraction of the population, a single tribe out of eighty or more inhabiting the archipelago, a fraction which wantonly attacked the American troops in Manila while rightful possession under the protocol with Spain, awaiting the ratification of the treaty of peace by the Senate, and which has since been in active, open rebellion against the United States. We are asked to transfer our sovereignty to a small minority in the islands, without consulting the majority, and abandoning the largest portion of the population which has been loyal to us, to the cruelties of the guerrilla insurgent bands. More than this, we are asked to protect this minority in establishing a government, and to this end repress all opposition of the majority. We are required (by the Democratic platform) to set up a stable government in the interest of those who have assailed our sovereignty and fired on our soldiers, and then maintain it at any cost or sacrifice against its enemy, with and against those having ambitious designs without.

This would require an army and navy far larger than is now maintained in the Philippines, and still more in excess of what will be necessary with the full recognition of our sovereignty. A military support of authority not our own, as thus proposed, is the very essence of militarism which our opponents in their platform oppose, but which by their policy would of necessity be established in its most offensive form.

If these few extracts will whet the appetite of the reader, and induce him to read the menage in full, their publication is justified. No editorial review of the message can do it justice. It is a statesmenlike document, addressing itself to intelligent men.

Roosevelt's Chicago Reception.

THE Chicago workingmen turned out last Monday in a monster parade and were addressed by Mr. Bryan and Governor Roosevelt, both of whom were the guests of labor on that occasion. The Democratic morning papers say:

"Bryan was greeted with cheers and warm enthusiasm; Roosevelt with hisses, jeering remarks and chill indifference. It is not pleasant to relate, but Chicago workingmen, bitter from the privations of a seven months' lock-out, showed unmistakably their personal and political feelings. . . . The two political leaders sat almost side by side in the balcony of the Auditorium Hotel. . . . There was instant recognition of the distinguished guests. 'Hurrah for Bryan' was the dominant note. Occasionally a shout would go up from some lone parader for 'Teddy.' But Roosevelt had to run a battery more difficult to face than Gatlings: 'Shoot him in the back!' 'Volunteers no good, hey?' Roosevelt quivered as the first shot struck him, then braced himself for the volley and grinned like a Cheshire cat for three hours."

If this account is the truth, then the wretches guilty of the insults were cowardly and despicable beyond expression. If it is untrue, then the Examiner has slandered the Chicago man of labor in a most unforgivable manner. But assuming it to be true, assuming that malice, ignorance, and utter depravity of mind should prompt men to hiss and hurl insults at a "distinguished guest" who was utterly powerless to defend himself; assuming that the cowardly thrusts stung Roosevelt and made him "quiver" and "brace himself" to withstand three hours of such gratuitous insults, what shall we say of the intelligent journalist who prints the tale of it, in black-faced type, in a spirit of gleefulness, as a victory for any political party claiming to possess an ounce of decency. Any man deserving of the name of "man" would rather have been one of the "lone paraders" shouting for "Teddy" than to have been one of the "battery" that flung indignities and insults at a defenseless guest.

Is Los Angeles in California.

FIFTY years ago to day, or yesterday rather, California was admitted to the glorious family of states. Its area extended from "snowy Shasta on the north to sun-kissed San Diego on the south. Its hardy pioneers thrilled with pleasure and patriotism at the great work they had accomplished in the short period of American occupation and set their shoulders to the wheel for the accomplishment of greater things.

To them, it was all for "California."

To-day, I, the son of one of those pioneers, am sitting in this southern city of that same commonwealth, exiled from participation in the burst of enthusiastic patriotism, now being lovingly bestowed on the memory of the '49er in my native city. Here, all is the same as on the other 300 odd working days of the year. All the stores and workshops are opened and running the same as usual.

It is true, that, by edict of the governor the public offices and banks have been forced to close, but aside from an occasional notice "Closed on account of a legal holiday" posted on the various banks no other sign of the state's fiftieth birthday is evident. By actual count but four flags are floating from private buildings on the main business thoroughfares; one being on the Wilcox building owned by San Franciscans, one raised by the local branch of a San Francisco clothing establishment, another on the Temple building and the fourth on the Laughlin block owned by a gentleman but recently from the east, though a true Californian at heart.

Aside from this meager display of the national colors, not another vestage of display is to be seen; neither are there any exercises nor public ceremony to denote the import of the day. Is the Tehachapi the southern boundary of California?

"San Franciscan."

Los Angeles, Sept. 10, 1900.

A Caballero from Fresno

Estrella Parlor and its Star
Sunset Parlor on Market Street

Captain Jack Crawford

Features of the Native Sons of the Golden West Pageant on Admission Day

His Terrible Cough.

Few things are so depressing and weakening as a constant cough. Few things are as discouraging as a cough that will not yield to treatment. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures coughs when all other medicines fail, because it is more than a cough medicine. The cough is but a symptom. "Discovery" makes new and pure blood, heals the lacerated tissues, and gives the body the needed strength to throw off disease. It cures the cough by curing the cause of the cough. There is no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotic in the "Discovery."

"I had a terrible cough something over a year ago and could find nothing to stop it, or even to do me a particle of good," writes Mr. J. M. Farr, of Cameron, Screven Co., Ga. "I chanced to see an advertisement of yours, and forthwith bought a bottle of your invaluable 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Before I had taken half a bottle I was entirely well."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, in paper covers, free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Sign of the Peacock

229 GEARY ST.

Theatre Suppers

Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast

ORDERS DELIVERED

MRS. SACHT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

DIRECTIONS. Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT

Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:
Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt
708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.
Telephone Polk 1321
Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.
Mrs. Hansen, 141 Clara Street

Meditations of a Matron

By Mrs. Cricket

THIS, my dear Diary, has been a week of great excitement, owing to the crowds of people in town. I am a native daughter, but I do not belong to any of the associations or parlors, nor so far as that goes, to anything that makes me different from the hundreds of people who were not born here. I am not a person who is specially devoted to organizations, but I do enjoy watching others have their fun.

A great many of the girls have returned to town; in fact, I think all but the Hopkins, Prestons and Josselyns. They invariably remain away until late in the year. Helen Hopkins has all her trosseau quite ready. It is beautiful too, and so well chosen. Were she a New York girl, I suppose cuts of some of her lingerie would appear in the yellow journals. Her taste, as we have all had reason to know for several years, is excellent and she has displayed it to its usual lengths in the selection of her gowns. She will make a very handsome bride. Last week Ed Greenway gave Gus and Helen a dinner. It was in the red room of the Bohemian Club and chaperoned by the Mountford Wilsons and Mrs. Henry Scott. Helen looked superb, so did Therese Morgan and Mollie Thomas. It was a beautifully decorated table and the food cooked to perfection. Robert was away, so Mr. Greenway told me for once to forget I was married. I had such a jolly time, as I sat near Fred McNear. I am afraid I received all his attention, but I am too infinitely good a friend of all the girls for them to mind my flirtations. Edith McBean, Therese Morgan' Carrie Taylor, Will Taylor, Al Stetson, Fred McNear and I were the life of the affair. We drank Helen's and Gus' health until I do not think they could be unhappy even were they to try. Mr. Greenway was, as usual, full of fun, and altogether we had a joyous evening. The Morgans are to give a dinner on Friday evening. Their dinners, too, are always exceedingly worth while. How I love the gayety of dressing up again and flying about. I really wish at times I had not married. I honestly do not see how I can manage to exist this winter unless I go to some of the dances. We are to have splendid Monday night dances—really swell ones; the sort of things that are to be very exclusive and at which we shall all dress just as magnificently as possible—fine music, beautiful decorations and a good supper. I do not know much about the fortnightly dances, but I think we may count upon them too. They were so popular last year, and Mrs. Salisbury has the faculty of gathering the nicest girls and men about her. I shall join everything and go wherever I can.

Leila and I have been so deeply interested in the number of really good looking men that have been in town during the week of the celebration—great big broad-shouldered fellows with bright eyes aud clearly cut features. I could have lost my heart to ever so many of them. I always have a keen desire to go and talk to some of them in order to test their intelligence. I suppose many are really bright. I have often heard that country fellows are excellent dancers. If a man can dance well and is good fun at a dinner, what more could any girl desire? How I wish Robert was a dancing man! Saturday evening Papa hired a tug and we went out on the bay.

Coming down on the car I met Bernie Drown, who had just returned from the East. I never saw her look so well in my life. She was going on the Iowa with Mrs. Voorhies. After we had grown tired of steaming about, watching the burning barge, the fireworks and the hundreds of little crafts we came up to the Iowa and all went aboard. There was Mrs. McCutcheon, whom Robert says is very bright and charming, chaperoning a party. Sara Collier was in it; so was Genevieve Carolan. There is such a difference between Sara Coller and Genevieve Carolan. Sara is tall and distinguished looking, with fine features. Genevieve's beauty lies in her brilliant coloring and pretty eyes. Cora Smedburg was there, too. I think she is exceedingly pretty and I really like 'Cozy!' Charlotte Ellinwood, Lottie Cunningham and Mamie Polhemus were chaperoned by Mrs. Page and Katherine Dillon by her mother, Mrs. Casey. The officers looked fine in their uniforms. I can't quite make up my mind which of the three, Mr. Bulmer, Mr. Winship or Mr. Jensen looked the handsomest. Of course, mama prefers Mr. Winship, but I do like Mr. Bulmer very much. Mrs. Kautz is still quite ill with a cold. Mr. Boyd, to whom I have given a large part of my heart, was also on board. He has the most captivating smile. Had he fallen in love with me I very much fear I should have succumbed to that smile. I look upon matrimony as a fate, and I was not destined to cross Mr. Boyd's path. I believe he returns to Manila on the 15th. Poor fellow, I do hate to hear of nice men being sent there.

The Huntingtons have returned to town. They are in mourning for their grand-uncle so will not entertain this year. I am sorry, for we had several jolly parties at their house last season. They have an excellent ballroom. Genevieve Goad-Martin and Mamie McNutt are in town again; so are the Hagers. Walter Dean looks so well after his sojourn in the northern part of the State. I hope he and Emilie will stay here now, for I am sure they would give any number of jolly dinners. Alice and Ethel Hager are both fond of entertaining, so the three would have great fun.

Everyone is speaking of the lack of debutantes this winter I hoped that Hazel King and Ethel Dean would come out but they have returned to college. Flora Dean-Magee will make her debut as a young married woman and hopes to entertain quite a good deal. She is handsomer than ever since her return. The A. A. Moores of Oakland have taken the Al. Moore house on the corner of Powell and California. It is fine for parties, and they know so many really clever men it will be jolly to go to their dinners. Jacqueline Moore has gone for a three months' trip to Europe with her brother and sister-in-law. Leila left Tuesday to meet Aunt Sybil in New York. I would have been tremendously happy, but she took it quite as cooly as though it had been the most ordinary thing in the world. On Wednesday I am going to the wedding of Claire Hamilton and George Martin. It is not to be a church affair however. The Murphys have taken that big house of the Galpins on Jackson street for three months. They then anticipate spending a few months in Washington with Mrs. Biddle, and later, will go to Europe. I trust by that time that Robert and I shall be able to go, too. This is all I can think of this week, now Diary dear, so good-bye.

The Art of Cutting Gems.

The art of cutting, engraving, and polishing jewels has never reached, in the world's history, a higher state of perfection than it possesses to-day. The art, it is true, is a costly one, and it requires the devotion of much time and delicate manipulation to approximate, if not excel, the beautiful designs and work of the ancients. To-day this is merely a matter of price. If people want this, and will only pay the price, they can secure jewels with cutting, engraving, and polishing that would astonish the inhabitants of the old world and almost forgotten City of Persepolis.

The original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St. stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account July 1st, 1900, $2,453,469.59

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China-Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President ..... B. A. Becker
First Vice-President ..... Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President ..... H. Horstmann
Cashier ..... A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier ..... Wm. Hermann
Secretary ..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary ..... A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900 ..... $26,952,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218,093
Contingent Fund 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. ☞Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 MARKET STREET, S. F.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

VAMOS Á MEXICO

A PERSONALLY CONDUCTED
EXCURSION TRAIN
OF PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS
WILL BE RUN BY THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY
TO THE
CITY OF MEXICO
LEAVING
San Francisco, Wednesday, Nov. 14
Los Angeles the following day
ROUND TRIP TICKETS
From San Francisco . $80
From Los Angeles . . . $70
GOOD FOR 60 DAYS
RATES FROM OTHER POINTS IN PROPORTION

Most delightful season of the year in the quaint old republic. Complete arrangements for cheap side trips.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS, INQUIRE OF
AGENT S. P. CO. AT DEPOT

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:
For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.
For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Sept. 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, Oct. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.
For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. Sept. 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Oct. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.
For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. Sept. 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, Oct. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.
For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.
For further information obtain company's folder.
The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.
TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).
GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING-ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, with Barber, Dining-Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.
617 Market Street (Palace Hotel),
San Francisco, Cal.

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, September 19, at 2 p. m.
S. S. Moana for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday October 3, at 8 p. m.
Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

American Actors in London

By Robert Porter

AMERICA, and especially California, has just right to be proud of many of her sons who have gone abroad and won distinction in art, in letters and in things theatrical. In London at the present time there are many Americans in the front ranks of promising actors and not a few of these are Californians by nativity or adoption. The tale is trite by now; repetition has staled it, but the names of Holbrook Blin, Paul Arthur, Frank Mills, Helen McBeth, Gertrude Elliott, Fay Davis, Julie Opp, John Sullivan and a half dozen more are as familiar in America as in London.

Gertrude Elliott's Success.

Of the women Gertrude Elliott has gone most rapidly and with the least advertising to the foremost position. A year ago she surprised London theatre-goers in the ingenue role of Clyde Fitch's "Lady and the Cowboy." The play failed but both Maxine and Gertrude Elliott made great personal success. Goodwin retrieved his earlier failure with "An American Citizen," in which Miss Elliott again scored, and when the company returned to America Arthur Bouchier persuaded her to remain. As the pretty inconsequent but utterly spoiled princess in "Captain Marshall's delightfully dainty play "A Royal Family," the American girl won applause. The same pleasant fate attended her efforts in Bouchier's revival of "His Excellency the Governor" and in R. C. Carton's play "Lady Huntsworth's Experiment," which was the best received of London's new plays last year. In all her work in England Miss Elliott has played ingenue parts. So many people besides her personal friends will be watching Mr. Forbes Robertson's experiment with deep interest, for this foremost of English speaking actors has chosen Gertrude Elliott to play leading roles with him during the coming year. To play Ophelia to the greatest Hamlet of any time—how many an actress of experience and reputation would find joy in the chance that has come to the young American girl.

Gertrude Elliott.

Frank Mills

Helen Macbeth

Frank Mills.

Speaking of Robertson naturally brings Frank Mills to mind. Mills slaved year after year in the Alcazar Stock Company. Nine performances a week, a new play each seven days, and a more than occasional extra matinee on holidays is experience that makes for the best or worst development. Daniel Frohman gave Mills his chance when Mrs. Leslie Carter opened in London in "The Heart of Maryland." It failed but Mills was recognized by the critics. To fill in a failing season Mrs. Fiske was presented in "Sue." London's college of critics gave her unstinted applause, and hardly less to Mills who was the acrobat villain of the play. Quick to see his opportunity the young American accepted Beerbohm Tree's offer and again he scored as Athos of "The Three Musketeers." As Sakata, in Chester Fernald's delightful Japanesque idyll the "Moonlight Blossom," he was hardly fitted, but association with Robertson and Mrs. Patrick Campbell in this play paved the way for his final step to the eminence he has attained.

Forbes Robertson succumbed to pneumonia and Mills succeeded to his roles. The most difficult task that an actor could have was his to face. To follow an avowed favorite in a part which that favorite had made distinctively his own was trying. But our player came through with triumph. As the apostate priest, with wonderfully spiritual grace, Robertson had presented a picture ranked with his best efforts. With an altogether different conception of the character Mills followed the older man's presentation in a way that gained for him acknowledged position in the first rank, and now that the famous Robertson-Campbell partnership has dissolved Mills is chosen Mrs. Campbell's leading man. The wise say that some day on his shoulders the mantle of Forbes Robertson will fall.

Holbrook Blinn's Victory.

Blinn, the irrepressible Holbrook, owes his grip on the heart of the London play-goer and manager alike to his finished and novel picture of Wing Shee, the learned philosopher, the avenger of Hoo Chee, the cherub of Fernald's remarkable little Chinatown tragedy. For a year the "Cat and the Cherub" held the attention of the theatre-goers and during that time Blinn's reputation increased. When Martin Harvey undertook his own management, he immediately chose Blinn for his company. During the whole of the long run of the "Only Way," Blinn's masterly playing as Defarge, the nemesis of the D'Everemonds, divided interest with Harvey's Carton, and Miss Di Silva's picture of Mimi.

Again in the Spanish "Don Juan," while the play was so dire a failure that even Harvey failed to score, Blinn again won a personal success. It is said probably that one of the best studies of extreme age that was ever given on the London stage, always excepting Irving's Corporal Brewster, is Blinn's old man in that exquisite little play, "Ib and Little Christina."

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.
Get full information and handsome folder at
641 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. MENTION THE WAVE.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 305.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured; Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glascow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist.—806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM

A Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.
Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

In the District Court of the United States, in and for the Northern District of California
IN THE MATTER OF }
Louise A. Brown }

Take notice that Louise A. Brown, bankrupt, above named, have been duly adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of Congress of July 1, 1898, and that the first meeting of the creditors has been called to meet at the office of the undersigned at room 94 Chronicle building, San Francisco, California, on Saturday the 29th day of September, 1900, at the hour of 11 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of proving their claims against the estate of said bankrupt, and that at the same time and place all creditors whose claims have been duly proven and allowed shall appoint one or three trustees of said estate.
Dated San Francisco, September 8th, 1900.
MILTON J. GREEN, Referee in Bankruptcy,
In and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Orpheum

Jessie Bartlett Davis, Johnstone Bennett; McGale and Daniels, Musical Duetists; Young America Quintette; Mossman and Willard; Querita Vincent, Delaney and Dore; Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

Columbia Theatre

WEEK BEGINNING MONDAY, SEPT. 17th

Every night including Sunday

Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell

and a strong company

Presenting a great double bill, Dion Boucicault's powerful one act drama

NAPOLEON'S GUARD

preceeding the psychological drama

THE BESLS

Clay Clement as Matthias.

Prices, $1, 75c, 50c, 25c, and 25c.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Monday, Sept. 17th

First time on any stage a farce that will make you laugh

THE WIDOW'S HUSBAND

Special engagement of Ada Lewis.

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.

Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Matinees every Saturday and Sunday

Week beginning Monday, Sept. 17th, The new Frawley Company by public demand.

Second and last week of the success of successes

QUO VADIS

Prices:—10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.

Saturday matinee, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents.

Branch Ticket Office, Emporium

★TIVOLI★

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.

Last times tonight and Sunday night of "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci" with the entire company alternating

Week of September 17th

Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights

FAUST

Nicolini, Berthald, Salassa, Graham and Lichter.

Note:—The famous "church scene" will be sung.

Tuesday, Thursday, Sunday nights, Saturday matinee

IL TROVATORE

Russo, Ferrari, Schuster, Poletini and Stewart

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents. Telephone Bush 9

Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

Grand Concert

GIVEN BY

ROSE ADLER RELDA

of the Opera Comique, Paris.

Friday Evening, September 21st

AT

Sherman and Clay Hall.

Reserved seats $1.50. Admission $1.00

CAFE ZINKAND

Go where the crowd goes

Listen to the matchless string band and enjoy the finest wines, beers and supper.

The Cafe Zinkand is society's gathering place after the show is over.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.

Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials, 488 Geary St., S.F.

Go where you will, the best saloons sell Jesse Moore Whiskey.

Ruth Benson and Helen Macbeth.

Blinn's wife, formerly Miss Ruth Benson, was well received as the Chinese girl in "The Cat and Cherub" and again in "Don Juan." She gave a very small part distinction. The better judges class her with Miss Helen Macbeth; from both of these aspiring American girls much is expected, and if steadily improving and consistent hard work are any criterion, the critics will not be disappointed. One of the best things of late seasons was Miss Macbeth in 'The First Violin." Latterly her work has been in Comedy, but it is in more serious lines that she will make fame.

Eleanor Calhoun.

Amongst the women of the English stage there is none more richly endowed than Eleanor Calhoun—none who to a greater degree blend temperament with the unremitting endeavor that makes the highest type of true artist. "The Moonlight Blossom," that most dainty exotic, redolent with the odors and atmosphere of the true Japan, ran fifty nights. Had her associates been endowed with half Miss Calhoun's sympathetic conception of its spirit, the little drama might well have been delighting the beauty-lover to this day. There was nothing hollow, forced or artificial about her picture of the Japanese widow. She was the jealous woman and the Japanese woman, and her appearance in no way broke the illusion. It was only the innate cleverness of the play that kept the other actors from seeming ridiculous—so far were they in appearance from the Japanese one knows. Her triumph as Lady Macbeth is so recent that it is still ringing.

THEATRICALS

Miss Adler's Success.

Miss Rose Adler Relda, a San Franciscan who has attained a very genuine success abroad, is to give a concert at Sherman & Clay Hall on next Friday evening, the 21st. The city of the Golden Gate has been the birthplace of a good many musical celebrities, but few can boast having sung a leading role in Paris as Miss Adler Relda can. She was engaged at the Opera Comique and sang Lakme thirty-five times. Subsequently Lecocq selected her to sing the Swan's song in his ballet "La Cygne." She is in San Francisco on a visit and returns at once to Paris.

* *

Miss Evelyn Henry, who was frequently heard in concert work, both in Oakland and in San Francisco, prior to her departure for New York some two years ago, where she has since been studying, under Theodor Bjkorsten, appeared at an invitational concert at Bar Harbor, Maine, on August 31st, given by Mrs. A. C. Barney of New York. During the evening Miss Henry had three numbers. Miss Hilda Newman, the well-known accompanist, was at the piano. The young vocalist sang under the auspices of Walter Damrosch, Park Godwin, Theodor Bjkorsten, Fremont Smith, Mrs. William T. Draper and Mrs. John Van Bibber.

* *

Theatrical Notes

"Faust" and "Il Trovatore" alternate at the Tivoli Opera House next week. "Faust" will be sung on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, while "Trovatore" will be given on Tuesday, Thursday, and Sunday evenings and at the matinee. Nicolini will sing Mephisto in "Faust," in which his reputation was first made; Salassa will be Valentine, Barron Berthald, Faust; Anna Lichter, Marguerite; and Frances Graham, Siebel. In "Trovatore" the cast will include Russo as Manrico; Ferrari as Count Luna; Effie Stewart is Leonora and Lia Politini Azecuna.

* *

The Clay Clement-L. R. Stockwell combination at the Columbia Theatre will present a double bill next week. The one act drama by Dion Boucicault "Napoleon's Guard," and "The Bells" in which Clay Clement does Matthias.

* *

Owing to the enormous and unprecedented demand at the Grand Opera House box office for seats for 'Quo Vadis," and the very apparent fact that it wil be impossible to accommodate all wishing to see this great production during the present week, it has been decided by the management of the theatre, and the Frawley Company, to continue the play another week.

* *

Jessie Bartlett Davis is the star at the Orpheum next week. She is certainly an expensive attraction but decidedly worth hearing. Among other members on the new bill are the Johnston Bros., instrumentalists, McGale and Daniels, Irish comedians, and the Young America Quintette.

* *

A new farce has the boards at the Alcazar next week "The Widow's Husband." It has been sometime since farce has held sway at this theatre and the patrons will welcome "The Widow's Hulband" as an appropriate change from grave to gay.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

The Ringling Circus.

Ringling Bros. circus is about the biggest that has ever visited California. It travels in three sections made up of 65 cars. In the first come the baggage wagons and the laborers; in the second is for the ring animals, trained horses, dogs, etc., and the subordinate performers; the third is the cage train in which travel the menagerie and the prominent members of the company. A good impression may be had of the resources of the organization by the character of its street parade which will be more than two miles in length. One section will show correctly uniformed soldiery of the important nations of the world. Another section will be a picture of Roman and Grecian splendor. Still another, a complete children's parade, with pony chariots and other novel effects delightful to child folk. Besides there are several bands of music, half a hundred gayly decorated cages, many tableau cars, open animal dens, chime and chuach bells and many other unique and picturesque features.

Wanted: Two Fine Saddle Horses.

September 12, 1900.

Two of the very best saddle horses that can be purchased on the Pacific Coast. Well bred, thoroughly broken, gentle under the saddle, of a kindly disposition, with easy mouth and gait, free from vicious habits, without blemish or defect, geldings, color black, bay or sorrel, height 15.1 to 15.3, weight not less than 1050 pounds nor more than 1200 pounds. Age 6 to 9 years, head and ears small, forehead broad, eyes large and prominent, vision perfect in every respect, chest full, broad and deep, forelegs straight and standing well under, barrel large and increasing from girth towards flank, back short and straight, withers elevated, loins and haunches broad and muscular, hocks well bent and under the horse, good mane and tail.

A liberal price will be paid. Address P. O. Box 2637.

N. B.—Useless to offer unless it is guaranteed that horse answers requirements in every respect and is in fact unusually fine.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

When your joints are stiff and your muscles sore from cold or rheumatism, when you slip and sprain a joint, strain your side or bruise yourself, PAIN-KILLER will take out the soreness and fix you right in a jiffy. Always have it with you, and use it freely. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain-Killer, Perry Davis'. 25 and 50 cents.

Mrs. Sacht's HAIR RESTORER is prompt to act and sure in its results. It is POSITIVELY HARMLESS AND NO DYE. You are cordially invited to inspect same at MRS. J. S. GOLDSCHMIDT'S Hair Dressing and Manicuring Parlors, 708 Polk Street, 'Phone Polk 1321, San Francisco, Cal.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO

WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.

American and European Plan.

WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.

N.W. Cor. Polk and California Sts., San Francisco

Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and upwards. Reasonable by the month. Tel. Hyde 2771

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE — Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,

MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss

Stereo Binoculars

The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power.

Prices, $47.50 to $80.00

Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.

OPTICIAN.

201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER

KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Alfred Cane — Luther A. Teague — Frederick Teague

TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE

Dentists

Claus Spreckels Building

Tel. Main 1459 — Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL

Trusts and combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the constant it is always the best.

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey. - - California

Recent Verse

The Dancing of Sister Ca'line.

FRANK L. STANTON.

BR'ER William play de fiddle Sister Ca'line hoppin' light,
En de room a-gwine 'roun' me, ez I swing her lef' an' right
All up en down de hall:
"Swing co'ners!" is de call—
"Bless God, dat Sister Ca'line is outdancin' er 'em all!"

De flo' wuz des a-creakin' en de frosty winders shake,
En de ol' folks sorter fidget at de music what we make;
En betwix' 'em dar's a scuffle
Fer ter dance de double shuffle,
Sister Ca'line gwine 'roun' 'em wid de flounces en de ruffle.
"Sister Ca'line—Sister Ca'line, ain't you dancin mighty much?
I mighty 'fraid de preacher gwine ter tu'n you out de chu'ch!"
But I tu'n en see de preacher—
De sollum gospill teacher -
A-swingin' Sister Ca'line ever' time dat he could reach her!

"Sister Ca'line—I is tired, en de fiddle tired, too!
Can't you stop untell de preacher take en marry me en you?
But de preacher kick the stubble
F'um his shoes, en swing em double:
"I ain't gwine marry any folks—dis ain't no time fer trouble!"

But w'en we gwine home'ards—'bout de breakin' er de day
I see de preacher huggin' Sister Ca'line all de way!
En hit sho' did take my bref—
Des lay me on de she'f.
When he 'low: "She hop so lively, I'll des marry her myse'f!"

—Leslie's Monthly.

From a Suffolk Farm.

C. E. C. WEIGALL.

WOKE last night at the hoot of owl,
When the hour was dark and dead;
Upon the hills the poplar-trees
Shook each one, in the far faint breeze,
Its slim and slender head.

The upland meadows were white with dew;
Like spectres against the sky
Stood oak and ash and sapling tall,
And the lilies under the garden wall
Shook as a bat brushed by.

Flooded with moonlight, the silver world
Showed fair as a dream might be;
The gabled house, with its window blind,
With the sleeping, dreamy souls behind,
Was part of my fantasy.

The owl he perched on an elder-bough
And laughed at the round white moon,
Till the ducks in the farmyard woke to hear,
And the sheep in the field lent a list'ning ear,
For this was his scornful rune—

"Sleeping and slumbering human souls,
I laugh at you all to-night,
For I alone, with the spectre bat,
And a thieving, prowling, midnight cat,
Am heir to the cold moonlight.

"But I alone am the bird of the moon,
And I alone do know
The secret of night and the weird gray dawn
That comes when the shivering day is born,
So I bid farewell to you all in scorn!"
With a flap of brown wings he was gone
As he shouted, "Tut-whit-u-whoo!"

Poker Adapted to their Purses.

The millionaire yacht owner who invites a company of friends on a cruise is often perplexed to find they cannot join his diversions on the basis of possessing great wealth. For instance, when it comes to the inevitable poker game, the man with but six or eight thousand often cannot risk the extreme profit or loss that his friend the millionaire can. This disparity is especially trying when the game continues over a series of months. However, a way has recently been found out of the difficulty whereby the poor man can afford to play with the rich one and not require equal capital. The method of deciding the extent to which each man will participate in the profits and the approximate extent of his losses is very simple. When the party sets out on a cruise, each member writes on a piece of paper the value at which he expects to play every chip and puts this paper into an envelope which is sealed and not opened until the end of the cruise. He may elect to have a red chip worth five cents, while another member of the party may make a red chip worth five dollars, and the yacht owner may value it at twice as much. The game is, of course, played entirely with chips. No money is handled until the time for a final settlement comes at the end of the trip. Then the letters are opened and the basis on which every man in the party has played is made clear. He shares in the profits and losses in accordance with the conditions contained therein and the guest with the smallest income is able to play freely with his many times millionaire host. Then is the situation adapted to the circumstances of the Little Brother of the Rich.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey—that's because you have signed the pledge.

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-312 POST STREET

SOHMER PIANO AGENCY SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.

HIGH GRADE Half-tone & Line

CUTS

Yosemite Engraving Co....

24 Montgomery Street

San Francisco

For Catalogues ... Souvenirs ... Newspapers ... Letter heads Etc.....

DR. CLYDE PAYNE

Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at

135 GEARY ST.

Phone Main 9. Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office 10 W. King St. HONOLULU. H. I.

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits $20.00
Pants..... 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

SAMPLES SENT FREE

IF YOU WANT
The Best Coal Oil
BUY

New Stories Re-Told.

SAM LONG'S AMBITION.—A big raw-boned cowboy named Sam Long, employed on a Texas ranch, cherished as his chief ambition a desire to have a dinner at Delmonicos in New York. This ambition was a source of much joy to his comrades, and the chaff about it reached the ears of a wealthy young man who had a property near by. He offered to take Sam as his guest to New York. In some way the idea became circulated among the cowboys that Delmonico's boasted of being able to provide a guest with anything, no matter how outlandish it might be. They proposed to Sam that he might win a triumph over the Gothamites by ordering something beyond the resources of their larder. "Ask 'em for fried rattlesnake's eggs," one suggested, "or stewed prairie dog, that'll stump them," said a second. Pickled wolves ears, owls' toes and sliced lizards were other uncanny requirements with which to best Delmonico's. A month later Sam returned from his excursion looking considerably abashed. "How did y' come out?" shouted the cowboys! "Did y' floor 'em? Did they have airy snake eggs? What about them owl's toes?" Sam looked distressed. "Well, fellers," he said sheepishly, "I have ter admit they brung me what I ordered. I'll tell ye how it was," replied Sam, slowly; "I got so bad skeered after I set down that I plumb forgot all you told me, and ordered ham an' eggs."

CONFOUND THE ORGAN. Best, the great organist, had a strong sense of personal dignity. He was a guest at a public dinner in the Liverpool town hall, and it was understood he was to give a recital on the grand organ afterwards. "The organ will now play," was the curt way in which the mayor, who was in the chair, announced the performance. Best, however, sat still. The mayor repeated the words in a louder tone; a messenger touched the musician on the shoulder. "Didn't you hear his worship, sir?" the man whispered. "The organ will now play." Best looked up with a surprised and injured air. "Confound the organ!" he exclaimed. "Let it play!" Then the mayor rose again. "Our distinguished fellow-townsman, Mr. Best," he said, "will now very kindly oblige us with a selection of music on the organ." Then Best rose and entertained the company

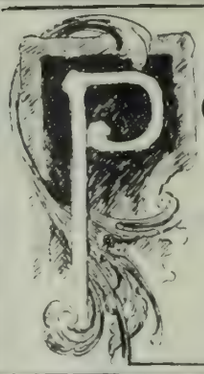
NOT IN HIS POLICE COURT.—The late Lord Russell was the best whist player in London and being a man of high temper resented poor judgment in a partner. He participated once in a game at the officer's mess of a crack regiment, his partner being a "haw-haw" sort of young officer, the scion of a noble house and the typical young guardsman of the lady novelist. He played most carelessly and the Lord Chief Justice's wrath soon asserted itself and he spoke sharply to the blase young soldier several times. At last he fired a particularly caustic verbal shot at him, whereupon the youth remarked with a drawl. "Look here, I say, old chap, you are not in your bloomin' police court now, you know."

A LENGTHY CALL.—He had been talking and talking and talking and talking until the poor girl was so tired and sleepy she didn't know whether it was this week or last week or come next Sunday, and the clock on the mantel was holding up its hands, either in pity or in protest. Finally it occurred to the young man that an evening call had its limits, at least in a latitude where the nights were not six months long. "Bless me!" he exclaimed, starting up suddenly, "it certainly must be time I was going home." "Oh," she said in a dazed kind of way, "it must be a good deal later than that."

DISILLUSION, IN NORTHUMBERLAND.—A group of Northumberland labourers were discussing a report of the death by suicide of one of their fellow-labourers which had turned out to be false. "Folk what sends them reports aboot owt to be punished," declared one man. "Hoots, man," ejaculated another, "whaat dis't mettor? Aa yence knew a man that read his aan deeth in the public paypors, but he didn't believe a word on't!"

HE DID NOT END WELL.—John Corning, who was superintendent of the Central Pacific Railway, when on a visit to his brother Erastus in Albany, was taken to church, and heard a sermon remarkable for its length. "What do you think of our preacher?" asked Erastus, as they left the church. "He is very fine," answered the practical railroad man, "but has poor terminal facilities."

AN IRISH REPLY.—An American travelling through County Wexford came to a ford and hired a boat to take him across. The water being rather more agitated than was agreeable, he asked the boatman if any person was ever lost on the passage. "Niver," replied the boatman. "My brother was drownded here last week, but we found him nixt day."



Palace Hotel

The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man, will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.

Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE GREAT FAIR AT Tanforan Park

Sept. 24th to Oct. 6th, 1900

Under Management of the San Francisco and San Mateo Agricultural Association

To the live-stock breeders of California, as well as to the lovers of out-door sports this exhibition is dedicated. The attraction will include: A High-class Open-air Horse Show, Select Herds of Prize Cattle, a complete exhibit of Swine, Sheep, Goats, Poultry and Belgian Hares. Extraordinary show of Dogs. Attractive exhibit of high-class Vehicles and other Industrial Displays from leading manufacturers of the State. The outdoor sports will embrace Polo Games, between players from Southern and Central California for championship; Pony Races; Long Distance Race of 25 miles, by noted riders; change of horses each mile, in full view of grandstand. Grand Athletic Field Day—Club Harness Racing: High-class Trotting and Pacing, in which the great stars of the east and west will meet and make world's records. All in all, the entertainment will be clean, dignified and instructive. Grand Musical Concerts Daily. Excellent railroad facilities by both regular and special trains to Grandstand entrance. Entertainment each day, from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

GEORGE ALMER NEWHALL, Secretary. HENRY J. CROCKER, President.
EDWIN F. SMITH, General Manager.

RINGLING BROS.

World's Greatest Shows

Grand Opening of the San Francisco Season

Wednesday Eve. Sept. 19

and continuing twice daily thereafter until Wednesday Sept 26th inclusive

Exhibition Grounds. 16th and Folsom Streets

The Greatest Circus in the World, and the only Positively Big One ever seen on the Pacific Coast. More Cars, More People, More Horses, More Elephants, More Performers, and More Novel Features than all the other shows combined.

NOTHING LIKE IT EVER SEEN ON EARTH BEFORE.

The talk of the country! The sensation of the day! Wednesday, Sept, 19th, at 10 a.m. the Largest, Richest, Most Resplendent Free Street Parade ever seen in San Francisco. Usual route over the down-town streets.

General admission—50 cents, Children under 12 years half price. Reserved numbered seats and admissions during the circus season at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s music store, corner Kearny and Sutter streets. Unlike other shows prices at down-town office are the same as charged at ticket wagon on show grounds.

THE SATURDAY WAVE

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY
AND JOURNAL OF EVENTS CURRENT.

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Reception of the Governor General of Canada and Lady Minto in Dawson City.

is published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Cal., and Colman Building, Seattle, Wash. Entered at the Post-Office as second class matter. Subscription: Per year, $2.00; six months, $1.00; three months, 75 cents. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE PUBLISHING COMPANY
PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—September 22, 1900—Seattle

The Santa Fe's Danger.

It is rumored among men who are wise in such matters, that the Santa Fe Railroad people are mixing up in politics with an abandon that used to characterize the political performances of its predecessor.

No one believes that the directors or the president of the Santa Fe system have any hand or part in these proceedings, but politically inclined employes, with an itch for power, seem to be dragging the institution into the game, and presently, after the mischief is done, there will be created a real necessity for a Santa Fe political bureau to protect that corporation from the enemies its employes are busily manufacturing.

Mr. E. S. Pillsbury, who is reported to stand at the head of the Santa Fe bureau has denied that he is a candidate for the United States Senate, but frankly declared that he was devoting himself exclusively and industriously to electing members of the judiciary. So far as present evidences go, Mr. Pillsbury's efforts in this direction have come to naught. It now appears that he will not be able to share in the honor of naming a single judge. If the result of all of the wire pulling and intriguing that has been going on ostensibly for the Santa Fe system may be summed up by a cipher, the directors may well ask, Where is the profit?

* * *

The Santa Fe system is not in any measure an unpopular institution. There is no doubt that it will be "stood up" by the newspapers and the politicians, and in some cases will be compelled to submit to demands which are unjust and extortionate, but the greatest danger to its peaceful operation, the greatest menace to it from a monetary point of view, will come from within, not from without. Politically inclined employes are a hindrance rather than a help. They have enemies to punish and friends to reward. The doing of the first creates enemies for the corporation, while the accomplishment of the latter usually sets up one ingrate and makes a dozen fresh adversaries. The Santa Fe people should awaken early to their danger and avoid it.

The Democratic Coal Strike.

THE Democratic press is "shy" on figures when it talks of the coal miners' strike, but it is loaded up with denunciatory adjectives and wild abuse.

That insatiable liar Creelman, however, has gone through the coal regions, and he slipped up in one of his letters and quoted some figures. Here is what he said in part:

"Here," said the old miner, turning to his wife, "tell these gentlemen what the trusts have done for us, and they will tell the American people about it. Give them the prices the trusts make us pay for the necessaries of life. It's about the same in the mining regions, and I suppose it is the same in the rest of the country."

The miner's wife gave me a list of prices, showing how the trusts have raised the cost of living. The flour trust had raised the prices of flour from $2.15 a bag to $2.75.

The sugar trust had raised sugar from 5 cents to 7 cents a pound.

The Standard Oil Company has raised oil from 12 cents to 15 cents a gallon.

The woolen trust has raised the price of woolen clothing from 20 to 25 per cent.

The price of sardines has been nearly doubled.

The beef trust has raised the poorest grade of beef from 12 cents to 15 cents a pound; soup meat from 9 cents a pound to 14; veal from 12 cents to 16 cents per pound; ham from 11 cents to 15 cents a pound.

The cracker trust has raised the price of crackers from 5 cents a pound to 10 cents a pound—just double.

The shoe and leather trust has increased the cost of shoes about 30 per cent The rubber trust has caused miners' rubber boots which were sold a year ago for $2.25 to be sold now for $5.25.

So it is with brooms and kitchen utensils, and wire and nails.

Tea has risen from 40 cents to 50 cents a pound (the Chinese war has affected tea quotations, not trusts. Teas are jobbing here at 25 and 50 cents); coffee from 9 cents to 16 cents a pound; condensed milk has increased in cost more than 30 per cent; lard has jumped from 6 cents to 12 cents a pound (eastern pure lard is quoted in California at from 9¼ cents to 10½.)

Think for a moment what this means to the nation. The price of living has been increased at least 30 per cent in a year and a half by the operation of the trust system. The price of plug or smoking tobacco is identically the same in every State. The facts cannot be disputed. They can be proved in any store or in any miner's shanty.

Any man or woman who has been housekeeping twenty years knows that all provisions are vastly lower now than they have been in years. But let us take Mr. Creelman's figures. The miner's wife says "flour has raised from $2.15 a bag to $2.75." But wheat has gone up and the farmer is getting the profit. At the very most this increase would not make a difference of 2 cents a day to a family of six. "The sugar trust," says the miner's wife, "has raised sugar from 5 to 7 cents." Sugar stood at 11 cents for years. The raise of 2 cents per pound which the miner's wife complains of would not amount to a cent per day in a family of six.

"The Standard Oil Company," said the miner's wife, "has raised the price of oil from 12 to 15 cents per gallon. Three gallons per month would be a liberal allowance to a family of six, and this raise would impose on the miner's wife an additional burden of about one-third of a cent a day.

"The woolen trust has raised the price of clothing from 20 to 25 per cent," but the wool industry is flourishing, and not one miner in a hundred wears woolen clothing. The price of his clothing we venture to say has not increased one per cent.

"The price of sardines has been nearly doubled," complains the miner's wife, pate de foi gras and truffles, doubtless.

In the matter of eastern beef we know nothing, but the miner's wife complains that the beef trust has raised "ham from 11 cents to 15 cents per pound," while the Examiner's market reports quote eastern hams that have been transported 3,000 miles to California at 12½ cents.

It is scarcely worth while to treat such a report seriously, but not an item in Mr. Creelman's list will justify his wail for the "downtrodden." Strikes have been precipitated before now on the eve of a presidential election to defeat the party in power. But it has always been the Democratic party that was responsible for the crime against labor—indeed against the nation itself.

Mr. Bryan in Reply.

IF any Democrat expected Mr. Bryan to answer President McKinley in his letter of acceptance, he has been wofully disappointed. As the matter stands to-day, so far as the written record goes, Bryan has filed his closing argument without answering the serious charges advanced by his opponent.

So far as the "paramount" issue is concerned, any fair-minded man reading the Democratic candidate's Indianapolis speech, the letter of President McKinley, and Bryan's "brief in response" must admit that the Democratic standard bearer is in a most unfortunate and pitiable plight. He is charged with duplicity and hypocrisy—not only charged—he is convicted of it. Of course, there are men, ignorant men, and political idolaters, who set up and worship ideals in public life who are not to be influenced by reason, but the mass of men who read and think have by this time made up their minds that Mr. Bryan is a pretender pure and simple. The most charitable view to take of him is that he is most unfortunately complicated in his relations to what he is pleased to term the "paramount issue." He has been upon both sides of it—which is always awkward when denial is impossible.

* * *

But here is some delicious reading. On the silver question Mr. Bryan is as coy and timid as a maid at her first kissing "party." The Examiner, however, profoundly regrets that the candidate referred in any manner to free silver. It says:

"It is a pity that he felt compelled to drag into renewed prominence the dead issue of free silver. Much can happen—much has happened—in four years. What was possible in 1896 is impossible now. There is no longer any effective demand for free silver. The Republicans do not want it; the Democrats do not want it, even the Populists do not want it. . . . There is no more probability of passing a free silver bill through any sort of Congress that could be elected, than there is of passing a bill for the construction of a railroad to to the moon."

Did any party candidate ever seek the votes of an intelligent people upon so many contradictory and deceitful grounds? Bryan has been on both sides of the "paramount" issue and now the Examiner and his own duplicity are firmly placing him on sides of the silver issue.

What becomes of the Silver Republicans? What becomes of the Populists? The Republican State Central Committee should use Mr. Bryan's remarks on free silver, with this Examiner editorial as a campaign document and send hundreds of thousands of them broadcast among Populists and Silver Republicans. Mr. Hearst enjoys exceptionally friendly relations with Mr. Bryan, and perhaps speaks for him in this matter.

THE Fresno jury that acquitted Fred Himes, the thirteen year-old lad who poisoned his father, simply recorded a verdict of sentiment and sympathy. The boy was guilty of the crime as charged; he admitted it and recited all of the details without the slightest compunctions of conscience. The lad does not appear to be naturally vicious, as was the notorious Jesse Pomeroy. He is a bright, kindly little chap apparently, and no good purpose would have been served by inflicting even the punishment of imprisonment upon him. He would have emerged from jail a criminal and it is difficult to see how anything but acquittal could have been expected of the jury.

The future of this lad will be made or marred by his environment during the next few years. To raise him in the neighborhood of his crime, even among friends and relatives most kindly, would seem to be a mistake. He is at an impressionable age. His schoolmaster will either make a hero or an outcast of him, either of which will be dangerous to the boy. It would be a kindness to remove the lad from the scene of the tragedy, and permit him to grow to manhood among such surroundings as would serve to obliterate, rather than keep alive all memory of the dreadful deed.

The Fair at Tanforen Park.

An extraordinary degree of anticipation has been developed among people interested in the horse, the dog and the cow by the live stock fair at Tanforan Park. It is to be a great show, comprising all manner of manifestations from polo to bronco busting. To commence with the Golden Gate Park Driving Association has its speed programme on the opening day; on the second there will be a horse show parade together with a polo tournament; a bench show on the third day. together with a live stock parade and pony racing. More horse parade on the fourth, together with a vacquero exhibition. On the following days there will be races for lady equestriennes, a twenty-five mile running race, an athletic field day and a Belgian hare and poultry show.

The second week will be devoted to the speed programme which is cleverly arranged to elicit the attention of all lovers of racing.

Admirers of the Democratic candidate for President have an opportunity of obtaining a worthy picture of this hero at an outlay of only one dollar. A fine portrait of Mr. Bryan recently painted by R. Duesbury now hanging in the office of the State Central Committee, is being raffled. The chances are going like hot cakes. Mr. Duesbury persuaded the candidate to give him a few sittings during his last visit here and seems to have caught his type and expression in a very satisfactory manner.

A carrier pigeon let loose from "La Lorraine," 413 miles out at sea, returned safely to its cote at Rennes. This is a record.

THINGS AND PEOPLE

Keith "Artist Photographer."

THE negative of the late C.P. Huntington which William Keith made is by all odds the best in existence. From all over the country have come applications for prints from it. The writers are evidently under the impression that our greatest painter is a professional camera man, for the letters are addressed "phographer" or "artist photographer." However, it is an excellent picture and though it represents Mr. Huntington as a very old man, it gives one an excellent idea of his type and of his expression of face, and is suggestive of his strong individuality. From it and from his memory of "the chief" as Mr. Huntington was known among his head men, Keith has painted a first-rate portrait which is not only a good likeness, but is full of the character and personality of the subject. It is a labor of love, for Mr. Huntington was one of the artist's most appreciative and generous patrons. On several occasions he advised his friends to buy canvases saying that Keith's pictures were as good an investment as he knew of. Some of the artist's finest landscapes are in the Huntington collection. Keith has recently finished a superb study of Charles Keeler of Berkeley, and it is really one of the best things he has ever done.

***

The Estimates of C. P. Huntington.

COULD the late C. P. Huntington read the biographies and commentaries his death has evoked from the press of the nation he would realize he had not lived in vain. No other American of our generation whose distinction was commercial and financial rather than political, has drawn forth such a body of appreciative criticism. There have been a few fatuous misunderstandings, notably that of Annie Laurie in the N. Y. Journal; the Examiner's screed was mere mud-slinging, but on the whole the subject would not be dissatisfied with the tribute to his life and labors. No man cared less for eulogy or for compliment. C. P. Huntington was decidedly of his own sex and was set on satisfying his individual conscience rather than the exactions of his contemporaries. Though abused in California, it is evident he had impressed the majority of his countrymen as a virile and sagacious personality representing those qualities of power, patience, humor, boldness, and common sense which go to make the typical American.

***

Commissioner De Young's Trick.

COMMISSIONER DE YOUNG is now in New York on his way home from the Paris Exposition. It was a happy circumstance that California was represented on the United States commission and fortunate that Mr. De Young was that representative, otherwise the industries of the State would have been in some cases entirely overlooked. Visitors returning from the exposition have reported Mr. De Young as untiring in behalf of his native hearth. This scarcely needs stating. But a good story comes in this connection. A certain French bon vivant had taken occasion to say unkind things of California wines, under circumstances calculated to arose the indignation of a Californian. Mr. De Young declared, with his customary warmth, that the State produced a wine that was the equal of any French wine of its class. This the Parisian naturally disputing, a wager was made. "Come to my rooms to-night," exclaimed the Californian, and I'll prove it." For the test the commissioner procured a California burgundy of high reputation and a French wine much in vogue. He carefully removed the capsules and corks of each, and emptying both bottles put the California wine back into the French bottle and vice versa. Recorking the bottles and replacing the capsules, he set both on his sideboard and then rang for the garcon in attendance. To the servant he went to great pains to denounce French wines as inferior and California wines as superior declaring that nine-tenths of the experts would select the California vintage as the better. There was a light in the garcon's eyes that the commissioner understood. It was the awakening of a patriotic protest and a determination that this boaster from California would meet defeat. The commissioner did not cease his abuse of one and praise of the other until he was certain the garcon would give the "tip" to his coming guest.

"Now, Pierre," said Mr. De Young, "wrap each bottle in a napkin carefully concealing the label. Remove the cap and capsule at the sideboard and then bring both to the table. Warm the wine until it is a little below tepid. Pour out a glass of each and place the proper bottle beside each glass, one to the right one to the left."

Pierre was apt. He understood. The guest arrived at the appointed hour. Pierre appeared in answer to the bell and as he was serving the wine the commissioner pretended to be called away but he overheard his garcon say in a hurried but subdued tone.

"The American wine is that to the left of Monsieur."

The amateur did not hesitate long. Wise through the servant's tip, he selected the California wine in the French bottle and was confused when the commissioner proved his error.

The Parisian next day found a case of selected California wines at his rooms with Mr. De Young's compliments, and a note saying: "The reputation of France as a wine producing country will not suffer by dealing justly with the products of a neighbor."

***

Protection and Progress.

THE managing editor of the Chronicle, John P. Young, has written a study of the bases of the American protective system, which he has entitled Protection and Progress. It is rather a portly volume, but the topic is thoroughly surveyed in all its phases—so admirably, indeed, that Hon. R. N. Taylor, member of Congress from Ohio, and an authority, writes to the American Economist that the book is the best he knows on the subject and that Mr. Young had more thoroughly thought out the tariff question in all its details than any other man of whom he had knowledge —certainly an unequivocal commendation. W. F. Wakeman, Secretary of the American Protection Tariff League, says it should be recognized as a standard work on Protection, but these are only a few of the many compliments the book has called forth. Mr. Young is a man of strong individuality and tremendous energy and he is completely responsible for the editorial end of the Chronicle. A stickler for accuracy and for facts, he it is who organizes the special publications abounding in information and statistics, which the Chronicle occasionally puts forth. The most valuable of these is the annual in which the figures of the State's growth and development are presented at the end of every year, and which has proved a most important factor in spreading abroad the rumor of California's marvelous resources. The average newspaper man who is aware of the amount of work which Mr. Young puts through every day, for he is a liberal contributor to the editorial page, wonders how he found time to obtain so complete a mastery of a difficult subject and then to write a bulky volume thereon. He did, however, which proves again that all things are possible to industry and method.

John P. Young.

Photo by Taber.

***

The Foreign Vote.

ONE hears a great deal in this campaign about the German, the Hungarian, even the Italian vote, and but little of the American vote. It is a certainty that the party depending on these foreign combinations for success will find itself disappointed on election day. The Democratic press has been casting the German vote for Bryan for a year past, yet it is hard to find any representative German who will stand for the proposition. If it were true that the Teutons were really rallying to the Democratic standard would we not have prominent members of the race announcing themselves as advocating the election of Bryan? Your average German is not a fool to be deluded with false issues. He is as well able as the smartest of us to realize how little there is behind the cries of "imperialism." He is not an advocate of experimental legislation, but is generally conservative in his views and an upholder of existing institutions and sound money. Nor has the Boer cause so enlisted his sympathies as to pursuade him of the advisability of this nation interfering between England and her enemies. When it came to estimating foreign votes however, the Democrats seem to have left out of consideration citizens of England and Canadian extraction who may certainly be counted against the national party favoring the Afrikanders. Canada has been a great source of population for the middle and western states, and though one seldom hears of political clubs composed of men of English nationality they are none the less among our most estimable citizens, and are invariable voters, while still retaining an honest respect for the institutions of the mother country. In the mining counties of California twenty per cent of the voters are Cornishmen who are certain to cast Republican ballots this year. Altogether one cannot but see the unwisdom of handling a campaign on the basis of foreign prejudices. The policy which commends itself to the reasoning man, as on the whole, the best American policy is sure to win, five times out of six.

***

Stuffed Democratic Clubs.

THUS far the political campaign has lacked exciting features. In the Examiner one reads a great deal about the organization of Democratic clubs with a total membership exceeding a million. I fear this institution is like the lamented Dick Hammond's Young Men's Democratic League of which we in California used once to hear a great deal. I believe some 20,000 members had been enrolled, but in fact the organization was politically valueless having no cohesion whatever; and no specific object of existence. To be effective a club must be given some distinction, must have some basis for its gatherings. There must be, prospectively some spoil of office to attract. If not, there may be a collection of signatures but no dependable list of voters. This has been proven so often that further demonstration is unnecessary. There is, I hear, general dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Democratic campaign. Its specific direction has passed out of the hands of Senator J. K. Jones, who, by the way, is now a millionaire, and is being controlled by Mr. Johnson, whose chief function seems to be that of a letter writer. He is corresponding all over the country at a great rate but does not appear to develop any better leading ideas than his predecessor. He has figured out, however, on the strength of the Maine returns that California will go for Bryan by some 30,000 majority. No one will deny him imagination.

BOSWELL, JR.

THE GREAT EXCURSION TO SANTA CRUZ.

The Southern Pacific Company announces that Sunday, the 30th inst., is the date set apart for the great annual excursion to Santa Cruz, and which will enable excursionists to visit this beautiful city by the sea before the close of the summer season and participate with the other visitors in the enjoyment of swimming, boating, driving, etc.

As heretofore, the excursion will be under the personal supervision of Colonel William H. Menton, the well-known excursion passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Company, who will see to it that the excursionists are well cared for.

These trains (these excursions being run probably in three sections) will be run over the scenic narrow-guage route through the famous Santa Clara valley and along the beautiful streams which wind through the magnificent redwood forests of the Santa Cruz mountains.

The round-trip rate for this occasion has been placed at the very low price of $2, and special excursion tickets will be placed on sale at the Grand Hotel ticket office on September 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th, and at the depot ticket office on the morning of the excursion. Those intending to avail themselves of this opportunity will take the 7:45 A. M. boat from the San Francisco ferry landing. Train leaves Fourteenth and Franklin streets at 7:45 A. M. and from Alameda (Park street) at 8:20 A M. Returning excursionists will be landed at San Francisco at 8:05 P. M.

THE ACROBAT'S AWKWARD POSITION

If Bryan Were President—

According to Mr. Carl Schurz he could be rendered powerless to do harm in the above manner.

THE MEANDERINGS OF WILLIE AND LITTLE STEVE—

They get into some poison ivy

—From the Minneapolis Tribune.

Captains Jones and Hanna drilling their "awkward squads" for the battle of November 6

THE DEAL

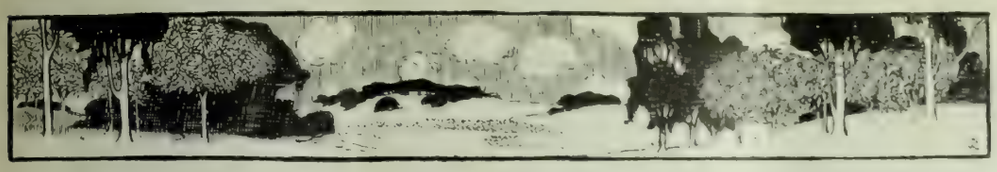
"FAIR EXCHANGE IS NO ROBBERY!"

Chas. Nelau in N. Y. Herald
Philadelphia Enquirer
Carter in Minneapolis Times

Cleveland Plain Dealer
Bush in N. Y. World

CURRENT CARTOONS

Personalities of the Day



Max Nordau's Career.

MAX NORDAU'S name has been the subject of a good many paragraphs at one time and another, but the truth of the matter is very simple. His father's name was "Sudfeld," and he himself was called,originally,"Max Simon Sudfeld," but changed his name at the age of fifteen, at his father's behest for reasons which, as he once declared, "have no interest for strangers." Students of German will not fail to note, of course, the philological connection between the two names—"Sudfeld" (or Southfield) becoming transformed into "Nordau" (or Northmeadow.)

In his youth Nordau suffered the familiar privations of genius. His father, a Prussian, who originally had been a rabbi,was earning a wretched living as a Jewish schoolmaster at Pesth when young Nordau was born in 1849—although a man of considerable ability, who had written a Hebrew grammar, as well as plays, poems, and other works. Eventually, the youthful Max supported the entire family by his journalistic labours,though he found opportunity at the same time to take his degree as a Doctor of Medicine, to travel about studying men and manners all over Europe, and to write his earliest books. How he managed it all goodness only knows. Eventually his literary productions brought him fame and fortune, and thenceforward his way was clear.

He left Pesth because no German could live there in comfort, unless prepared to disown his nationality. "You find yourself," he told an interviewer, "in a drawing-room in a German family. Everybody is speaking German. Suddenly a sham Magyar is announced Everybody pretends to be a Magyar, and talks Hungarian. It is sickening. It disgusted me, and drove me away from Pesth." Subsequently he took to lecturing, and made a huge success here too; and recent Queen's Hall audiences have learnt that he still retains his powers as a public speaker. Then he wrote the first of his well-known books, afterwards plays, after that again novels, until his reputation embraced the earth.

Dr. Nordau, who is still in the prime of life, is a handsome man, whose physiognomy attests his Jewish origin. His hair and beard are already whitened by profound study, and yet he looks perhaps almost younger than he is. Although society has few charms for him, with his friends his manners are charmingly genial. The perfect health which he enjoys, despite the life of constant toil which he has led since his childhood, may be ascribed to the regularity of his habits. He neither smokes nor drinks, visits cafes, nor keeps late hours, and though his output is so prodigious, he only devotes a limited number of hours each day to his literary labours. As a physician he respects the laws of health.

The Late John J. Ingalls. By H. I. Cleveland.

JUST where the national historian of fifty years hence will place the name and the life work of John J. Ingalls it would be interesting to foresee. He was a public man who essentially lived for the present; who loved power, but having it could not make it constructive; who was constantly intoxicated with the power of words, without the ability to make them other than destructive. Life to him was having possession of a vitriolic squirt-gun, whose contents were to be showered by the possessor upon the just and the unjust alike. When his residence at Atchison burned he congratulated his neighbors upon the saving of the well. He said of prohibition in Kansas that it worked to a charm because temperance people had their prohibition and drinkers their whisky.

He was asked:—

"Can a politician be a good Christian?"

"All things are possible with God," he retorted.

Charles S. Gleed described him:—

"His presence of mind is the presence of a regiment of soldiers armed with mitrailleuse. His compassion is a cat's, his tenacity a bull-dog's, and he has the good nature of a billy-goat which knocks over the boys for fun. Virility is one of his fads. He lays great stress on the virtue of being of his own sex. An ancient ruler once cut off his dog's tail that his subjects might have something to talk about. Mr. Ingalls has much of this ruler's disposition."

Once upon a time the dead man said:—

"To be a fool is a crime. Yet if I met a fool in the forest would have fun with him."

He had occasion to describe his neighbors of the Missouri bottoms:—

"Ghizeh has its pyramids, Petra its temples, the middle ages their cathedrals, Central America its ruins, but Pike and Posey counties have their saloons, where the patrician of the bottoms assembles with his peers."

He continues: "A more inviting field for the utilitarian cannot be imagined than one of the benighted border counties of Missouri, where climate, products, labor, and tradition have conspired to develop a race of hard-visaged and forbidding ruffians, exhibiting a grotesque medley of all the vices of civilization unaccompanied by even the negative virtues of barbarism. Their continued existence is a standing reproach to the New Testament, to the doctrines of every apostle, to the creed of every church."

He was always in the negative position of the critic. He was never consistent. The "drunkenness of flash-light oratory" was more to him than a methodical action. Then, too, he enjoyed a pitiless joke, the joke which, while provoking the laugh, burned and seared. He is said to have once given a large amount of firewood to the poor of Atchison. Investigation showed the wood to be so located that it could not be got to them short of an expense of $25 per cord. He was asked to define Populism. His reply was:

"An incurable malady of people already suffering from other diseases."

Mr. Ingalls faced numerous ugly public charges during his career. One of his elections was investigated in some fashion by the senate. He was charged with being a railroad lobbyist. His retort was always to tell what he believed his accusers to be. Whether they accused him rightly or not, they never had the best of the public argument. Finally, they let him alone, and that hurt him worse than all the slurs. He liked the glare of the day and the centering of eyes upon him. This was never better illustrated than the simple words of that poem of Eugene Ware's, in which he refers to the political overthrow of Mr. Ingalls. There are only four lines:—

Up was he stuck,
And in the upness
Of his stuctitude
He fell.

"Stuctitude" expresses the pride of Mr. Ingalls in being "in evidence." Yet it was truly written of him that "his mouth was his Judas and his vocabularly his Jonah. These two would have ruined him but for his nerve."

He wrote an essay on "Grass" once—the universal beneficence of grass. In word-stringing it is exquisite. The last lines come back now with new force:—

"When the fitful fever is ended, and the foolish wrangle of the market and forum is closed, grass heals over the scar which our descent into the bosom of the earth has made, and the carpet of the infant becomes the blanket of the dead."

A Fatal Statuette.

A HIGHLY curious anecdote has just been made public relating to a mysterious and maleficent statuette which would seem to have exercised a strange and baneful influence on the destiny of the late President Carnot. At the time when M. Sadi Carnot was Minister of Finance, and before there was any question of his election to the Presidency, his intimate friend, Dr. Gustave Le Bon, the well-known sociologist and traveller, offered to make him a present of a statuette he had brought back from one of his many journeys to India. When making the offer Dr. Le Bon was careful to acquaint M. Carnot with the circumstances in which the statuette had come into his possession, and with the legend which attached to it. It had been given him by a rajah, who was most thankful to get rid of it for good and all by presenting it to a foreigner about to leave the country. The rajah explained that, according to a legend in which he firmly believed, the owner of the statuette, however humble his origin, was certain to become the principal personage in his country, but was equally certain to die a violent death. M. Carnot made light of this typically Eastern story, and had no hesitation in accepting the present. When most unexpectedly he was elected President, Dr. Le Bon received a brief and playful note from Mme. Carnot, saying that it was the statuette that had worked a miracle. Seven years later President Carnot was struck down by Caserio, and the mysterious and terrible legend had thus come true in every particular. Mme. Carnot was so impressed by these inexplicable coincidences that in her will she solemnly adjured her family to rid themselves of the fateful statuette. The truth of this anecdote is vouched for in every particular by unimpeachable witnesses, and it is certainly as strange a story of the uncanny as it is easy to recall.

A Great French Surgeon's Clinic.

ONE of the most interesting places which the hospitality of the Parisian physicians threw open to their visiting brethren at the recent International Medical Congress was the private surgical clinic of Dr. Doyen, one of the leading surgeons of the world. Here the doctor operated daily at 7:30 in the morning, and despite the early hour there was each day a large attendance.

One day on which, among many other famous men, the venerable pathologist Rudolf Virchow was present, Dr. Doyen produced a cinematograph, and between patients showed moving pictures which he had had taken of himself, making other of his celebrated operations. This was legitimate enough, perhaps, but one can hardly imagine an English or American surgeon using such methods. The doctor prides himself on his rapidity of operation, often quoting the English saying that "time is money" and adding "pour nous chirurgiens le temps c'est la vie."

Victor Emanuel's Active Forbears.

THE new King of Italy descends directly in the male line from Humbert of the White Hand, Count of Savoy, who died in 1056; his house has had as counts and dukes forty-one sovereign rulers; he is himself—we leave out the titular kings of Jerusalem, Cyprus and Armenia—the tenth King of the House of Savoy, and the seventh king owning no over lord. The house has produced Saints and Blessed, Popes and Cardinals, fighting men of the finest quality, statesmen of the subtlest parts, and sovereigns with such attributes as the Great, the Good, the Holy, the Peaceful, the Venerable, the Hunter, the Warrior, the Lesser Charlemagne. Tough material truly from which to fashion the monarch of a modern revolutionary throne with a representative government that has no liking for kingly initiative.

A Royal Smoker.

"KING ALEXANEER of Servia smokes as he does many other things, by fits and starts, sometimes consuming as many as fifty cigars and cigarettes a day, and then again never lighting one for weeks at a time. As for being a slave to tobacco, Alexander cannot hold a candle to his father, ex-King Milan. When King Alexander last visited Paris a large reception was given in his honor at the Elysee Palace. After the customary greetings had been exchanged between host and guest, Alexander was presented to different French dignitaries. When introduced to the Prime Minister, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, the King seemed much abashed and quite at a loss to know what to say, but after a moment's awkward pause a thought came to him, and he stammered out, 'I am glad to meet you, M. Rousseau. You smoke a great many cigarettes?' 'Not so many as your father does,' replied the Frenchman, to whom the King's greeting had been anything but acceptable."

COLOR DISCRIMINATION IN STREET CARS.—The refusal of the negroes of Montgomery to use the street cars now that the city ordinance commands that the front portion of each car shall be reserved for white passengers and the rear portion for colored passengers, leaves the cars practically at the disposal of the white people, and, as is observed with some surprise by the press of Montgomery, many people who never rode in the street cars before or who had given up the practice of riding, owing to the pervasiveness of the negro in the street car, began the patronage of the service, and to such an extent that the Belt line reports that its receipts are larger than they were when both whites and blacks patronized the cars.

THE BELLS OF CORNEVILLE.—Corneville in Normandy, in spite of Planquette's opera, never had a chime of bells. Subscriptions have been received from all parts of the world, however, and a peal of twelve bells will be set up in the village church at the end of this month. Each bell will bear the name of a country; one is "L'Americaine" and another "La Canadienne."

WALDERSEE'S PORTABLE MANSION.—Feldmarschall Graf von Waldersee has taken precautions against being burnt up. He is taking with him a portable asbestos slate house, packed in sections, that contains seven large rooms when set up. The house has excited an interest in Europe second only to the question whether the Feldmarschall will reach China in time to make use of it in the field.

BEACONSFIELD'S BIOGRAPHY.—Lord Rowton, who is the literary executor of the late Earl of Beaconsfield, has been visiting the Queen and it is rumored that she has directed him to put off the publication of Beaconsfield's memoirs till after her death.

A Group of Alcazar Debutantes

Miss Stella Razeto

Miss Edith Angus

Miss Zorah Irvine

Miss Ruby Miguel

Miss Baggo Conklin.

NOWADAYS, when the nativity of a new stage favorite is in doubt, it is safe to call her a Californian. It may not always be true for there are several actresses who were born elsewhere, but with all possible exceptions, it is a good enough rule. The Golden State has provided so many clever aspirants that cleverness in an aspirant suggests California to the critics. In fact, actresses are now among our leading crops, and certainly rank as one of our richest resources.

Why should it be? Why should we be pre-eminent in beans, in wine, in oranges, and a dozen other nice things as well as in actresses? Latitude and the Japanese current, first, I suppose; the race mixture next and the stock company system as the germinating factor. San Francisco is the greatest show town on earth—in proportion to its size. At the moment, eight theatres and a circus are playing to good audiences.

With its permanent stock company playing the year round, the Alcazar is naturally the house to which the California girl takes her dramatic aspirations. There is, of course, a period between the germination of an ambition and its submission to a manager, but this is each one's individual tragedy, fought out behind closed doors, between Miss Ingenue and her obdurate parents. The resignation or reconciliation of relatives having been accomplished Miss Ingenue, often accompanied by her mother, approaches Mr. Fred Belasco or Mr. Thall and explains herself. Sometimes through timidity, she is unable to do her ambitions justice, but don't imagine that diffidence makes an unfavorable impression. Mr. Belasco, who really knows, declares modesty invariably conceals some kind of capacity. In a debutante humility, rather than confidence, suggests ability.

Quite a bevy of budding artistes are now in the Alcazar conservatory, gaining experience as "extras." They have not a great deal to do; like good children they are seen rather than heard, but the atmosphere is doing its part. They are absorbing the dramatic convenances at each breath; they are learning how the wheels revolve, the ways of the leading lady and the tricks of the scene shifter. Its the place where foundations are laid, the stalking ground of opportunity The latest crop of aspirants whose pictures appear above, hail from various sections of California. Most of them were born here, or if not, they grew up under the beneficent influences of our skies and zephyrs. For instance, Miss Baggo Conklin, a daughter of the late Judge Conklin of Kern County, who was in his life-time grand master of the Masons, was born in Missouri, which was unavoidable, presumably, but her face and figure have the charm and vigor which is the true birthright of the Native Daughter. She was transplanted early to the rich soil of the State, and was educated at the Convent of Notre Dame at San Jose. As long as she remembers, which does not necessarily imply a prodigious memory, Miss Conklin has longed for her hour upon the stage. Such minor chances as amateur plays at the convent afforded, she took; she can sing, and is blissfully endowed with common sense, so should achieve success, if en route, it is not thrust upon her. Miss Edith Angus, a tall, slim blonde maiden with a delightful voice and a host of high aspirations, is also a daughter of the law. Her father was a member of the Superior Bench of Napa, and there she grew up. To play Shakesperian heroines is her desire and certainly she has the physical characteristics to fit her ambitions. Miss Ruby Miguel, a dark-eyed, tragic looking girl from San Bernardino, has already had some experience, for she has played Portia and Julie in "Richlieu" all through Southern California. This came out of a benefit performance of the "Merchant of Venice" given in San Bernardino under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal Holt, and Miss Ruby and her asssociates developed so much talent that they were taken on a tour. A prospective tragedienne is Miss Miguel—she has the face and the figure and, I imagine, the force. Those fine eyes of hers were created to look daggers at the villain.

Miss Mae Keane, whose talent is inherited, for her mother was leading lady in Charles Fecheler's company in other days, is also a Californian. She is the product of the convent of St. Gertrude at Rio Vista but she takes naturally to the life of the footlights. She is a vivacious and spirited young lady who has had fully twelve months' experience and has emerged from the "extra" list. She has had several speaking parts so is hardly a debutante. Miss Stella Razetto, brisk, quick-witted and attractive, originally came from San Diego, but attributes her bright eyes and her rosy cheeks to the peninsular breezes, is a graduate of the Girl's High School. She emerged in "Mother Earth," played the tough girl in "Chimmie Fadden," is a Hebrew maid in the "The Widows' Husband" and is a general favorite in the company. There is also Miss Zorah Irvine, a Latin type, of strictly American stock. She attributes to a French great grandfather, her dark eyes and her olive coloring, but the piquant expression and the graceful figure are thoroughly Californian. Miss Zorah plunged on her own behalf, beginning her stage career as a member of the Southwell Opera company's chorus. She has yet formulated no high ambition but is determined to take what comes which is, perhaps the best way to get to the front. To be where the lightning is striking, is better than to be forging thunderbolts of one's own which may not explode.

They are a very happy family these Alcazar buds and not one of them but seems to have the capacity and promise of development. Success is, after all, mere knack backed by industry. The knack is here—the rest is character.

GEORGE VINCENT.

Present Conditions on the Klondike

TO one who has never made a personal inspection of the placer producing properties of this country, but has secured his information as to its wealth from newspaper reports, and hearsay conversation, must be content to be credited with a limited knowledge of the great resources of this the greatest of gold producing countries. The writer has had the pleasure of "mushing" over trails across creeks and mountains for about three weeks, going up Bonanza to King Solomon's Hill, thence to Monte Christo, Fox Gulch, American Gulch, Magnet Gulch, Chechaco Hill and Gold Hill. From there up the famous Eldorado as far as 32 above. I did full justice to Dominion, Hunker and Sulphur, and picked blueberries along the trail, or stopping occasionally to examine the delicate almost transparent petals of the white flowers, or the Lychnis which was even more fragile. At Ash's claim on Monte Christo I saw a 16 hour run with a clean-up of $3,000. This mine employs over 50 men and has made its owner among the wealthiest of Klondikers. McGillvrays' Syndicate property on King Solomon's Hill is returning its stockholder's handsome dividends. It was at this property that Lord and Lady Minto were entertained by Mr. McGillvray on their recent visit to the Yukon. They witnessed a clean-up, which to them was both novel and highly interesting.

Successful Miners.

Billy Chappell at 7 above on Eldorado and Mr. Stander No. 4 are two very successful Klondikers, both being accredited with large fortunes taken from these famous placers—Mr. Chappell recently unearthed the largest nugget ever found in the Yukon Territory. It was discovered on one of his claims on Jack Wade; the weight is 35 oz. and the lump is almost pure gold being valued at $635. Mr. Northrup on Magnet Gulch has several of the very best claims on Magnet and American Gulch all being equipped with most modern machinery. These claims are large producers of that wealth which comes to those who underwent the privations and hardships of '97 and which they richly deserve. Then again, there's Jim Hall of 16, Charley Anderson of 29 and 32, Billy Leek of 31, Charley Warden of 24, Skiff Mitchell of No. 1, Eldorado, Charley Lamb 4 below, Alex McDonald's London Syndicate of 2 above, James McNamee, 17 below on Bonanza, these are all names to conjure by, but why enumerate? These are only a few of the kings of "bonanza-land," and to name them all would occupy almost the entire Wave edition.

Among other rich creeks which have turned out beyond the expectations of the locators, is Dominion, now rapidly coming to the front as a great gold producer. No. 31 below upper is owned by Louis Pond, formerly a jeweler of Dawson. A recent clean-up of 30 hours run showed $3,000 in the pan. Andy Nelson owns 33 and 34 below upper, and his clean-ups are a surprise even to a "sour-dough;" another very rich claim on Dominion is 10 above lower owned by Henry Holst, who is a pioneer of 8 years in the Yukon. Gold Run is one of the coming creeks of the Yukon—up to a short time ago it was not looked upon as very promising but recent development work has proven that this creek will soon be classed with the other famous ones for richness.

Output of the Klondike.

The output for the Yukon Territory this year will be about $22,000,000. This is a conservative estimate. The yearly production is counted from October 1st of one year to September 30th the following, comprising the winter work which is the most important, and the summer work. Most of the work done in winter is in the creek claims, while the benches and hillside claims are principally worked in summer. But there is a tendency on the part of a good many creek claim owners to operate their mines in summer, several advantages being claimed by the change. On account of the high royalty (which is 10 per cent of all the gold produced by a claim except on the first $5,000), it is difficult to calculate exactly the output for any year, but now it is believed the Canadian Government is at last aroused to do the mine owners the simple act of justice of removing this obnoxious feature of the mining laws which, when done will permit the exact output to be known. The greater output of gold this year is due to the introduction of machinery on a large scale, in the shape of thawing machines and mechanical appliances for raising the pay dirt from the bottom of the shafts, and for removing the muck from the top of the pay streak. Machinery has now given value to claims the workings of which would not have paid at first. The claims are worked now systematically, and dirt that was not deemed profitable to handle before is now washed and handled on many claims. When one considers that the output for 1900 is over the twenty million mark and which will undoubtedly advance each year, as the population and development work increases you can then realize what the future possibilities are for the Klondyke. I am safe in stating that the rich quartz ledges in the Yukon will some day startle the mining world. All over this gold-strewn wonderland new discoveries are being daily made. So for this, and the reason that the past has been productive of such great results, we can say—what country in the world holds out more bright and promising prospects than this Yukon Country the Gem of Placers?

The Development of Dawson City.

The average person on the outside knows something about Dawson but his understanding of what is going on in this City is limited—no one can grasp the reality without seeing it. The whole district is alive, and while important events succeed one another in rapid succession, the thoughtful observer sees below the surface forces at work for future development so powerful and far-reaching as to stimulate the keenest interest. Changes are taking place here rapidly. This year has witnessed the erection of a great number of residences and warehouses. First avenue to-day has a number of fine warehouses, notably the Ladau Company, the Ames Mercantile Company, Lancaster & Calderhead, Mead & Davis, and the N. A. T. & T. Co. On Third avenue McCauley Bros. and Lilly Bros. have splendid corrugated iron buildings. One could hardly recognize in Dawson of 1899 the Dawson of 1900. A number of fine stories have also been erected, and fronts have been changed and improvements added to others that have materially altered their former appearance.

The Reception to Lord and Lady Minto.

The reception to Lord and Lady Minto was really very grand. A number of arches had been erected that would have done credit to any city in any country. The people were very generous in their display of bunting, and altogether the event was converted into a first rate festivity.

The following is an exact copy of a Bill of Fare that hung in a Dawson restaurant the winter of 1898:—

Bowl of soup, $1.00, mush and milk, $1.25, dish of canned corn, $1.25, dish of canned tomatoes, $2.00, slice of pie, 75cts, beans, coffee and bread, $2.00, plain steak, $3.50, doughnuts with coffee and tea, $1.25.

This year of grace, Dawson has a number of very good restaurants where a really fine course meal can be procured for $1.00.

It is rumored we are to have more competition in the transportation line next year. Well competition has been the means of rate cutting this year by all the lines. The B. L. & K. Co. started the ball rolling and caught a largely increased passenger list, then the Flyer Line went one better, but the C. D. Co. having the largest boats came again, and the cuts have been at $30 2nd class to $40 1st class for some weeks. A large number of people are taking advantage of the cheap tariff and going to the outside for a hurried visit before close of navigation.

Practical Politics in the Yukon

WHY has the name of Klondyke, the richest gold camp in the world, become synonymous with kicker, agitator, dissatisfaction and malcontent? It would require probably as large a pamphlet as this whole issue to ferret out and explain this matter thoroughly and make it comprehensible by the people of the outside world.

Although the Klondyke probably produces more virgin wealth per capita than any other section of the earth to-day, and therefore according to political economists, its populace should be the most thoroughly satisfied on the hemisphere, the moment one crosses the White Pass summit it is one complaint after another in rapid and continuous succession.

Probably as great a cause of the initial lack of proper organization of the political power of the country was the fact that a large number of the citizens in the Yukon came from the interior of the United States and were unacquainted with Canadian political methods and with the rivalries and jealousies which characterize the border towns and people of Canada and the United States. In fact, until they arrived in the Canadian gold fields half of the Americans had never heard that there was upon the statutes of Congress an alien labor law which is rigidly enforced around Buffalo, N. Y., and Detroit, Mich., and along the St. Lawrence.

This fact led first to the mistake of appointing aliens as members of various citizens', miners' and other committees, and as representatives and delegates of the people.

A Bad Condition.

In February, 1890, political dissatisfaction was at its greatest depth and the government of the Yukon commanded less respect thon any time before or since: people grew really dispirited and sought relief in one was only, namely, by fleeing the country. There was no elected representative head, and a people who have never been without a mayor to beseech, a council to blame and members of parliament to work and importune and abuse cannot realize how essential these adjuncts are to a civilized government.

In the Yukon there were two specific classes—the officials, and their proteges, and the citizens. There being no check, the officials did about as they pleased. This year, 1900, the bare-faced rascality of the officials came to such a pitch that the N. W. M. P. was forced to make an example of one of the many crooks who had fastened themselves upon the people. With a plea of "Guilty," to what was a complete admission of forgery, perjury, and malfeasance in office, Clerk Strothers closed the investigation, and to compensate him for his self-sacrifice in becoming a scapegoat, he was fined $500 which he promptly paid out of his savings. He was receiving per month by the way $75. His two dupes, however, were incarcerated in the Common Gaol, as a warning to other spies or informers, or even kickers. In the words of the sergeant of the N. W. M. P. "What is the use of working up prosecutions when justice is thus administered?"

It was at this time that a band of determined men quietly decided to grapple with the Yukon question, and to sink or swim in the effort to right the wrongs of the country, the people, and the individuals.

A Citizens' Committee in February, 1900, was then formed, with Colonel McGregor, as chairman, Joseph A. Clarke, as secretary, and Messrs. A. D. Williams, C. M. Woodworth, Alex. McDonald, Jas. Sturgeon, and Thomas McMullen were appointed at this meeting. Jas. Gillis was subsequently substituted for Jas. Sturgeon resigned, and Alex. Prudhomme and A. Neel were added as members representing the French Canadians. This Committee were appointed nominally for two specific purposes, to secure the immediate election of two members to the present appointed Yukon Council, and two or more members to the Dominion House of Commons.

This organization rapidly secured a prominence in the Yukon never attained by any previous committee and recognition and influence in Ottawa. To concede the practical demands of the people of the Yukon was a departure for the Ottawa administration. Knowing this, the Citizen's Committee confined itself exclusively to insisting that the subject-matter of all correspondence with the government should be confined to the questions at issue which were debatable only in the Yukon. In no other part of the British Empire is it necessary for a British people, who produce a large surplus of taxes over expenditure, to petition, demand, insist, and agitate for representatives for the taxed, and in other parts of Canada would the people be allowed to threaten rebellion over the issue, of "taxation without representation," with all its 1776, 1837, and 1885, and numerous other historic reminiscences.

Reform at Last.

Step by step the Yukon Council yielded, and there was actually greater joy over the fact that this organization condescended to meet the Citizens' Committee than ever the actual granting of the petition, which in itself shows the condition of public opinion at that time.

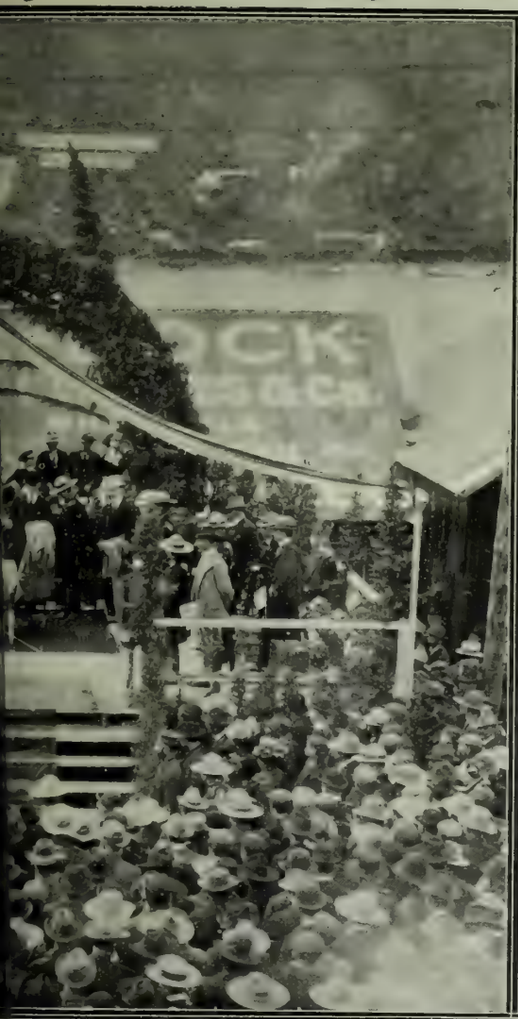
One by one the sentries of government autocracy at Ottawa were passed and at last Sir Wilfred Laurier in June last after five months unceasing agitation announced that in a few weeks the Yukon people would elect two representatives to the Yukon Council, and that after the census about to be taken, the territory would have representation in the Dominion House of Commons. The former promise is on the verge of fulfilment for the election of two members to the Yukon Council takes place on the 17th day of October, A. D. 1900.

Herein is developed the wisdom of the Citizens' Committee. Had the election been held last February no candidate against whom there existed a suspicion of being friendly to the Government would have received one hundred votes outside of the officials themselves. With the granting of the petition for two elective members to the Yukon Council, however, the barriers to progress, unnatural taxation, and the legalized assistances to hold-ups and crafts began to fall one by one, and the arrival of every boat at Skaguay brings another promise of specific relief. Reform after reform has been granted and revolution in the administration of the Yukon is promised at once. If all this accompanies a local election our people look forward to a real Dominion Parliament election as such a benefit producer in prospective, as to lead us to expect the receipt of a bonus, out of an immense surplus, for living if we only vote the right? way.

Third Street Arch.
A famous Claim— No. 34, Below Upper Dominion.

Formal Reception of Lord a
The Governor General, Lady Mi

Reception of the Governor Ge



Lad dinto.
and uite Watching a Clean-up.

The Prettiest Arch in Dawson.
A Great Gold Yielder—No. 7, Below on Bonanza.

Business Personalities of Dawson City

lliam Thornburn, Barrister and Solicitor.

HE individual who has the courage of his convictions to break away from established customs and to leave old landmarks for a new community is ne who deserves any prosperity that may to him; nor can he be too highly comed for his manifest intrepidity in letting world recognize his determination to be ssful beyond peradventure, if a proper ption of what is due the public in any ed line of business or profession is any ance of success—and that it is goes withaying.

e subject of our article whose photograph ars herewith, Wm. Thornburn, Barrister, tor, Advocate, Notary Public, etc., of on, Yukon Territory, was born in Ontario, la. After completion of his law course ronto he affiliated himself with the well-n firm of Castle & Standish, Solicitors to uilding and Loan Association, one of the st financial and investment institutions in la. The experience gained by this con-n gave Mr. Thornton valuable and profit-knowledge of commercial and financial actions, which, added to his legal attain-, has most peculiarly fitted him to cope the practically unlimited opportunities came to him when he established his uarters and office at Dawson, Yukon ory. Mr. Thornburn's experience has enhim to mark out a policy both broad-and progressive, and the consensus of n is, that this is the reason of his succith the number of mining suits he has ented before the Gold Commissioner.

William Thornburn.

ng in close touch with the officials of ment of the interior, Mr. Thornburn is osition to assure applicants for hydraulic sions, and all other applications to the er of the Interior, that these interests e especially conserved. His practical edge, combined with his familiarity with ining laws, enable him to organize and te companies both at home and abroad, one is better posted as to the value of properties. Mr. Thornburn has ac-a number of valuable mining places and properties which he will be pleased to h information about.

Thornburn is very prominently con-both in the United States and Canada, a nephew of Hon. R. A. Bonner, Crown cutor, Winnipeg.

A. Bonner, ex-M. P., a very wealthy iker. Prof. W. Griffin Bonner, M. D., go, Ill. Prof. J. D. Bonner, M. D., L. R. E. D., M. C., P. S. O.

Thornburn will be pleased to answer all pondence personally in reference to matertaining to mining and other interests Yukon Territory.

"Here's to Life."

ST around the corner from Third street on Second avenue old Juneau Joe established his restaurant when compelled by nd other circumstances to move from the Front. Juneau Joe was of the Sourdoughs, and his restaurant was famed throughout the whole camp for the quality and quantity he gave for the money. The place always had a big patronage and a solid and substantial business, for when a man came in from the creeks, tired and hungry, he was most liable to drift into the old sourdough restaurant for a big square meal. But one day not long ago, it was announced that the place had changed hands and the old patrons straightway heaved a sigh and wondered if that was not the end of Juneau Joe's and all its popularity. That same day that the announcement appeared in the newspapers there was posted at the door post of the famous old place a large gruesome sketch of the skull and beside it the curious motto, "Here's to life—we're a long time dead;" following it a short and pithy screed about how much better the future was to be than had been the very notable past of that house. People gathered about to regard this strange announcement and ever since there has been a crowd about the door, though the legend, "Here's to life," is no longer new. Germain is a better known name in Dawson than that of Juneau Joe ever was. In one month it has taken the first rank among the caterers of the capital of the Klondike. The number of those who thought there was no place in Dawson to dine but at Juneau Joe's is only half the number who pledge their appetites and good digestion by the name of Germain.

Juneau Joe.

Germain's success has been phenomenal and it has yet been a matter of course. For every man who eats a meal there understands it. Every patron of Germain is made to feel that he is a welcome personal guest of Germain himself. There is an air of hospitality and good fellowship about the place that causes the patron to feel at home, and when breakfast, lunch or dinner hour recurs, instinctively that man drifts 'round the corner on Second avenue to Germain's. Germain is as much at home there as are his patrons. He knows just what to do. His tables are laden always with the things that appeal to the Klondike appetite—they are served just right and without stint—quantity, quality, service, have combined to make the new and greater fame of old Juneau Joe's.

William Chappell.

William Chappell is the owner of 7-30 and 37 on Eldorado and also seven claims in Jack Wade district, 2 on Hunker, 3 and 27 below, also 20 below on Bonanza, on which he employs 50 men. He is credited with having the most modern machinery on his claims that there is in the Klondike. Mr. Chappell has been on the Yukon since 1895, and not only has he been most successful in his mining enterprises, but has also been extremely fortunate in various speculations in which he has been engaged both here and in Seattle. About a year ago Mr. Chappell married a charming young San Franciscan, Miss Elizabeth Bush, who entertains most hospitably those who may be favored to call on her and her husband at their home at No. 7 Eldorado street. Fortunate indeed, is the one who is privileged to be entertained by the Chappels when visiting the Creeks. A glass of milk from their "Jersey Cow" refreshes the inward person, and the butter made sweet and fresh by Mrs. Chappell is an inspiration to one who has been compelled to exist on the usual imported "Klondike brand."

John L. Sale & Co. of Dawson, Y. T.

THIS leading firm of jewelers have succeeded in making a name not only in Dawson but in a large portion of the world by their famous souvenir nugget work. Among other noted pieces of artistic work we would mention the nugget rosary made for the Catholics of Dawson, and which now is on exhibition at the Paris Exposition, also the Cad Wilson and other famous nugget belts.

The native gold souvenir presented to Lady Minto by the miners of Klondyke, on her recent visit to the Yukon territory, was made by this firm. Sale & Company employ a large force of skilled workmen operating three stores and two factories. They carry a large stock of watches, diamonds and jewelry that compares favorably with many of the metropolitan stores, and that they have no peers in the manufacturing nugget and souvenir jewelry goes without saying.

Henry's Ranch at Stewart River.

OUT in the region where huge tracts of land are owned by one man, and are cultivated by men in his employ, the enterprise is known as a "bonanza" farm, and the owner of it is called a "bonanza" farmer.

Many of the owners of these huge farms which embrace thousands of acres are owned by parties living in the east who are not even practical farmers, but depend on a superintendent in whom they have confidence, and who understands the methods of tilling the soil that have proved successful in the locality of the farm he has been called upon to manage. There are two varieties of wheat raised—winter and spring. Winter wheat is planted in the fall, usually in September. It immediately sprouts and attains a good growth before cold weather. It stays green all winter and is ready to harvest during mid-summer. Spring wheat is planted early in the spring in ground that was ploughed late in the previous fall. It is most successful in the far north, where the severe and long-continued cold weather would seriously affect the winter variety.

The attention of readers is called to a farm (or rather ranch) in the far away region of the Yukon territory, a region which many people look upon as a place of eternal ice and snow. But—that the owners of this ranch have accomplished such splendid results in a few years disproves this belief—for the climatic conditions of this far off northern country during the summer season are grand in the full sense of a cloudless sky and an average mean

Continued on page 14.

Harvesting Scene on Sonnickson and Henry's Ranch, Stewart River.

A Spotless Skin

And a clear complexion are desired by every woman and admired by every man.

Eruptions, pimples and similar blemishes are caused by an impure condition of the blood. These skin blemishes are permanently removed by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which thoroughly purifies the blood and cures the cause of the disease.

"For about one year and a half my face was badly broken out," writes Miss Carrie Adams, of 116 West Main St., Battlecreek, Mich. "I spent a great deal of money with doctors and for different kinds of medicine, but received no benefit. At last I read one of your advertisements in a paper, and obtained a bottle of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Before I had taken one bottle of this medicine I noticed a change, and after taking three bottles I was entirely cured.

Free. The Common Sense Medical Adviser 1008 pages, is sent free on receipt of stamps to cover expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for paper covered book, or 31 stamps for cloth binding. Address, Doctor R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Leading High Grade

Clothiers and Men's Furnishers

SOLE AGENTS FOR

Stein Block Clothing Dunlap Hats
Johnson and Murphy Shoes

CHENEY'S BOSTON STORE

BROADWAY, - - - - SKAGWAY, ALASKA

Yukon Iron Works

J. W. WALTHER CO., Proprietor

The largest and best equipped Machine Shop and Boiler Works in the Yukon. A complete line of engines, boilers, pumps, hoists, and steam fittings always on hand. We manufacture the best thawers and points in use.

OFFICE AND WORKS

Cor. 6th St. and 2d ave., Dawson, Y. T.

E. S. Orr W. V. Tukey

ORR & TUKEY

Freight Contractors

Fully equipped for moving any and all kinds of heavy machinery.

Dawson Office A. C. Co.'s Bldg.
Forks " opp. Gold Hill Hotel

Telephones 8 and 43 and at Grand Forks.

FIFE-ALASKA CO.

DEALERS IN General Merchandise

523 Fourth Avenue.

Near Broadway Skagway, Alaska

The Bank of British North America

Capital	Established	Reserve
$4,800,000	1836	$1,581,000

Drafts sold on all parts of the world. Gold dust purchased at best rates. Assaying done on the premises

D. Doig, - Manager.

Upper Yukon Consolidated Co.

[Limited]

M. KING, Manager

King's Mill

BOATS SCOWS LUMBER

Through Rates to Dawson

Towing by Steamers

Kilbourne and Goddard

Caribou Crossing

EMIL STAUF,

Real Estate, Mining and Financial Agent

DAWSON, Y. T.

Agent for

Harper & Ladue Townsite Co.
Harper's Addition
Menzie's Addition
The Imperial Life Insurance Co.

PIONEER BROKER

Property for non-residents attended. References any of the banks and business stores in town. [Big Companies]

VAMOS A MEXICO

A PERSONALLY CONDUCTED

EXCURSION TRAIN

OF PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS

WILL BE RUN BY THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY

TO THE

CITY OF MEXICO

LEAVING

San Francisco, Wednesday, Nov. 14

Los Angeles the following day

ROUND TRIP TICKETS

From San Francisco . $80

From Los Angeles . . . $70

GOOD FOR 60 DAYS

RATES FROM OTHER POINTS IN PROPORTION

Most delightful season of the year in the quaint old republic. Complete arrangements for cheap side trips.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS INQUIRE OF

AGENT S. P. CO. AT DEPOT

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADWAY wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For B. C. and Puget Sound ports: 11 a. m. Sept. 3, 8, 13, 18, 23, 28, Oct. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Sept. 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, Oct. 5, and every fifth day thereafter.

For Newport (Los Angeles) and way ports: 9 a. m. Sept. 4, 8, 12, 16, 20, 24, 28, Oct. 2, and every fourth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles): 11 a. m. Sept. 2, 6, 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, Oct. 4, and every fourth day thereafter.

For Mexican ports, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE 4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents, 10 Market street, San Francisco.

TO CHICAGO IN THREE DAYS.

From San Francisco at 10 A. M.

Chicago Union Pacific and Northwestern Line.

DOUBLE DRAWING ROOM SLEEPING CARS, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars with Barber, Dining Cars; meals a la carte. Daily Tourist Car Service and Personally Conducted Excursions every week from San Francisco at 6 p. m.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING

R. R. RITCHIE,
General Agent Pacific Coast.

617 Market Street (Palace Hotel), San Francisco, Cal.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Moana for AUSTRALIA, Wednesday October 3, at 8 p. m.

S. S. Australia, for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, October 17, at 2 p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKE STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Meditations of a Matron

By Mrs. Cricket

I AM in an exceedingly contented frame of mind this week, my dear Diary. I have had such a good time and I expect it will continue. Robert was called East on Tuesday last most unexpectedly. We were eating our luncheon when the telegram came. He passed it to me saying, "Cricket, dear, will you come?" I am a most impulsive person, so jumped up with joy to rush and throw my things some way or another into my trunk.

Robert is very slow and self-contained.

"Do not hurry," he said, "we shall not start until this evening; we shall go to Los Angeles first."

After luncheon I telephoned Mama who came down post haste to see me. I have had a very severe cold, so Mama insisted I should not dream of going without the doctor's consent. By that time, Robert began to think how uncomfortable I might be on a hurried trip. So by five o'clock I was bidding him a sad farewell. I began then to feel desolate. Mama had returned home, and I was all alone and was coughing incessantly, so I rang up Arthur and asked him to come down. Arthur was in a very good humor, but not wishing to stay about the hotel, we hired a buggy and drove out to the Cliff House. It was really a lovely night—a beautiful moon and the air deliciously cool after the rain. We had a fine talk, and when I returned to the hotel my cold had really all gone. It is remarkable how fresh air can cure almost anything. Next morning I was awakened by a telegram from Robert, and before noon, I am sure I had half a dozen. That man made a great mistake in marrying me. I have not the capacity to thoroughly appreciate him.

Later in the day I went in one of my new gowns to the Martin-Hamilton wedding. It was really a great success, though as I said before, I do like a church wedding. The house was a mass of greens—wonderful foliage, too, and there were great quantities of flowers. Under a canopy of smilax and flowers, the ceremony was performed by Dr. Mackenzie. Clara was looking her best, and her best is a stunningly good looking girl. She wore a cream white gown—I suppose really it was pearl colored satin. There was some nice lace too on it. I was so taken up with her face I cannot tell you quite how the gown was made. There was such a lot of bridesmaids—the two Josselyns, Ruth McNutt, Addie Murphy and Clara's two sisters, one of whom was maid of honor. The girls wore white gowns and carried those wonderful bright pink lilies. It was quite novel and the person who created the idea should be congratulated, for it was thoroughly picturesque. Ruth McNutt was the girl at that wedding whom I called the belle. I admire the Hamilton girls, too. I think George and Clara are going to be ideally happy. They seem both so level headed and to understand each other.

A Dinner at the Morgans.

All day Thursday I was swathed in flannel. It seemed my cold was worse, and Mama came down to stay with me. I was quite worried about missing the Morgan dinner Friday night, but fate was kind to me, and I wore a high-necked, very elaborate gown. It is, as you know, Diary dear, very much against my principles to describe my own clothes but this had just arrived from Paris. It is of a brilliant yellow crepe de China, made in tiny tucks, waist and skirt fitting me so tight as to give somewhat the effect of a mermaid, especially as this gown is covered with iridescent beads. My slippers and stockings were also beaded and on the left shoulder was a large bunch of green velvet grapes with the foliage. I looked at the gown a dozen times before I decided to wear it. However, it caused a sensation at the dinner, and they all agreed that had I been a tall girl, I should have been a great success, but it was a little too daring for a tiny bewitching coquettish young person like me. I agree with them, but this is not telling you of the deliciously cooked dinner we enjoyed. The Morgans entertain really well, and we were all seated just as though each had fixed the table for herself. I had Harry Stetson and Gus Taylor, so was quite happy. I am just a little afraid, however, that had I not been married, I should have caused a pang or two of jealousy. I noticed Harry's eyes wandering to a maiden near by, very often. She smiled, too, as though she were reciprocating the affection. I quite approve, for I think they could make each other very happy. The Hopkins all looked well, though there is no doubt about it Helen is the flower of the flock. The Morgan girls can, if they will, make any dinner a success. They are both bright and have the faculty of making a general conversation, and that is a rare virtue, but a very necessary one to successful entertaining. The table was beautiful—lots of beautiful glass and silver, and dishes that were works of art in themselves.

Speaking of dishes reminds me that I have a whole set just sent out to me from England by Robert's cousin. It is magnificent—so rich looking, and the ware is "Minton." Mama gave me a Dresden set and the irony of fate is that I am living in a hotel. As we really expect to go to Europe in February, it hardly seems worth while to take a house.

Society in San Mateo.

Saturday afternoon I went down to help Madam de Guigni with her garden party. San Mateo looked lovely, and most of the people wore very light-colored gowns. I met all Jack Parrot's big girls and Mary Christine de Guigne. They are all really charmingly well bred and have the ease of manner of young people who have been in society for many years. With that they are apparently quite unspoiled and frank. Mama, in fact, a great many mothers, spent some time discussing Marie Christine's charm. I hope she will not be spoiled by the girls with whom she will have to associate, for there are all sorts of people who consider themselves above being well bred in San Mateo County. I know one of the Burlingamites who invited some girls to stay with her, and during their visit snubbed and neglected them so obviously they left before their visit was over, and wondered had they hurt her feelings. I really think that she invited them, anticipating a refusal. It seems incredible that such things should occur in a set presumably gentle of manners, but in San Francisco we have to put up with a very cosmopolitan combination.

Coming Events.

Helen Hopkins' wedding is the next big event in society; then Jane Greenwood's. Helen's and Jane's are both to be country affairs and I am anticipating great pleasure at each. Fred Greenwood gives a big dinner at the Bohemian Club to his sister and Dr. Chipman on Monday evening next. I love Bohemian Club dinners—they have such an excellent cook and the red room is so fine for decorations.

All except the navy people were surprised to hear Eleanor Morrow was to marry a navy man. Eleanor made her debut last year and was proclaimed by all to be a great favorite. She has a bright, interesting face and I have her name on the list of the really nice girls. I have only just met Mr. Roosevelt but all the navy men speak so well of him. In lots of ways I'd much prefer marrying into the marine corps than the regular navy because I dislike very much indeed being separated from my husband and it is almost inevitable in the navy. Eleanor and Mr. Roosevelt will be married in San Rafael at the Morrow's place. Speaking of San Rafael reminds me that Alyse

Continued on page 14.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Buyers' Guide.

San Francisco Reliable Business Houses

City and Country Orders promptly filled. Catalogues and Price Lists sent on application. Correspondence solicited. MENTION THE WAVE.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 305.

BUSINESS PERSONALS.

Baldness and Dandruff positively cured; Shampooing and Bleaching. Prudential Hair Physicians. Glascow Block, 105 Ellis Street, Room 6.

DENTIST.

DR. C. W. DECKER, Dentist. 806 Market street, Phelan Building.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

RESTAURANT.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM

For a Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave.

Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS

California Electrical Works

409 MARKET STREET

Your medicine chest is incomplete if it is not stocked with Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . . .
Centrally Located . . .

Occidental Hotel

SAN FRANCISCO
WM. B. HOOPER, Manager

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,, New York.

American and European Plan.

WILLIAM T. BANG, Proprietor.

Eighty-five Fine Sunny Rooms — Elevator Service
Excellent Cuisine — References Required
FIRST-CLASS FAMILY HOTEL

THE BRADBURY

J. A. FERSON, Prop.
N.W. Cor. Polk and California Ste., San Francisco
Transient trade solicited. Rates $2.00 and up wards. Reasonable by the month, Tel. Hyde 2771

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Stree
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

COTTON SAIL DUCKS

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monu mental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore,
MURPHY, GRANT & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents.

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss
Stereo Binoculars

The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power.

Prices, $47.50 to $80.00
Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.
OPTICIAN.
201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER
KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Ifred Cane — Luther A. Teague — Frederick Teague

TEAGUE, CANE & TEAGUE

Dentists

Claus Spreckels Building
yel. Main 1459 — Third and Market Sts., 6th Floor
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL

Trusts add combinations do not affect Jesse Moore Whiskey. Its fame is established; its quality is the finest and it is always the best.

Two Parisian Topics

By Etienne Marcel

IN America one isn't likely to find the leading article of a great daily paper devoted to the latest fashion in corsets. In Paris that very thing has just happened. There is a lot of talk about the emancipated condition of American woman. As a matter of fact the importance of an American woman in the body politic of her country isn't to be compared with the importance of French women in France. They take women much more seriously over there. They have given her a really superb role to play and they concern themselves mightily about her manner of playing it. Women have a tremendous deal of power and men seem jealously anxious that the power should stay in the woman's hands.

The latest fashion in corsets may seem a far cry from this serious business but from the Frenchman's point of view it isn't. The woman's power is largely hers because of her charm,her grace, her femininity. M. Paul Adam, one of the leading journalists of Paris,finds that these qualities are threatened by the new fashion and therefore speaks up promptly in three columns beginning with corsets and ending with anarchy. He handles the corset subject without gloves—much as he says the lady's maids have to handle the corsets.

"Without the aid of a robust maid and remarkable biceps," he says,"no woman can hope to attain this platitude."

Platitude in this case is to be taken literally. It means flatness; flatness physical,without the curves which hitherto been regarded as the proud possession of woman. All these curves, according to M. Adam, are forbidden by the new fashion, aided and abetted by the brawny lady's maids.

"She laces, she pulls, she buckles, she ties," he laments. "And the most attractive Venus finds herself transformed into Ganymede. She is like a lead soldier in a six-cent box."

Girls Looks Like Boys.

M. Adam declares that the fashionable young woman of the day is like a boy parading in girl's clothes and that one looks instinctively to see if a dowdy mustache is not to be discerned on her upper lip. He also carefully makes the inevitable thrust at England. There is more ground for it in this case than there generally is. The average English woman somehow seems as if she had been cut out by an amateur and one whose material was in awkward shape to begin with.

However the new corset has worked wonders for the gratification of people who prefer lines which are really lines and not ebullitions. For the last year tne French women have worn the most ravishing gowns, which have set off—thanks to the new corset and to the husky lady's maid of M. Adam's imagination, for she is only a fiction—the most charming figures which the French women have had for years. The Palais du Costume is one of the attractions at the Exposition. It is a sort of Eden Musee, giving groups representing women's costumes from a period when Mother Eve's simplicity of raiment had been only slightly modified. The most pleasing thing about this exhibit is that the modern dresses shown are the most artistic of them all. They are not especially beautiful examples of gowns. One can see prettier ones almost any day where the Paris world of fashion congregates, which isn't in Paris just at present, but even the ones that are shown, and on wax figures at that, are altogether more attractive than those of any bygone day. Honor then where honor is due. And this, M. Adam to the contrary notwithstanding, is largely in the direction of the new corset.

M. Rochefort Tricked.

Karl, who so cleverly tricked M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire during the Dreyfus affair,has been again amusing himself. This time his victim has been the redoubtable M. Rochefort, the truculent editor of the Intransigeant. Rochefort having declared in his paper that the death of Capt. Pallier was an assassination, Karl was pained to observe that he had no evidence in proof of his assertion, and kindly undertook to manufacture some for him. Assuming a frock coat, white tie and broad-brimmed hat of Quaker-like dimensions, bearing under his arm a large case for documents and on his nose a pair of spectacles,and looking for all the world like a most respectable member of society, instead of the merry scamp he is, Karl presented himself at the office of the Intransigeant, where he introduced himself as Dr. Berthemet, the intimate friend of Dr. Pallier, the brother of the gallant Captain who lately succumbed to yellow fever in Africa.

He informed the representative of the paper who received him that he was acquainted with all the circumstances attending the death of that officer and was able to prove that it had been premeditated in cold blood and that it was only called by its right name when described as an assassination. Deeply interested, the representative of M. Rochefort asked to be allowed to take notes, which Karl was only too anxious to allow. Then began an amusing scene, Karl spinning the most detailed yarns respecting Pallier and his companions, occasionally unclasping the case he carried under his arm as if to refresh his memory by consulting some document. He even went so far as to promise that documents would be supplied for production in the Chamber when M. Lasies interpellated the Minister of the Colonies respecting the Captain's death.

It is almost incredible that so astute a man as Rochefort can have allowed himself to be played with as though he were a mere Quesnay de Beaurepaire, but he is not the only clever Frenchman who has let passion blind him completely.

Fashionable Brown Hands.

The summer fashion of going gloveless has sent any number of women back to the city with brown hands, upon which the rings most modern women delight in, show up with odd effect. Few of the younger women show a disposition to resume the glove of civilization, apparently delighting in unfettered fingers and wrists as men generally do. The brown hands are not the sort that poets love to sing of, as nothing shows the effects of exposure or use of any sort more than the hand. The skin grows rough, the fingers thicken at the tips and the nails take months to get back to their normal daintiness. Still, a white, delicate looking hand is not up to date this autumn, and a mannish distaste for covering. it threatens to injure the women's gloves until well on toward winter.

While the home-coming girl of autumn has thrown over her gloves, she has added an extra veil to her equipment. The inventor of the two-veil fad, or the reason for its prevalence is not known, but it has become the custom to wear one closely drawn veil of dotted gauze over the face to the chin, while an additional veil of chiffon usually of the brown variety flutters loosely from the hat brim or is at times draped back upon the brim The two veils give the effect of mystery, and strangely enough, even the very prettiest girls swathe their faces in the double covering and peer out from the gauze like Turkish women, piquing the curiosity of the beholder.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free
F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.
Sold by druggists, price 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Physicians would not recommend Jesse Moore Whiskey if they did not know it to be the best in the market.

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital, $2,000,000. Surplus, $1,000,000
Profit and Loss Account July 1st, 1900 [illegible]
William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop Vice President, Thomas Brown, Cashier; Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

CORRESPONDENTS

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus $2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

OFFICERS

President ..... B. A. Becker
First Vice-President ..... Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President .... H. Horstmann
Cashier ..... A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier ..... Wm. Hermann
Secretary ..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary ..... A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker, H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd.

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 California Street

Deposits, July 1, 1900 ..... $26,952,875
Paid Up Capital 1,000,000
Reserve Fund 218,093
Contingent Fund 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Gakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

33 Post Street
Below Kearny — Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres.; George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal and James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. ☞ Send for Circular.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE, Agents
323-325 Market Street S. F.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty five cents a bottle.

For home use, for bar use, for physicians' use, for everybody's use, Jesse Moore Whiskey is always the best and is in most general demand.

Orpheum

Jessie Ba[illegible] Davis [illegible] and Anna Carlwe [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Jack[illegible] [illegible] Mc[illegible] [illegible]

Coming Camille D'Arville

Reserved [illegible] Box [illegible] and Saturday.

Columbia Theatre

WEEK BEGINNING MONDAY, SEPT. 24th

Every night including Sunday

Clay Clement and L. R. Stockwell

and a strong company

Revival of the Popular Comedy Success, by A. W. Pinero,

"The Magistrate"

With the strongest cast that has ever presented it here Oct 1. Eddie Foy presenting "A Night in Town."

Prices, $1, 75c, 50c, 35c, and 25c.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers

Phone Main 234

Week of Monday, Sept. 24th

Picturesque production of Clay M. Green's comedy

His Japanese Wife

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.

Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

H. FRIEDLANDER & Co., Lessees and Managers

Telephone Main 1731

Sunday Night, Sept., 23rd

Grand re-opening and first appearance in America of The Azzali Italian Grand Opera Co., in Monday, Friday, "Carmen; Tuesday "Aida"; Wednesday night and Saturday matinee "Traviata"; Thursday, Saturday, "Otello."

OTELLO

POPULAR PRICES.

Reserved—Night 25, 50 and 75. Matinee 25 and 50

Morosco's Grand Opera House

Matinees every Saturday and Sunday

Last nights of "Quo Vadis" Week beginning Monday Sept 17th. THE NEW FRAWLEY COMPANY presenting Joseph Arthur's Famous Hoosier play

BLUE JEANS

With Miss Minnie Dupree as June

Prices:—10, 15, 25 and 50 cents. A few front rows in orchestra, 75 cents.

Saturday matinee, 10, 15, 25 and 50 cents.

Branch Ticket Office, Emporium

★TIVOLI★

Curtain rises at 8 p. m. sharp.

Tonight "Faust," Sunday night "Trovatore."

Week of September 24th

Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights

By general Request TANNHAUSER

Tuesday, Thursday, Sunday nights, Saturday matinee

THE BARBER OF SEVILLE

Popular prices, 25 and 50 cents Telephone Bush 9

Seats on sale seven days ahead only.

CAFE ZINKAND

Go where the crowd goes

Listen to the matchless string band and enjoy the finest wines, beers and supper.

The Cafe Zinkand is society's gathering place after the show is over.

Dr. G. S. Moore's Scientific Hair Restorer.

A Sure and Positive Cure. One bottle will convince the most skeptical. Testimonials, 488 Geary St., S.F.

Business Personalities of Dawson City

Continued from page 10.

temperature from May until the middle of October. Sonnickson and Henry located their ranch of 320 acres in the year of 1897. Since then they have expended about $40,000 in improvements, and a thorough equipment of modern machinery. The property is situated thirty miles up the Stewart river, Stewart river being 71 miles from Dawson and is reached by boat fnom Dawson up the Yukon. The first crop off the ranch consisted principally of hay and was harvested in 1897. This year they have cut over 100 tons of hay, which is baled by hydraulic press and shipped to Dawson; in addition they will harvest oats, barley, and rye. The two half tones which appear in this number of the Wave remind one of a scene on one of the large farms in the Dakotas or Minnesota, showing the harvesting being done by modern machinery. Mr. Sonnickson, is a pioneer in this country coming here sixteen years ago. Mr. Henry arrived in Dawson in '97 since which time he has been associated with Mr. Sonnickson in freighting in Dawson and on the ranch at Stewart river.

The Miners' Drug Store of Dawson, Y. T., and Its Popularity.

DISEASE is one of the conditions of the survival of the fittest. Abolish disease, and the weak and defective will have the same chances of life as have the strong. The unfittest will then be as they naturally are—the majority. We cannot have a robust race of men without disease to kill off the weaklings, and the philanthropist, who proposes to remodel the world by abolishing disease—would if he could succeed make conditions of mankind infinitely worse. The Miners' Drug Store sprung into popularity quickly because the proprietors Reid & Company were unfailing in their courtesy to all, and that those who once became patrons recognized that this store carried only the purest and best of drugs. Patent medicines and accessories recommended this popular place to their friends who in turn sung its praises to others, and thus in a short time the Miners' Drug Store became a household name in every cabin in the Yukon territory. If you have a complaint or disease take your prescription, go to Reid & Company the Miners' Drug store, Front avenue, Dawson, Y. T., where you can depend on getting pure drugs at fair prices

Antone F. Stander and Mrs. Stander nee Miss Violet Raymond.

Mr. Stander is the owner of 4 and 5 El Dorado and one of those quiet, unassuming, soft spoken young millionaires, who goes about his business in an unaffected way, one who is glad to see an old friend or ever ready to help a former companion in need. In this land of sudden fortune there is no one more deserving of the blessings of wealth nor less envied in its possession than this same Antone. Mrs. Stander, formerly Miss Violet Raymond, is well known on the Pacific Coast. She has delighted thousands yf theater-goers with her sweet face and graceful dancing. She was known in vaudeville as one of the Raymond sisters. Miss Raymond became Mrs. Stander in the summer of 1898, and that "fortune favors the brain," such is the case here for Mr. Stander besides settling a handsome allowance on his wife, has presented her with magnificent gems from the famous Tiffany of New York.

Meditations of a Matron.

Continued from page 12.

Latham and Wyatt Allen are to be married in that dear little church in Ross Valley on the third of October. I like the Ross Valley weddings but I must miss this as I have promised Jane Greenwood to go to hers.

The Will Crockers I hear, are having a splendid time in Paris. They have taken an apartment, and Mrs. Crocker has made a very delightful coterie of friends amongst French people, who are worth while from a French standpoint. Mrs. Henry Scott will return with Mary next week. I forgot to tell you that the Carolan Barn Dance is to be an exact reproduction of one of those magnificent affairs given in Newport last year. I am so glad I am going; I do worship innovations. I shall tell you later of another big ball to be given the first week in December by one of last season's debutantes.

This, I think, is all the news I have, Diary dear. Golf is about the same, I have not been to the Links this week.

THEATRICALS

Miss Minnie Dupree.

A quick, brisk, alert young woman is Miss Minnie Dupree, who came west on a telegram from Manager Frawley to enact the heroine of "Blue Jeans." Like so many others, she is a California girl and began her career as an "extra" on the very stage she is now to tread as leading lady. Such are the retributions of the drama. Since flitting from the lusty atmosphere of the peninsula she has had various valuable experiences. She was the ingenue in "Held by the Enemy" on its initial presentation and visited the coast with the combination which first presented that clever rigmarole to our population. She went to London in "The Heart of Maryland," and assisted in the development of "The Lady and the Cowboy" with the Goodwins. She has been in vaudeville and altogether she has kept herself busy throughout the brief years of her career. However, that's what one has for being brisk and alert.

Returning to her native hearth after all these years, Miss Duprer feels a certain diffidence which, under the circumstances, is not unnatural. Yet there must be an infinite satisfaction in taking the first place where one has had the last, in being a star where one has been an "extra."

Captain Jack's Opportunity.

Fancy the happiness for an egotist of appearing before the public in a play made out of his own career in which he has the privilege of figuring in his own person as hero, incident, dialogue and scenery being all directed at the exploitation of his brilliant personality. This is just what is brought about in Captain Crawford's "On The Trail" which has had a brief run at the Alta Theater. The hero is the author, the eminent poet scout, Captain Jack Crawford, the other dramatis personæ, the plot, and scenery all attest his prowess. "What—not Jack Crawford—the greatest of scouts, the bravest man in the mountains" is the form of address customary on the introduction of the Captain. He rescues Indian maidens, fights with savage braves, foils the villain and does a score of noble deeds all in a brief space with appropriate limelight. And this is the Captain's own role. He accepts the compliments of the dialogue with the easy grace of true desert. He performs his heroic business to the manner born. He is himself; the part fits him like a glove and I am quite sure the felicity of it must surpass the possibilities of celestial joys. Think of the opportunity of accurate exaltation here afforded. True, certain eminent pugs have figured as heroes, in plays constructed round their exploits but other hands set down the dialogue. Openings for eulogy must have been missed. Captain Jack, however, has let slip no chance of explaining himself. He is even compelled by the business of the role to recite his own poetry, ostensibly to the boys around the camp fire but really to the audience. I have known of men who in order to taste the sweets of their obituaries have circulated rumors of their deaths, but Captain Jack's is ready made immortality.

Otherwise, "The Trail" has been capitally put on at the Alta, the scenery is decidedly picturesque and in spite of the naive egotism of the production it possessed an interest which kept the audience to the end.

There is only one reason why you shouldn't drink Jesse Moore "AA" Whiskey — that's because you have signed the pledge.

The Hoffman Cafe and Grill

3rd St. opp. Post Office.

High class service at reasonable rates. Cuisine unsurpassed. Private dining rooms for ladies. BALZE & WUBBENHORST, Props.

BELCOURT, McDOUGAL & SMITH—Barristers, solicitors, conveyancers, etc. Offices at Dawson and Ottawa. Rooms 1 and 2, Chisholm block, Dawson. Special attention given to parliamentary work. N. A. Belcourt, Q. C., M. P., Frank J. McDougal, John P. Smith.

JEPHSON & ASTLEY

D. L. Surveyors, Mining, Engr's.

A special report furnished in connection with the Survey of any Hydraulic Concession.

Webb Block

Lager and Steam Beer made of the Choicest Hops and Malt. Bottled Beer for Family Use a Specialty.

City Brewery

Cor. Main St and 7th Ave. Skagway, A

CHAS. A. SAAKE, Prop. P. O. Box 63.

Orders Promptly Filled

W. T. Iliff

Manufacturer of and dealer in Lumber Mouldings, Shingles, Lath and Building Material [Office and Mill.]

Foot of 3rd ave. Skagway, Alaska

Chas. S. W. Barwell

Dom. Land Surveyor

Mining and Civil Engineer

Reports on Mines, and Hydraulic Concessions Mines Surveyed, etc.

Office Exchange Bldg., Dawson, Y. T.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

MRS. SACHT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

DIRECTIONS. Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT

Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:

Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt

708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.

Telephone Polk 1321

Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.

Mrs. Hansen, 141 Clara Street

Go where you will, the best saloons sell Jesse Moore Whiskey.

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

Theatrical Notes

Mr. Max Hirschfeld, musical director of the Tivoli Opera House, announces a Special Symphony Concert to be given at the Tivoli Thursday afternoon, October 25th at 3:15. The program will be particularly interesting and novel, the principal feature being the masterwork of Hector Berlioz—"Symphony Fantastique, an Episode in the Life of an Artist," in which Berlioz depicts the dreams of an opium fiend. This will be its first performance in this city. A set of steel chimes used in the last movement of this work is being specially constructed for the production. The balance of the program includes the famous "Kaiser March" and the "Ride of the Valkyries," by Wagner, "Dance of the Will o' the Wisps," by Rubenstein, and other standard works.

Mr. Hirschfeld's work in the productions of "Tannhauser," "Queen of Sheba," "Lohengrin" and other grand operas has proved him to be a competent conductor of the dramatic type, and this concert will serve to introduce him to us in another style of music, and it is to be hoped that his success will be such as to warrant a series of symphony concerts under his direction. The most successful symphony concerts have always been those given at the Tivoli Opera House both under Bauer and Scheel.

Mr. William L. Greenbaum, whose efforts with the Hinrichs-Beel and Scheel concerts were so successful, will represent Mr. Hirschfeld as manager. This means no disappointments, changes of program, etc. Subscription lists are now open at all the music stores.

* *

After many weeks of anxious waiting on the part of the California Theatre management, the Azzali Italian Opera Company has at last been discovered, and S. H. Friedlander & Co. are glad to announce that the renowned organization will sing for the first time in this country to-morrow, Sunday night, Sept. 23d. The opening opera will be Verdi's "Othello," which will be repeated Thursday and Saturday nights. Bizet's "Carmen" has been chosen for Monday and Friday, "Aida" will be given Tuesday and the following Sunday night and "La Traviata" will be heard on Wednesday night and Saturday afternoon. Among the principals are many vocalists of international renown, including Nice Barbareschi, dramatic soprano; Angelini Turconi-Bruno, lyric soprano; Estefania Collamarini, contralto; Vittorio Emanuele Castellano, dramatic tenor; Lauro Alghissi, lyric tenor; Lorenzo Bellagamba, first baritone; Cesare Allesandroni, second baritone; Louis Lucenti, first bass. Angelini Rizzi Baccarini, Pio Facci and Julio Cortesi are lesser artists, and the impressario and musical director is Augusto Azzali, his assistant being Alfredo Gore.

* *

The New Frawley Company, at the Grand Opera House, is scoring a success in "Quo Vadis," which is breaking all records for attendance at Manager Morosco's big theatre. The last performance of this play will be given Sunday night with matinees today and tomorrow. On Monday evening it will be succeeded by a production of Joseph Arthur's famous Hoosier drama "Blue Jeans," which will introduce a new member of the Frawley Company in the person of Minnie Dupree who will assume the role of June, which is the principal female part. Miss Dupree will be remembered here through her connection with Nat Goodwin's Companies, and "Held By The Enemy," in which attractions she played the ingenues. Since last here she created the part of Liz "In Mizzoura," and the leading character in "Two Little Vagrants.' The feature of "Blue Jeans" is the great sawmill scene, with its real whirling saws, from which the hero has a most narrow escape. Another interesting scene is the one showing an Indiana political barbecue with a double quartette, a full brass band, and a live bull.

* *

The bill at the Tivoli next week will consist of "Tannhauser" and "The Barber of Seville." "Tannhauser" will be sung on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday nights, while "The Barber of Seville" will be the bill for Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday nights and the Saturday matinee. In "Tannhauser" Barron Berthald is to sing the title role, Salassa as "Wolfram," Schuster the "Landgrave," Anna Lichter the "Venus" and Effie Stewart will sing "Elizabeth." The orchestra will be doubled and the chorus enlarged. In "The Barber of Seville" Russo is to sing "Count Almaviva," Ferrari "Figaro," Nicolini "Don Basilio." Signor Panitza makes his first appearance this season as "Dr. Bartolo;" Lia Polotini is to sing "Bertha" and Italia Repetto "Rosina," which is said to be her greatest success. With two such operas as "Tannhauser" and "The Barber of Seville," the Tivoli should draw crowded houses.

* *

The Clay Clement—L. R. Stockwell Company begins the fourth and final week of its engagement next Monday night at the Columbia Theatre. The bill for the week is to be the popular comedy, "The Magistrate," in which L. R. Stockwell will play the title role, while his co-star, Mr. Clement and the supporting company, will be satisfactorily cast. "The Magistrate" is the work of Arthur Wing Pinero, and is one of the best of that author's many excellent plays.

Eddie Foy in his new production, "A Night in Town" follows for a limited engagement.

* *

Last week's good bill at the Orpheum will be followed by another even stronger. Jessie Bartlett Davis will be retained for one more week, and among the newcomers are some of the cleverest performers in vaudeville. Charles Wayne and Anna Caldwell will present a new sketch by George M. Cohan, called "To Boston on Business," and is said to be one of the funniest things he has written. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson will appear in "A Bachelor's Home." Kolb and Dill are German comedians, original and very funny. Merritt and Murdoch are comedians of note; they will present "A Quiet Evening" by Geo. F. Farren.

* *

Following the closing of "The Widow's Husband" with Sunday evening's performance at the Alcazar, Clay M. Green's play, "His Japanese Wife," will be revived with all of the beauty of settings and picturesque scenes of its initial production over a year ago at the Alcazar. The play won hearty recognition as being bright, entertaining and novel, and a goodly number of players created some clever business and bright scenes.

* *

The choir of the Spanish Church, under the direction of Senor Arrillaga, gave a very interesting program last Thursday evening at Byron Mauzy Hall for the benefit of the Church.

This Saturday evening a musicale will be given at Byron Mauzy Hall by the pupils of Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Dorrington, and promises to be quite an interesting event.

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

The original Swain's Bakery, 213 Sutter St. stands without a rival and has stood the test for years. The most delicious meals are served by gentlemanly attendants, and the management takes pride in having everything orderly. It is just the place for business men and ladies out shopping to lunch.

Have used many hair tonics, but find none as good as Mrs. Sacht's Hair Restorer to prevent the hair from falling out, and sure cure for dandruff.
ALICE KEEGAN, 709 Ellis St., S. F.

After my return from the country, I found my naturally curly hair very straight, after using Mrs. Sacht's Hair Restorer I found that the natural curl returned. LEONORA GOLDSCHMIDT, 2000 Fillmore St., S. F.

The Great Family Medicine of the Age!—For sore throat, gargle the throat with a mixture of PAIN-KILLER and water, and the relief is immediate, and cure positive. It should not be forgotten that the PAIN KILLER is equally as good to take internally as to use externally. Avoid substitutes, there is but one Pain Killer, Perry Davis'. Price 25 and 50 cents.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT
What a Gas Range Will Do?

It will do everything any other cooking apparatus will do, but it will do it BETTER, QUICKER, EASIER and CHEAPER!

IT WILL DO AWAY WITH

Dirt, Worry and Ashes;
Your kitchen will be clean;
Your working hours shorter;
Your food will be better cooked;
Your life prolonged, and
Your happiness assured.

Stove Department,
415 Post Street, - - San Francisco

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy-makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper-hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS, Brush Mfrs.,
TEL. 5610. 609 Sacramento Street.

A. O. LINDSTROM [Phone Main 5178] AL. JOHNSON

Sutter Street Hammam
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

In the sick room or on your sideboard, Jesse Moores "AA" Whiskey is indispensable.

The Sign of the Peacock
229 GEARY ST.
Theatre Suppers
Luncheon Ice Cream Breakfast
ORDERS DELIVERED

LIKE A MAGIC TOUCH

Soquick and easily is the brilliancy restored to tarnished Silver by

Electro-Silicon

SILVER POLISH

If in doubt what's best, why not make the test. Simply send address on a postal.

At grocers and druggists everywhere, and postpaid 15 cents in stamps.

"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York City.

The Saturday Wave

Is Printed by

THE STANLEY-TAYLOR CO.

424 SANSOME STREET, S. F.

DR. CLYDE PAYNE

Has returned from New York and resumed the practice of Dentistry at

135 GEARY ST.

Phone Main 9. Spring Valley Building

W. C. ACHI & CO.

Real Estate Brokers

We buy or sell real estate in any part of the Group. We will also buy or sell Stocks in any corporation in Hawaiian Islands.

Office. 10 W. King St., HONOLULU, H. I.

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits..... $20.00
Pants..... 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM

THE TAILOR

1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

SAMPLES SENT FREE

IF YOU WANT

The Best Coal Oil

BUY—

New Stories Re-Told.

THE SUPERIOR SEX. Lucy and George are children of Pacific Heights parents. Lucy is seven and George is five. She has attended the primary department of a private school just four months and has begun to be interested in the intellectual welfare of her little brother. They were discussing a problem which had come up at school that day, and Lucy said "why brother, anybody could tell you are only five. You don't even know the difference between corn and wheat." George (who hates to acknowledge his inferiority) "I do, too! Wheat is is ..." Lucy (taking pity on him)—"Why, George, you know well enough you don't know. Listen to me and remember. Wheat is wheat and corn is corn, and wheat grows in a wheatfield and corn grows in a cornfield! And don't you ever forget it."

x

DIPLOMACY UNNECESSARY. Charles Lever, the novelist, was once the guest of Dr. Whately, the Archbishop of Dublin, at his country seat. Among the other guests were some of the expectant clergy, who paid submissive court to their host. While the Archbishop and his guests were walking through the grounds the prelate plucked from a bush a leaf which, he declared, had a most nauseous flavour. "Taste it," said he, handing the leaf to one of the clergymen. The latter smilingly obeyed, and then, with a wry face, subscribed to the botanical orthodoxy of the Archbishop. "Taste it, you, Lever," said the gratified prelate, handing the leaf to the novelist. "No, thank you," said Lever, laughing: "my brother is not in your Grace's diocese."

x

SCOTTISH THRIFT.—A certain member of the Thistle Club in the smoking room of a Pullman between San Francisco and Shasta addressing his fellow travelers said: "Can ye oblige me with a light?" One traveller produced an empty box, with apologies; another said he did not smoke, and therefore did not carry matches. "Can ye give me a light?" repeated the Scotsman to the third, who stolidly looked out of the window. Then the Scotsman's finger went reluctantly into his own pocket. "Weel, weel," he murmured—"I'll jist need to tak' ane o' my ain!"

x

THE SHAH'S ERROR.—While in Belgium the Shah of Persia was entertained by the Belgian monarch and brought to see the beautiful gardens of the Chateau de Laeken. There the Oriental potentate saw the Queen surrounded by her ladies-in-waiting, after a prolonged stare he turned to the King, "Your harem, sire?" The question took his majesty so much by surprise that he did not for a moment reply, and the Shah, taking his silence for consent, looked critically along the line and added, mildly but decidedly: "You will have to renew it."

x

A SOURCE OF CONSOLATION. Two countrymen who had not seen each other for a long time met at a fair. They had a lot of things to tell each other. "Shure it's married I am," said O'Brien. "You don't tell me so!" said Blake. "Faith, yes," said O'Brien, "an' I've got a fine healthy bhoy which the neighbors say is the very picter of me." Blake looked for a moment at O'Brien, who was not, to say the least, remarkable for his good looks, and then said: "Och, weil, what's the harrum so long as the child's healthy."

x

LORD RUSSELL'S COMPLIMENT.—The late Lord Russell and Sir Frank Lockwood were walking in Dublin with a charming young Irish girl. They were talking of some renowned English beauty, when the girl made a disparaging remark about her countrywoman, saying that beauty had died out in Ireland since the English conquest. "Not altogether," remarked Russell. "I've seen beauty in this country fully equal to any that can be found across the channel; but that, Frank," he added, looking across at his companion, "is between you and me!"

x

"WILL" AND "SHALL."—Andrew Lang says that a Scotchman who understands the distinction between "will" and "shall" is not a good Scotchman. He tells of a Scotch reporter who had joined the staff of an English newspaper. His first night on duty he knocked at the editor's door and asked: "Will I come in?" "God knows," replied the editor.

x

A SPONGE.—A group of friends dining at the home of Sir John Pope-Hennessy, were gossipping about a certain member of parliament who had two objectionable peculiarities—he was not given to the use of soap and water and he was always borrowing money. "Yes, poor fellow," remarked Hennessy, "he sponges upon everybody except himself."

Palace Hotel

The tourist, pleasure-seeker, and the business man will find the location of the Palace particularly desirable being in close proximity to places of amusement, wholesale and shopping districts, and with the further advantage of having street-cars to all parts of the city pass the entrance.

Operated in conjunction with the Palace is the Grand Hotel to which it is joined by a covered passageway placing under one management 1400 rooms, 900 of which have baths attached.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

THE GREAT FAIR AT Tanforan Park

Sept. 24th to Oct. 6th, 1900

Under Management of the San Francisco and San Mateo Agricultural Association

To the live-stock breeders of California, as well as to the lovers of out-door sports this exhibition is dedicated. The attraction will include: A High-class Open-air Horse Show, Select Herds of Prize Cattle, a complete exhibit of Swine, Sheep, Goats, Poultry and Belgian Hares. Extraordinary show of Dogs. Attractive exhibit of high-class Vehicles and other Industrial Displays from leading manufacturers of the State. The outdoor sports will embrace Polo Games, between players from Southern and Central California for championship; Pony Races; Long Distance Race of 25 miles, by noted riders; change of horses each mile, in full view of grandstand. Grand Athletic Field Day—Club Harness Racing: High-class Trotting and Pacing, in which the great stars of the east and west will meet and make world's records. All in all, the entertainment will be clean, dignified and instructive. Grand Musical Concerts Daily. Excellent railroad facilities by both regular and special trains to Grandstand entrance. Entertainment each day, from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

GEORGE ALMER NEWHALL, Secretary. HENRY J. CROCKER, President.
EDWIN F. SMITH, General Manager.

REPSOLD SELECT VINTAGE REGISTERED BRAND

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-312 POST STREET

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EAR

SOHMER PIANO AGENCY

We Make the Cuts in this Paper.

HIGH GRADE Half-tone & Line CUTS

Yosemite Engraving Co.
24 Montgomery Street
San Francisco

For Catalogues Books venirs Newspapers Letter-heads Etc.

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S. F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO.

General Agents.

Electric and Hygienic Treatment.

Sure Cure for Chronic Diseases. Tumors, Cancers and Displacements, positively and without operations.

DR. WM. SCHMITT,
502 Taylor St., cor. Geary.
San Francisco.

CONSULTATION FREE.

Volume 22 No. 37 December 1, 1900

This Paper Not to be taken from the Library.
CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

The Wave

Published every Saturday

Price 10 Cents

THE WAVE

Published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the Post Office second class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE COMPANY, PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—December 1, 1900

Mayor Phelan's Opportunity.

In January Mayor Phelan will have the opportunity to rid himself and the city of some of his mistakes, as the terms of several municipal commissioners then expire. Whether the Mayor will attempt to restore himself to public esteem remains to be shown. The people are waiting with no little curiosity to learn whether Mr. Phelan has profited by a year's experience, or whether, like a typical bourbon, he is impervious, learning nothing and forgetting.

The Wave makes these remarks in a spirit of kindness. Mayor Phelan has in the past done much for San Francisco and deserved well of the city; and if rehabilitated in public favor he might be useful to the people and to himself. Mr. Phelan and San Francisco can assist each other.

But in order to go forward Mr. Phelan will require to go backward—back to the time before he was last elected Mayor, and when surrounded by men instead of flatterers and toad-eaters he was the representative not only of the Democracy but of the manhood, intelligence, energy and character of San Francisco as no other man in our history ever was. The fall from that position to the one now occupied by him has been so great that it would have destroyed any ordinary man, and the fact that there is anything left of Mr. Phelan is proof that he is more than ordinary. This being the case there is hope, but hope only if the falling movement can be arrested, as the distance between the present and annihilation and oblivion is little.

As has been said, the Mayor must go backward. He must restore to his friendship the strong men who were the van guard of the battles for municipal reform, of which he was a leading part. He must restore to himself the confidence of the young men of the town, of whom he should, as a young man, be the natural leader, but of whom he has always shown fear and distrust. He must keep himself in touch with and in reach of advice of people whose integrity and unselfishness have been proved by past action. But most of all he must admit that he may, at some time in his official or political career, have erred. The people dearly love a man who is big enough to confess a mistake and to throw himself on their generosity for forgiveness. But to deny the possibility of error continues a controversy with the people in which the individual is sure of defeat.

Let the Mayor take down that halo which he persists in wearing and place it in cold storage for a while. It is no longer becoming, and in the light of events in his administration, is ridiculous. Minus the halo, and admitting the possibility of past mistakes, let him get out among the people and learn what they are saying and what they are wishing. Even if the things said are not musical to his ears they will be beneficial and invigorating.

Mayor Phelan was elected by the plain, commonsense people of the town, with the idea that he would, under the power granted by the charter, give San Francisco an honest and progressive government. The government has been honest, but has not been, and under present conditions can not be, progressive. It has been negative where it should have been positive and positive where it should have been negative.

The Mayor took office under the impression that there were but two considerable elements in the community—certain newspaper influence and the Merchants' Association. The scandalous manner in which the city was paper ridden by the former of these powers is something which it is unnecessary at this time to discuss. As to the Merchants' Association, although a worthy civic body of patriotic purposes, it instilled into the Mayor's mind that anybody who had shown political activity and had accomplished anything was dangerous, and that the road to good government lay through the suppression of such, and to save the city from these people it would be proper for the Merchants' Association to take the offices themselves or fill them, which they did, showing themselves in this to be very clever politicians indeed.

The result of all this has been to establish commissions not in touch with the people. The commissioners do not know the people and the people do not know the commissioners. The commissioners with few exceptions are not representative men, and they have constituted the various boards so many bureaus for the creation of enemies for the administration. Nothing is said, of course, against the personal character of the individual commissioners. For the most part they are very nice old ladies, but such are not the people to rejuvenate San Francisco.

Nor is any criticism intended the Mayor's love for antiquities, provided it is exercised within proper bounds; for example, at the excavations of Nippur, or in appointing boards to constitute an imaginary and fanciful government for that ancient city. But to have appointed obsolete, retired and disabled men to establish and inaugurate the new San Francisco shows the Mayor to be lamentably deficient in a sense of humor and an appreciation of the absurd.

Then the magnificent sentiment that supported public improvements and municipal advancement at the close of last year has been frittered away by petty irritations, by threats and small persecutions inflicted on business interests. Who heard during the campaigns of Mr. Phelan, of threatened sumptuary legislation and attacks on the liquor trade? And yet these have been a prominent feature of the administration and have dwarfed and rendered impossible the measures of general concern for which that administration was elected.

Mayor Phelan and San Francisco have a chance in January. Let us hope for the best.

The Civil Service Bogie.

Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court W. R. Hearst, having tried the civil service case in the columns of the Examiner, has, without the aid of the Supreme Court of the State of California or any other appellate tribunal, promptly reversed Judge Hebbard of the Superior Court, and declared that the Civil Service Commission, of which E. F. Moran, an Examiner reporter, is de facto chief commissioner, is omnipotent and the Superior Court of San Francisco a nonentity.

The Wave is not wise enough nor sufficiently learned in the law to pass judgment on the merits of the civil service suit. It was brought by an attorney long recognized as the head of the Pacific coast bar. The case was ably and elaborately argued on each side before a judge of distinguished reputation; a judge whose independent conduct on the bench so antagonized powerful political factions that his own party refused him renomination, but the course that had antagonized politicians and domineering litigants had endeared the Judge to the people, and without party nomination or support he was elected by the largest vote ever given a judge in San Francisco. It would seem that this state of facts would entitle the decision of Judge Hebbard in the civil service case to respectful consideration; and that an appeal to the Supreme Court in an orderly manner would be the proper course.

But not so it seems. One side to their controversy is behaving in a clamorous, abusive manner—violative of the spirit of law and order—threatening courts and judges and asserting its superiority to law and courts. These gentlemen are certainly making a poor spectacle of American citizenship. They are furnishing a very poor example to the "push," who are supposed to have a monopoly of such behavior.

The charter of San Francisco is a law like any other law, subject to interpretation by the courts. The Wave is aware that in making this statement it is subject to challenge. At the beginning of the year it was generally understood that the charter was so peculiarly constructed that its interpretation where doubtful or disputed was confided to but two authorities, the Examiner and Mayor Phelan. But after the Examiner and Mr Phelan quarreled it was inevitable that the courts should obtain jurisdiction of this as of any other law; and having done so, it became impossible that either party to a controversy should be able to dictate to the courts in advance the form of judgments. This method of making courts superfluous is not favored by the constitution.

While on the subject of civil service, the remark is in order that the Wave strongly favors civil service. It is a principle that must underlie good government. But calling a proceeding civil service does not make t such, and there is certainly little resemblance in the proceedings of Messrs. Moran, Freud, Quinn and McCarthy to any civil service of which mankind has heretofore had any knowledge. Civil Service is in operation in Germany, France, Great Britain and in the federal government of the United States, but it is an entirely different article from that which the local commission is trying to foist on San Francisco.

The cardinal principle elsewhere has been the public good and that a competent man performing properly the duties of his office shall be protected against a man whose principal recommendation consists in wanting the other man's job. The wanton removal of competent persons because they could not pass an examination largely made up of matters disconnected with their duties would not only create astonishment but would be resented as an outrage and an assault on civil service. The present outcry consists in the worship of words and the destruction of principles. The "push" which it has been supposed the civil service would crush, has always operated on the plan of the present commission; that is, turn the man now in office out, no matter what his experience, to make room for another man.

No element in San Francisco has ever done so much to undermine civil service ideas as the present commission. Outside of the Examiner, which has its finger in the pie, in the presence of Edward Moran and the salt of the earth of the Merchants' Association, which feels itself bound to back its secretary, Mr. Freud, be he right or wrong, nobody has any confidence in the commission or its work. As for the talk of jobbery and corruption in connection with the commission, nobody who knows the commissioners will take that seriously. Outside of Moran, the secretary, nobody would accuse these worthy persons of being sufficiently intelligent to job anybody or anything. The public is safe on that score.

In passing, it is rather curious to note that Mayor Phelan appointed on this board two strong Republicans and one Democrat; and in this way has the commission proceeded, attacking the Democratic officers first, throwing out the people who did most to produce the Democratic administration which gave the commission its appointment, and greatly strengthening that bond of affection between the Mayor and his party which binds them together like two Kilkenny cats.

That hoary-headed swindle the Saint Mary's Park appropriation has broken out again in the Board of Supervisors. Fortunately for the taxpayers, the Charter forbids this scheme from maturing, as purchases of land amounting to more than fifty thousand dollars must be submitted to the votes of the people and there is not the slightest doubt if the voters get at this job that they will defeat it by a majority of more than ten to one. The Supervisors cannot in this instance break the Charter, but they can prove themselves to be first-class demagogues and humbugs by trying.

Probably no land buying scheme could be brought before the city that would have less to recommend it than their Saint Mary's Park Project. The plan to cut out the buildings from a large tract alongside a business thoroughfare, is injurious to the business of that part of the city, and is of no use to the people. That portion of the city is already better supplied with parks than any other. Three short blocks away is Portsmouth Square, not a great distance farther in the same direction is Washington Square, and not far in an opposite direction is Union Square. Why buy more where there are now most? If more squares are needed, they should be created where there are now least of them. Every argument that can be advanced for another square is an argument against using the Saint Mary's land for that purpose. Nobody wants this square except a few persons with land to sell and a few special interests. And the sooner the Supervisors who are working this thing return to the service of the city, the better it will be for all concerned.

No Fool Like an Old Fool

What is the reason that the distinctively California comic opera has not been written? There is material enough developed every day in the courts to build up a romantic opera of the most interesting kind. And it will be purely a California production.

When the right man comes along, the Reginald Dekoven of the Pacific Coast, and picks out his subject for melody and rhyme from the court records of the Metropolis, then will the laurel wreath of fame have to be rebuilt to fit a new brow and then will the auditorium of the local theatre where this production is billed, have to be enlarged.

During the past few weeks there has come to light through court proceedings as humorous a state of affairs in the marital troubles of capitalist Wm. C. Lund as ever was chosen by comedy writer for his theme. The daily papers have made much of it, and a loud laugh has gone over the whole coast at the absurd denouement. Mr. Lund engages a housekeeper in a Boston intelligence bureau for his Mexican ranch and marries her at New Orleans. Then he takes his youthful wife globe trotting and for several years they see the world together. She forms another attachment for a San Francisco traveling man and leaves her aged spouse who retaliates with a criminal complaint and her arrest. When the case is practically completed and the evidence against her is all in, he comes to her hotel, woos and wins her back and the sensation lovers are robbed of a fitting wind-up.

The following outline is suggested for a three-act comic opera, entitled,

No Fool Like an Old Fool.

AN OPERA.

CHARACTERS.

Wm. C. Lund, an aged capitalist.
Mrs. Lund, young and flighty.
Henry Hertz, a lady killer.

Chorus of private detectives, female help, etc., etc.

ACT I.

In the Intelligence Office at Boston. Large Chorus of applicants for positions as female help. The strong-minded female proprietor sits at desk with register before her. Opening Chorus. Enter Wm. C. Lund looking for a housekeeper. Bass solo. Chorus girls display their qualifications for the position. Lund selects soprano. Duet. He asks her to marry him and go to his Mexican ranch. She consents. Act closes with grand wedding scene in the intelligence office.

Curtain.

ACT II.

In an upper hallway of a San Francisco hotel. Some four years are supposed to have elapsed since the curtain rang down on the first act. Harry Hertz and Mrs. Lund come on the stage to slow music. Loving duet. They cross to left, conversing. Enter numerous chorus of private detectives, male and female, on tiptoe with fingers on lips. They watch Hertz and Mrs. Lund who enter room at left. Detectives form line across stage, the foremost with his eye glued to keyhole. Enter Wm. C. Lund. Lund and Chorus.

Curtain.

ACT III.

In Judge Cabaniss' court room, Mrs. Lund in prisoner's box, with Wm. C. Lund as complaining witness. Chorus of private detective witnesses, jury and audience. Court proceeds in appropriate manner and the case looks dark for Mrs. Lund. Then grand reconciliation between husband and wife. The villian, Harry Hertz, is foiled again. Tableau.

Curtain.

A Close Call.

She—Were you ever married?

He—No; but I was once engaged to a Sacramento girl.

Over the Demi-Tasse

They are smiling arouud the club-rooms over a practical joke recently perpetrated upon the Bohemian, Julian Thorne. He doesn't join the smile because he doesn't see the joke. It is still a serious matter with him.

It began in a law office down town—no matter whose. The young attorneys pretend a friendship for Thorne which the facts here presented do not warrant. Mr. Thorne may not know the full particulars of their devilment and it is as well not to involve him in more trouble.

One day a week or two ago Julian Thorne was served with a summons and complaint in criminal action, Superior Court, by a burly deputy sheriff. At least he looked like a deputy to Mr. Thorne. The complaint cited with the usual whereases and wherefores that Julian Thorne of the city and county of San Francisco aforesaid had on the 10th day of November or thereabouts committed an ungentlemanly assault upon the person of one Miss ——the name is omitted as she is a social belle—the complainant in this action. The exact nature of the assault was so successfuliy buried under legal verbiage that Thorne was not sure but he might be guilty. He had perhaps kissed the girl—he could not remember these trifles. But he never expected it to be taken seriously.

The summons stated that Julian Thorne, as aforesaid, must appear before Judge Dunne and answer to the charge on December 3d, and that failing so to do, the most severe consequences would result.

Naturally, Julian Thorne was much disturbed by this sudden legal trouble and he at once went to an attorney for advice. As the lawyer was a party to the joke, the matter grew no less serious under his handling and Thorne's state of mind can be imagined. "Keep away from the newspaper reporters," said the attorney. "Tell them nothing—absolutely nothing. Refer them to me and I will see that this thing is kept out of the papers."

Every one of the newspaper men that could be reached was sent to Thorne. "He has a good story up his sleeve," the reporters were told, "but he is very reticent in regard to it. You will have to pump him hard but he will give up if you persevere. I know the story but am sworn to secrecy. No, not a word—not even a hint; I have promised. Get it from Thorne."

For the next few days Thorne's life was spent in struggles with inquisitive representatives of the press. No man can come through such a contest without dropping some clues, and the reporters soon patched enough together to know that Thorne was in legal difficulties over some woman. They had not enough to print but they could make Thorne's life miserable, and they did.

This has been going on ever since and Thorne has been losing sleep nights worrying over the outcome of the case and spending long daylight hours in consultation with his attorneys. Next Monday the boys are expecting him to appear before Judge Dunne and they are awaiting the time to explode the laugh. Thorne's attorney's efforts for a continuance at his client's request have been unsuccessful. The insti gators of the affair have issued cards.

May Sing on the Operatic Stage. The ex-husband of Amy Crocker, Harry Gillig, is in town. This is his first visit to San Francisco since the divorce in New York, and he is kept busy explaining to his many friends the whys and wherefores thereof. Mr. Gillig is thinking seriously of the operatic stage as a future light industry and has taken to theatrical study. He had a very fair voice in the old days before he became the husband of Miss Crocker.

Blew in with the Storm. There was a heavy spender in town last week and he was not properly taken care of. C. W. Clark blew in during the storm and C. W. Clark is the man who handled the checkbook of his father, W. A. Clark, for a few days senator from Montana, during the famous campaign. A man with his capabilities in the political-financial line should never be allowed to get out of the city.

Defends Amateur Sports. The Alameda Argus takes up the defense of the amateur oarsmen in and about San Francisco in the following sledge-hammer way:

Says Caspar Whitney, editor of Outing: "Around San Francisco rowing stands alone in showing no upward tendency. Its ranks are still filled with a squabbling, semi-professional, Sunday-racing crowd, although I hasten to add that it also includes oarsmen who are amateur at heart, despite their associations. California needs a strong governing association with an executive committee of amateur spirit and undaunted courage."

This is not the result of personal observation on the part of Mr. Whitney, as he has not been in California for some years. It is possible that such conditions prevailed at the time of his visit. We do not know to the contrary. It may be that some "authority" has thus presented the situation to him. However, be that as it may, it is false. It is not a true statement of the condition of affairs, and being untrue, it is a slander that should not pass unnoticed.

It is true that rowing stands alone but not in the manner that Mr. Whitney would have it. It is the one sport that has shown a decided and marked upward tendency. Its ranks are not filled with a "squabbling, semi-professional, Sunday-racing crowd." It does not need a "strong governing association." What can be stronger than the Amateur Athletic Union, which has jurisdiction over rowing around San Francisco? Does he know this? Is he aware of the fact that the Olympic Club, which he says by its reformation has cleansed athletics in California, is a prime mover in the Pacific Association of the A. A. U. and its captain is vice-president? Does he know that the registration law is most rigidly enforced and none are permitted to enter regattas unless they have certificates of registration? Does he know that these certificates are issued by the registration committee of the A. A. U.?

We are free to say that the amateur laws are more rigidly enforced over rowing than any other sport in the state.

Take the case of a rower of the local club for instance. One of its leading and popular members had developed into considerable of a sculler. He aspired to championship honors and applied for registration that he might enter the championship regatta. The registration committee rejected the application. Why? A year ago he had transgressed the amateur law. He boxed for money. Do semi-professionals reject on such pretenses? Take the case of Bob McArthur of San Francisco. He could not secure a certificate because he had taken part in a semi-professional boxing tournament. The ranks have been purged of the semi-professionals. They are filled with young men—amateurs at heart and in spirit who compete for medals.

If they had a few Pacific Associations in the East, there would be no Rumohr or Ten Eyck persons to haggle over Grocers Will Give No Presents. The iron hoof of monopoly has once more come down with a stamp, grinding the poor man who works beneath its heel. The following sign, which may already be seen in some of the city's stores, explains itself:

$100 FINE will be imposed upon any grocer giving CHRISTMAS PRESENTS to his customers during the holidays.

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

Now how about that pretty litho-chromo, "When Beauty Wakes," that you has planned to give your wife from your grocery account? And the bread and milk set in imitation delft ware for the boy? They are hopeless now and you will have to go down in your pocket for presents this year.

The Leak Closed. A choice scandal has been so narrowly averted in San Jose that the people of that wide-awake little city are wondering how they slipped up on it. It was coming in tiny whispers, working gradually through the term of stage asides to the termination of a wild shriek, when suddenly it all ceased. The leak had been closed and so tightly that not a word has since come out.

A prominent San Josean—prominent in both business and social circles—has a wife who has held that not especially enviable position for over twenty-five years. There are grown-up children, the eldest, a girl, being married.

Nearly four years ago the prominent San Josean was in the courts as defendant in a suit for divorce which was afterwards arranged and dropped. The complaint alleged cruelty and said that the defendant had frequently "knocked her down, kicked her and threatened to kill her, and she was in constant fear of violent bodily injury." It cited instances of abuse and told how the husband and father had turned his daughter from his house, claiming that she was wanting in chastity and must henceforth "rustle for herself."

Several weeks ago the spouse of this prominent citizen was taken ill and gradually failed in health. The daughter was at last sent for by her mother. She came to San Jose and shortly stories began to be whispered. She had discovered something queer about the medicines. There was arsenic—some said strychnine—in minute quantities in doses that properly should not contain such poison. These medicines she quietly changed for harmless remedies and bundled them all to a San Jose chemist for analysis. And she changed the physician who attended her mother. The old one had been tried for murder once. He was acquitted because the evidence showed a mistake had been made in the medicines.

The chemist did not make the analysis. He says that he did not have the necessary apparatus and that he advised that the powders be sent to Dr. Price or Dr. Wenzell in San Francisco. He made a few preliminary tests, but he is a cautious German and is not anxious to mix up in a lively scandal. What he discovered he does not tell.

Here gossip stops. Dr. Price and Dr. Wenzell will neither one admit that they made the analysis. The only one who really knows is the daughter and she will not tell. Her mother will not continue marital relations with the prominent San Josean.

Of course there is another lady in the story. Equally of course the prominent citizen is said to be in love with her and desirous of making her his wife. She is a widow and she is handsome.

Will Respect the Law in Future.

Judge Hebard has enforced the respect due the law and its administrators in a manner which the people admire. There are times when the strong hand must be shown in order that the attorney with a surplus of self importance and a great lack of common sense, may not presume too far.

Last Tuesday Judge Hebbard found Attorney A. M. Armstroug guilty of contempt of court in filing an offensive and unfair affidavit, and promptly sentenced him to five days in jail. It was the second case of contempt during the proceedings and in both instances Judge Hebbard has dealt out punishment swiftly and fairly.

A Shotgun Borrow.

One of the most peculiar law suits in recent years is that of the very eccentric Senator-editor Charles M. Shortridge of the San Jose Herald who is suing an individual of that city for $1000 which it is claimed he promised to loan Mr. Shortridge. This forcing a borrow at the muzzle of a law suit is a brand new idea and carries out Mr. Shortridge's frequently expressed statement that he is original.

No Nolans in the Court.

The Chronicle hints strongly at irregularities in the proceedure of the Nolan divorce case before Judge Bahrs.

"This is the only divorce case known of at the City Hall" says that paper, "in which the plaintiff has not been required to appear in court. The proceedings in the suit, beginning with the sealing up of the papers in it by Judge Bahrs' order,have been regarded as peculiar"

This peculiarity may be the result of the "closed door" which sometimes cause a newspaper reporter to see things in a harsh light, especially if he has been expecting choice copy out of the case. There are, however, certain other matters in this peculiar case which are queer. In the first place neither of the parties to the suit will talk. Think of it? A divorce case where neither plaintiff nor defendant is anxious to rush their whole life's story into print? It is an almost unknown instance.

A representative of the Wave went out to see the pretty Mrs. Nolan when the complaint was first filed. She was living with her brother Jimmie Treadwell, at Santa Clara, and she came to the door of the cottage —it was quite late at night—in a pink Kimosha and carrying a candle. She was a picture and a beautiful one, but she did not allow the Wave man's eyes to linger on it. When he stated his reasons for calling, which, by the by, were to discover the real reasons for the suit, she flipped out of sight with a hurried "nothing to say."

Joe Nolan, too, was tongue-tied when the question was popped at him. He had not read the complaint or had not noticed what had been said of him. He was apparently as much at sea about the case as any of the newspaper men.

There was a story published in the Call a week or so after the complaint was filed that the Nolan's had decided to forgive and forget, and were beginning life anew at the Golden Gate avenue residence. How much of this was true is not known, although the fact of a decree having been granted and Mrs. Nolans statement that she is again "heart whole and fancy free" would lead one to believe that the Call had run in a little imaginary material. But you can't tell when Maude Nolan, now Treadwell, is the issue. It might all be true and still not be impossible.

Mrs. Nolan's few months in Santa Clara were quiet ones and there was no gossip in that little town regarding her. The days of her hilarity have been forgotten in San Jose and the story of her non-nuptial supper at the St. James hotel is still one of the favorite morsels at the clubs.

J. Marion Brooks Tries Blackmail.

When law partners fall out, look for disclosures. The recent rupture in the firm of Montano & Brooks of Los Angeles is making newspaper copy the length of the Coast. Brooks is having the best of it, up to date, because he talked first. He accuses Montano of misappropriating funds of the co-partnership and with having lived in the Philippines with a stenographer whom he introduced as his wife, while his family were in a destitute condition in Los Angeles.

In regard to these charges Montano says:

"Brooks has hounded and blackmailed me persistently for months. I have tried to do right, to succeed and make a reputation for myself over there, but they have clung to me like leeches. Not content with blackmailing me, Brooks has dragged in the name of Miss Maud Hinton, who went to Manila to earn an honest livelihood as a stenographer. A man who will bring a reputable young woman's name in a business dispute is a menace to the community."

There are a few incidents in the last few months of J. Marion Brooks' life that have never been published. He was in San Jose as attorney for Jack Ortega, charged with and convicted of the blackest of crimes against a seven year old girl. During the hearing of the case, Brooks was arrested for uttering fictitious checks, but the matter was hushed up. Before he left San Jose, he attempted to seduce and take away to the Philippines a sixteen-year-old girl, the daughter by adoption of the landlady of the lodging-house where he was stopping. He used every blandishment in his power and might have been successful if the mother had not learned of his despicable attempt.

This affair came to the notice of the police, but the mother refused to prosecute and in consequence no arrest was made.

When these things are taken into consideration, Judge Montano's statements should be believed and no credence given to Brook's black-mailing utterances.

"Miss Hinton," says Judge Montano, "did not go under my name in Hongkong, and I never introduced her in Manilla to any army or navy officers as Mrs. Montano. I have driven with her on the Duneta, it is true. If she gave the name of Mrs. Montano on the returning transport I do not know of it.

"Brooks has written two letters to Miss Hinton threatening to publish the fact of her acquaintance with me if I did not give him money."

The Second Grau Company.

It will be news to some that a second Grau Opera Company, with Miss Kate Michelena as the prima donna assoluta and Joseph W. Smith as tenore primo, is singing "The Little Tycoon" and other classic works for the delectation of Seattle folk. Can it be that Mr. Grau, not content with the sole directorship of the operatic congress of all nations, and a joint interest in the Metropolitan English Opera Co., has brought into being a third aggregation to sing "The Little Tycoon" and "The Isle of Champagne" to the woolly West? Anyway, here is what the Seattle Times printed in its issue of Nov. 7:

That the Grau Opera Company has made a decided hit with the Seattle public was in great evidence last night. The Seattle Theatre was packed to the doors. "The Little Tycoon" was the opera and was well rendered. It is not as pleasing or meritorious an opera as "The Isle of Champagne" or "El Capitan," but in the hands of so capable a company as Grau's it was hugely pleasing to every one. Miss Kate Michelena was a charming Violet and her sweet fresh voice fairly captivated the large audience. Mr. Joseph W. Smith is a tenor of superior voice and one can not hear or see him too much.

Miss Ada Rehan is coming back to America. She has been over in England this summer, but has been seen by very few friends, as she spent her time quietly in a little iron bungalow on the coast of Cumberland. This lonely home is set up on some land belonging to Lord Muncaster, whose seat, Muncaster Castle, is only a few miles off. Miss Rehan spends her days very peacefully in Cumberland. She bathes from a little private hut on the beach, strolls on the wide sand banks accompanied by her two little dogs, about as big as rats, and bicycles along the edge of the sea towards the neighboring village of Ravenglass. Sometimes, towards sunset, she may be seen sitting on a small green bench that faces the flat rocks, rehearsing a new part to an audience of wheeling seagulls, while the Isle of Man grows purple in the distance, and far off a faint vision of Scotch hills fades away into the shadows of the night.

Buncoed Melba.

Grand opera has never received the warm welcome of well filled houses in San Francisco. The box-office, the only test of the people's pleasure, has this season remained at a mark away below zero. The past week has shown a decided improvement in the attendance,and some nights the house has been filled but there is still much to be asked. Mr. Grau is discouraged and he can not be blamed.

The rich owe to themselves and to the community in which they reside the pleasant task of patronizing to the limit of their willingness these higher, more expensive forms of culture and amusement. The poor may desire but can not afford. To the rich must the people look, and the managers appeal for the support necessary in bringing these high grade attractions and civilizing influences to the coast.

All this introductory to a trifling tale. One night last week Melba sang to a not over large audience scattered about the great auditorium of the Grand. In that audience were two San Francisco young men, Seward and Fred McNear, whose incomes are larger than nine out of ten of this city's wealthy men. They are the sons of George W. McNear, shipping and commission merchant, grain dealer, president Port Costa Warehouse and Dock Company, proprietor Port Costa flouring mills, Pacific Coast agent of the Marine Insurance Company (Limited) of London and the Merchants' Insurance Company of Newark; so the directory says.

They sat near the stage in seats scheduled at $7 per. They enjoyed the ecstatic music; they luxuriated in the crystal tones of Melba's voice; but keener than the joy of all this harmony of sweet sounds was the thought that they had buncoed the Grau management out of ten dollars. They had paid but for standing room—two dollars apiece.

Many a man and many a woman in San Francisco during the past few weeks has foregone the common luxuries, has given up almost necessities, to hear these greatest of singers who have ventured into the frigid regions of the coast. They have paid what they could afford and even more to see and hear, and in the full of their ability have advanced the cause of the best in music in San Francisco. What must they think of young men like these two, with money to throw away on their every whim, who buy standing room and then steal their seats.

THE TIVOLI COMPANY CHORUS IN "THE JOLLY MUSKETEER."

Dramatic

Miss Zeffie Tilbury, who plays Mrs. Ingram so sweetly in "Auld Lang Syne" at a London theatre tells a capital story of her touring days in New England. The company arrived at a quiet, slow little town with a small, so-called Opera House. The manager found the stage carpenters and staff consisted of one long-visaged, cool New Englander, who proceeded to show him over the place. After looking at the small stage, they turned into a large, bare room behind the scenes. "Now, where do the gentleman dress?" said the manager. "Here!" was the brief reply. "Oh! Where do the ladies dress?" "Here!" was the second rejoinder. "My good fellow," exclaimed the manager, "if the ladies dress here, then where did I understand you to say the gentlemen dress?" "Here!" for the third time. "But that won't do at all!" protested the astonished manager. "Why not?" said the cool new Englander, "Don't they speak?"

On another occasion Miss Tilbury was playing Juliet in an "oil lamp theatre." During the scene of the dance in Capulet's house, the second row of the oil lamps, over the center of the stage, slowly flickered out. As Juliet continued dancing, in the semi-darkness, she saw to her horror a man in his shirt sleeves amble on at the back, with a long pole in his hand, to re-light the lamps. "What are you doing?" asked Juliet in a loud stage whisper. "Go off, can't you?" muttered Mercutio. But the man in his shirt sleeves only edged more and more into full view of the audience. "Get out!" said Romeo as loudly as he dared. The man with the pole turned round at that and indignantly exclaimed: "Say! I ain't goin' to have 'em stink!"

Mrs. Fiske's itinerary on her way to the West is taking her through several college towns, in which thus far, as in other cities in which she appears, she plays to crowded houses. But beyond this fact there is something peculiarly significant that marks her advent in the seats of learning. In Northampton, Mass., the seat of Smith College, one of the most prominent of women's colleges, and one, too, that has shown an exceptional love for the better drama by elaborate Shakespeare productions in which its pupils have figured, it is said that a thousand of the twelve hundred students attended the Academy of Music to greet Mrs. Fiske in "Becky Sharp" As this remarkable bevy of young women filed into the theatre, all in evening dress, it was seen that many carried copies of "Vanity Fair," to which attention was directed until the play began. Most of these young women, after enjoyment of the play, were intent upon getting copies of one of Mrs. Fiske's artistic posters that have attracted the attention of poster collectors this season.

In Poughkeepsie, the seat of Vassar College, the entire balcony of the theatre was given up to the students of that institution, and in the language of one spectator, that part of the house "looked like a flower garden." In Schenectady, the Union College city, and at Ithaca, the seat of Cornell, a like lively interest has been shown in Mrs. Fiske's appearance, and the young men of these institutions have been as persistent in their efforts to get posters of Mrs. Fiske as were the young women in the other towns. In all these places "Becky Sharp" has been hailed as a treat, owing no doubt to its pronounced literary flavor as well as its dramatic quality.

Mrs. Fiske's engagement in Rochester is notable for several reasons. There she was booked in a vaudeville theatre, the prices of which for her engagement were raised to correspond with those of a first-class house. On the first day of the sale for the engagement, in spite of a snow storm, a crowd of people awaited the opening of the box-office, and the first day's "take" amounted to over $2,000. It is needless to add that Mrs. Fiske's engagement in Rochester offers another proof of the fact "prosperity follows the flag" of a great player the conduct of whose business is independent of any syndicate dictation, no matter where that may be planted.

Lulu Glaser's New York opening in "Sweet Anne Page" occurs at the Manhattan Theatre December 3. She personates the merriest tom-boy in "Merry England," and among the characters which she assumes are a queen of the May, a pierrot, a Spanish dancing girl and a fisher maiden.

"The Burgomaster," a blending of musical comedy and extravaganza that is very successful in the West, is to be given a New York production at the Manhattan at holiday time. A special company is being organized and six Chicago artists are at work upon the scenic equipment.

"Way Down East" is being interpreted throughout the country by three companies of equal cost and merit, and the scenic outfit, snow-storm effects and farm-yard outfit are precisely identical.

Sansone and Delilah, billed for this week at the Orpheum were among the wounded in the "Owl" train wreck. They are at the Hotel Langham recovering from some severe bruises and will probably be seen here a little later on.

Haverley's Minstrels at the California have proven a strong drawing card and have given, undoubtedly, the best in the line seen in Ssn Francisco this season.

The Wave's Favorites.

ALICE NIELSEN.

She wears a dainty peasant gown
And little shoes of wood;
But she couldn't milk a gentle cow,
And wouldn't if she could.
She can act and dance divinely
And sing our hearts away:
She's the same sweet Alice Nielsen
That lived across the bay.

Clyde Fitch's play "Nathan Hale" will soon be sent out with the original production as seen during its run at the Knickerbocker Theatre here. Howard Kyle, one of the best known of leading men and Miss Nannette Comstock, who has supported several of our prominent stars, are to be "featured" as Nathan Hale and Alice Adams. The tour is to be under the direction of W. M. Wilkison and will probably open in New London, Conn., where the opening scene of this play is laid.

Last week Olga Nethersole inaugurated her sixth American season at Wallack's Theatre. The event proved to be not only a dramatic but a thoroughly social affair. There were representatives of the professions, art and literature present to give the distinguished English actress a very hearty send off on her new American tour. Sappho was reproduced by the actress and it was conceded that it had never been so powerfully played as on this occasion. Miss Nethersole, always intense, seemed, if it were possible, stronger and more emotionable than ever. She was greeted at the end of each act with tumultuous applause and at the end of the third act there were no less than nine curtain calls. The actress after her great scene with Jean, seemed almost exhausted, but notwithstanding this the audience demanded her to appear before them again and again and would not be satisfied until she responded with a speech.

A number of prominent theatrical men were discussing, in a certain New York club, one day last week, the probable earnings of a few of the more important theatrical managers for the season of 1900 and 1901. Of the six or seven, which comprise the foremost list, the following was the result: Charles Frohman, $300,000; Wm. A. Brady, $280,000; Klaw & Erlanger, $275,000; Jacob Litt, $260,000; Liebler & Co., $230,000, and the firm known as the "Syndicate," $500,000. This is exclusive of twenty to twenty-five managers who will earn all the way from $25,000 to $40,000.

Miss Grace George began the seventh week of her engagement at the Manhatten Theatre in J. I. C. Clark's romantic comedy, "Her Majesty," last Monday night. Both star and play have been received with more enthusiasm than is usually seen in a New York Theatre. That Miss George has carried the feminine heart by storm has been attested by the audiences which are made up almost exclusively of ladies. It is not an uncommon occurrence for her to receive from twelve to fifteen curtain calls. Miss George has been taken up by the "Blue" society of New York and bids fair to remain a permanent attraction at the Manhattan Theatre.

Peter F. Dailey in "Hodge, Podge & Co." will make a long run at the Madison-Square Theatre. The house is packed at every performance. The audiences greatly enjoy his curtain speeches. When he first opened his run in New York he used to tell the audience to go out between acts and surprise him by buying him a diamond ring. Last week he came before the curtain and ended his remarks with his usual lines about the ring. Just as he said this, a package was thrown on the stage. He picked it up but did not open it until he reached his dressing room. It contained not one, but four diamond rings. Dailey, since then, has not said a word about diamonds rings before the curtain. They came too fast for him.

Miss Maud Jeffries as Mariamne, in Beerbohm Trees' production of "Herod" at Her Majesty's Theatre, London, does not wear her own dark hair, but long, heavy tresses of burning red-gold. Her dress in the first act is wonderful to see—a mingling of golden tissue, faint rainbow tints, purple silk and richest embroidery of gold and vivid green. The whole play is magnificently staged and was greeted on the first night by prolonged applause. The far, dim pillars, the half circle of wide, gilded steps, the golden

MISS MAUD WILLIAMS,
The Tivolis New Soprano.

throne, and the great stretch of landscape beyond the City of Jerusalem, is a fitting frame for the figure of Herod, in his flowing robes of deep purple, green and turquoise blue, bright with jewels and glittering with gold.

At the Orpheum.

The Orpheum's new bill should be one of the best offered in some time. The head-liner will be Patrice who, with her own company, will present George Totten Smith's fairy idyl, "The Girl in the Moon." The scenery used in this act has been specially painted for this engagement by an eminent New York scenic artist. Patrice is one of the most notable figures in vaudeville and bound to please Orpheum patrons who have seen her before. Robertus and Wilfredo are equilibrists and jugglers. They come direct from Europe and are said to have an extremely entertaining act. May de Sousa is a songstress of note and comes from the East fresh from recent triumphs. The Pantzer Trio, assisted by Mrs. Carl Pantzer will present their new comedy acrobatic act, "A Gymnast's Parlor Amusements." Hart and Broom are eccentric comiques. Among the holdovers will be:—Julius P. Witmark, Dupont and Lothiam, Mallory Brothers and Brooks and Anna Kenwick.

At the Tivoli.

"The Jolly Musketeer" at the Tivoli Opera House continues to attract crowded houses, and will continue in the bill for next week. Thursday night the students of the University of California attended the theatre in a body and a special performance was given by the college boys with the aid of the second act of the "Musketeer" by the Tivoli company. The theatre was crowded to the doors.

The rehearsals for the Christmas production, "Cinderella" are under active headway, and the elaborate ballets and scenic effects will eclipse any previous effort in this line.

The Alcazar has presented "Seven-twenty-eight," during the past week in a manner very creditable to the company.

Perish the Thought!

When I asked her to wait
She declared that she wouldn't;
She scorned such a fate
When I asked her to wait,
She's not wed up to date—
Can it be that she couldn't?
When I asked her to wait
She declared that she wouldn't.

S. G. C., in Smart Set

"She's teaching me to dance," he explained.
"And how far have you progressed?"
"I've learned where to put my arm."
"How long has she been giving you lessons?"
"Oh, a little over six weeks."

THE PANTZER TRIO, ASSISTED BY MRS. CARL PANTZER, AT THE ORPHEUM.

FEMME INCOMPRISE.

A STUDY FROM LIFE.

It had been a hard struggle; but she had conquered.

He stood there, convinced at last that he was very, very wicked, while she, in triumphant womanhood, declared:

"A woman's lips are for her husband alone."

He moved to the door, not trusting himself to face the good in those dreamily mystic eyes, now imperiously seeking his.

How happy she was! How supremely, spiritually happy! She was his good angel; she had saved him; all would now be well.

"Good-bye!" he said. as if his words were an adieu to the work.

"Good-bye!"

Her voice wavered slightly.

"Thanks, awfully," he said sadly. "You've made a new man of me. You've pointed out the one right way. . . . I'm going now."

She flashed a strange look at him—surprise, satisfaction, fear equally blended. . . . She wondered if he were only joking.

"Stay one moment," she said, with her most insidious winsomeness. . . . "Have I really cured you?"

He bowed in answer, but did not speak.

"Suppose," she ventured, anxiously, "suppose I should change my mind and ask you to come back, promising to do as you wish? . . . Suppose I should tell you I love you? . . love you passionately? Suppose——"

She broke off in a husky whisper.

"Why don't you speak?" she asked, suddenly.

What was the meaning of his dead, set face? Was he turned to stone? No; he repeated mechanically the words:

"You have made a new man of me. You have pointed out the one right way. . . . I'm going now." He turned the door knob.

"Geoffrey, what have I done?" There was tragedy in her eyes and voice.

He opened the door.

"Geoffrey!" she screamed. "Geoffrey."

But her only answer was the diminishing sound of his footsteps as he passed down the hall.

N. Y. Town Topics.

To Lesbia.

Ah, Lesbia sweet, let us love in our day,
Let us toss to the winds the dry saws of the old;
Suns may wane and again rise and glitter for aye;
But when our little light is extinguished, untold
And unknown is the night
That shall end our delight,
One perpetual night to be slumbered away;
So let's love while we live dear, and live while we may.

Let us love! Life is short; wherefore kiss me, my sweet.
Yea, a thousand times kiss me, and add hundreds more,
Till a million of kisses our lips shall repeat,
And still many hundreds we'll add to the score;
And then at the end
The sweet numbers we'll blend
And confuse them, lest some jealous fool in his spite
Should tell the long list of our kisses to-night.

W. J. Lancaster.

Satisfactory.

"I thought for sure I was a goner last night. Col. Sblud caught me kissing his wife.

"Whew! How did you pacify him?"

"Told him it was an election bet,"

AITKEN'S STATUE "ART LURED BY BOHEMIA."

Her Dowry

From the French of Guy de Maupassant

No one felt any special surprise over the marriage of Monsieur Simon Lebrument and Mademoiselle Jeanne Cordier. Lebrument had just finished his law studies with Monsieur Papillon, who naturally expected his pay which was still to be raised, and Mlle. Jeanne Cordier was possessed of three hundred thousand francs in bank stock and bonds. Young Lebrument was a handsome fellow who had a certain style, that of a notary and even a provincial notary possibly, but still a style which was a rare possession at Bontiguy-le-Rebours. Mlle. Cordier had both grace and freshness, grace a thought too prim and freshness just touched with drought; but she was on the whole a fine girl, one to be desired and made much of. The betrothal ceremony turned all Bontiguy upside down. Great admiration was expressed for the pair who coyly hid their happiness under the conjugal roof, being resolved to take a little trip to Paris in the most unostentatious manner so soon as they had enjoyed a few days entirely tete-a-tete. Such charming days as these were, with no one to interupt their pleasure!

Monsieur Lebrument had the sense to exhibit in his first approaches an admirable delicacy and self-restraint. He had adopted the motto: "All things come to him who is willing to wait." He understood how to be both patient and passionate, and his success was swift and sure.

In four days time Madame Lebrument simply adored her husband. She could not do without him. She needed his presence, his touch. She was only content when he was caressing her, when his arms were about her and he was kissing her hands, her hair, her lips. Seating herself on his knees she softly caught him by the ears and whispered, childishly.

"Open your mouth and shut your eyes!"

He opened his mouth with perfect confidence, shut his eyes only half way, and suddenly received a kiss so long, so ardent, so tender, that it sent a shiver down his spine. And in return he could never have enough caresses from her lips; never enough of clasping hands, of clinging bodies, willing thus to cherish his wife from morning till night and from night till morning.

One day, as the first week drew to a close, he said to his young companion:

"If you wish we will leave for Paris next Tuesday. We will do like those lovers who are not married, and visit restaurants, theatres, concerts at the cafes—in fact everything everywhere."

She danced with joy.

"Oh, yes, yes! Let's go just as soon as possible,"

He answered: "Well then, as we should forget nothing we had better remind your father to have the dowry quite ready. I can take it along with us, and at the same time settle with my master, Papillon."

"I will tell him, myself, tomorrow morning," she promised instantly, and he caught her in his arms to begin anew the tender foolish toying which had become so dear to her in this short week.

The following Tuesday the father and mother-in-law accompanied their young people to the station to speed them on their way to the capital. Said the old gentleman:

"I declare, my son, it is a risky thing to carry so much money in your grip!"

But the young notary only laughed. "Don't worry yourself, father! I'm perfectly used to these things. You can readily understand that in my profession it sometimes happens that I have a million about me. By this method, at least, we avoid a lot of formality and delay. Don't you worry—it will be all right."

"She was only content when he was caressing her, when his arms were about her and he was kissing her hands, her hair, her lips."

Just then the guard called out, "Passengers all aboard for Paris!"

They flung themselves into a coach, already preempted by two old ladies, and Lebrument murmured close to his wife's ear.

"How tiresome! Now I can't have a smoke."

She whispered back, "It's just as annoying to me, but not on account of your cigar!"

The train whistled and drew out. The journey lasted one hour during which little was said because of the two wakeful old ladies. As soon as they were in the depot Saint-Lazare young Lebrument said to his wife:

"If you like, darling, we will first go and breakfast on the boulevard, then we can return at our ease to hunt up our trunk and take it to the hotel."

She immediately consented.

"Why yes, let us go to the restaurant by a means. Is it far?"

He returned carlessly, "Oh, rather far, but we will take an omnibus."

She looked her astonishment.

"But why don't we take a cab?"

He answered teasingly, between smiles and chiding.

"Is that your idea of economy? A cab for a five-minutes drive—six sous a minute! You surely don't intend to deny yourself anything!"

"That's a fact," she acknowledged with confusion.

A large omnibus appeared, drawn at a brisk trot by three horses. Lebrument crled, "Conductor! Hey, conductor!"

The heavy vehicle stopped and the young notary, pushing his wife ahead, said rapidly,

"Get up inside, dear, but I'll climb above and have time to smoke at least a cigarette before breakfast."

She had not a minute to reply. The conductor, who had grasped her arm to help her up the steps, hustled her inside where she fell breathless upon the seat, gazing in a sort of a stupor through the rear window at the vanishing feet of her husband scrambling up to the roof. She sat wedged in between a fat man, who was redolent of his pipe, and an old woman equally suggestive of her dog. All the other passengers were lined up in mute stillness—a grocers' boy, a laborer, an infantry sergeant, a fine gentleman with gold eyeglasses and a silk hat, its enormous brim hollowed out like a gutter; two dames, grim and important, whose manner seemed to say, "We are here, but are worthy of better things"—two good sisters, a bearded girl, and an undertaker.

All had the air of being on parade as a caricature collection, a museum of freaks, or as those comical guys set up on wires to be shot at in country fairs.

The jerky vehicle set their heads to wagging and shook their flabby cheeks, while the uneveness of the streets bumped them to and fro, till they seemed idiotic and stupid. The young girl sat in utter silence frozen, inert.

"Why didn't he come with me?" The thoughts oppressed with a vague sadness. "He might for once have, I think, done without his cigarette."

The good Sisters made signs to stop the conveyance, then went softly out, one close behind the other, exhaling a faint odor of old petticoats. They rumbled on once more, only to stop again. This time a cook climbed in, red and wheezing. She sat down solidly, and rested a basket of provisions on her fat knees. A strong odor of dish-water filled the omnibus.

"It is farther than I could have believed!" thought poor Jeanne.

The undertaker went down and out next, to be replaced by a coachman who smelled of the stable. The girl with the beard was succeeded by a commissioner whose dusty feet exhaled the perfume of the highway. The notary's little wife felt ill at ease, heart-sore, ready to weep without knowing why. Others climbed out and in. The omnibus seemed to be always threading interminable streets, stopping at

Continued on page 13.

BOHEMIAN DAYS IN SAN FRANCISCO—A HUMEROUS STORY IN THE STUDIO.

Olga Nethersole

Who is still playing "Sapho" in New York regardless of criticism having opened her sixth season at Wallack's Theatre with this much abused play.

Photographs by Reutlinger, Paris, just received by the Columbia Theatre Management where Miss Nethersole will appear early in 1901.

New York Letter.

New York, Nov. 25:

Howard Gould has had his bad half hour—and more. These times come to the men of millions as well as to the poor and lowly, and they of course receive greater notoriety on account of the prominence that money gives.

When Mr. Gould took the witness stand in Justice Giegericho's Court in his own defence against the action of Frank D. Mowbray to recover $25,000 for alleged breach of contract to employ him for life as valet, he was nervous and balked hard at some of the searching questions of Attorney Severance, designed to pry into the deepest secrets of his private life.

Referring to the discharge of Mowbray at St. Petersburg where Mr. Gould and Miss Clemmons were at anchor in the Gould yacht Mr. Severance asked:

Q. Was any woman other than Miss Clemmons aboard the yacht that night? A. No.

Q. Was any other male in the party? A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any ladies' maid? A. No, sir.

Q. Now Mr. Gould you were seated with Miss Clemmons in what is known as "social hall" on the yacht, were you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you been drinking? A. I do not remember, I may have been.

Q. Did Miss Clemmons say anything when Mowbray entered, as you say, only partly dressed and his hair disheveled, blear-eyed and red-faced? A. She did not.

Q. Not a word? A. Not a word.

At another point in the cross-examination Mr. Gould was asked:

Q. Did you know a woman named Odette Tyler or Bessie Kirkland? A. I did.

Q. How long did you know her? A. Three or four years prior to 1894.

Q. Do you remember that the plaintiff objected to serving as your valet while you were in company with that woman?

A. I do not.

Q. Will you swear that no such conversation ever took place between you and Mowbray? A. No, I will not swear that it did not, but I remember no such conversation.

Mowbray's testimony in rebuttal as to the reasons for his discharge is interesting as an explanation of the golden hair of the present Mrs. Howard Gould. "I was shampooing Mr. Gould's head," said Mowbray, "when Miss Clemmons said, 'Howard, I wish I had a shampoo.' Then, at the request of Mr. Gould I shampooed her hair, although I said I was not in the habit of shampooing women, but I could. Subsequent to that time Mr. Gould said to Miss Clemmons: 'Kate, your hair is growing darker. What's the matter?' She said: 'That hound Mowbray put something in the water when he shampooed me.'"

Q. Did Miss Clemmons use peroxide of hydrogen at that time?

The answer was ruled out by the Court and New York is still wondering what it would have been.

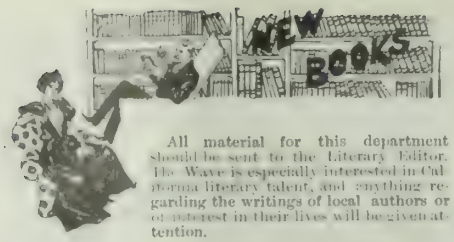
The interest that New Yorkers have taken in the divorce case of Alfred Kayne against the pretty little actress Atalie Clair deserves a more sensational denouement than the abrupt decree granted by Justice Dickey at Newburgh last week. The defendant failed to appear and make the contest that was expected and the large crowd of Court-room spectators was correspondingly depressed.

The plaintiff testified to his marriage and other witnesses testified to the scenes in the boarding house at 74 Madison avenue on the night of January 11 1899, when Atalie and the young New York lawyer, Abram H. Kaffenberg, were caught together. The plaintiff and his friend, Dr. Kane, took a room in the boarding house and according to Dr. Kane's evidence at about 7:30 in the morning they broke into Mrs. Kayne's bedroom and found her and Kaffenberg together. The defendant begged her husband to spare her life. After securing the evidence they left the house, taking the three-year-old child of Mrs. Kayne with them.

Mr. Bagley, who was a boarder at the house, corroborated Mr. Kayne's testimony, as also did Mrs. Brunn to some extent. The jury then took the case and in fifteen minutes adjudged the defendant guilty of adultery as charged and the plaintiff not guilty of the counter charges. The father was given the custody of his pretty boy.

Tom Davis, the well-known theatrical manager, formerly of Litt & Davis, has gone against the financial wall. His petition in bankruptcy shows his liabilities as $2,503, and no available assets.

He mentions in his schedules that he has books covering fourteen plays, among them being the following: "Have You Seen Smith?" "On the Bowery," "Sidewalks of New York," "Heart of the Klondike," "My Innocent Boy," "The Stowaway," and "The White Rat."



All material for this department should be sent to the Literary Editor. The Wave is especially interested in California literary talent, and anything regarding the writings of local authors or of interest in their lives will be given attention.

Found Him a Celebrity.

It is rare that a publisher takes up an unknown author, accepts his book, and then discovers that he is famous, but such was the case with "The Inn of the Silver Moon." The name of its author, Herman Knickerbocker Viele, carried no suggestion to the publisher's mind, which is apt to be too full of things literary to care for things scientific; and it was only after the book was in type that it was discovered that Mr. Viele is so distinguished a civil engineer as to have been entrusted with the enormous work of the extension of the City of Washington, which occupied six years and involved some millions of dollars. This and other things took so much time, in fact, that little was left for writing, and even the small amount of work of this kind that was done was subjected to such severe criticism by the author that he made no effort to publish it. "The Inn of the Silver Moon" is therefore his first book, but it is hardly probable that it will be his last. Mr. Viele has too many talents for one man, for he paints pictures that are hung in the Salamagundi Club, and he takes houses in Brittany, Holland and Touraine. His is a many-colored life, and a gay one. His brother, Francis Viele-Griffin, is the only Anglo-Saxon who has received the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor as a writer of French verse. He is famous as one of the symbolists, and his chateau is the rendezvous of the younger crowd of French writers, so Mr. Viele comes by the knowledge of French life displayed in his little romance most honestly.

Herbert S. Stone & Co., the publishers, were awarded a silver medal at Paris this year for their exhibit of commercial books—a fact which emphasizes again the distinction of this firm in the make-up of its books. The pioneer in the art of giving character to the covers of the ordinary novel, Mr. Stone has maintained his superiority against the competition which he inaugurated. No other books are so well dressed —as fittingly, as smartly—as his, and certainly none carry their clothes with such an air.

A Poet's Life.

Among the more important books issued this fall is "The Life of Edward Fitz-Gerald," by John Glyde, which is soon to appear from the press of Herbert S. Stone & Co. The book has the authorization and backing of the Omar Khayyam Club of London, and Edward Clodd, an ex-president of that organization, has written an introduction. The volume is designed as a definitive life of Fitz-Gerald, and all lovers of the Rubaiyat will welcome its appearance.

A Timely Book.

"Colonial Government" is the title and subject of a new book by Paul S. Reinsch, Assistant Professor of Political Science in the University of Wisconsin. It will be issued in the "Citizen's Library of Economics, Politics, and Sociology," which is under the general editorship of Professor Richard T. Ely, and published by the Macmillan Company. It is intended to make the work not only the most complete treatise extant on its subject but one which can also be used as a textbook in those universities which are giving courses in it. A pretty thorough piece of work may be expected from Professor Reinsch whose "World Politics" has met with such a cordial reception from students of modern political history.

Four Noteworthy Novels.

During the past two weeks the Macmillan Company has published four noteworthy novels. "In the Palace of the King" by F. Marion Crawford; "Richard Nay and Yea" by Maurice Hewlett; "Who Goes There?" by B. K. Benson, and "The Hosts of the Lord" by Flora Annie Steel. The first three ran into a second large edition the day of publication, and the fourth into a second edition within a week of issue.

He Could n't Happen Nowadays.

Mr. Dooley, in Harpers' Weekly, touches off the prevailing style of romantic novel in his usual humorous and witty manner. He is telling Mr. Hennessy of "Richard Carvel."

"Ye can see, Hinnissy, that this la-ad cudden't happen nowadays. He cudden't find th' horses nor th' s'ciety. But he was good thin. I won't undhertake to tell ye iv th' things he done in deetail to win th' heart iv th' lovely girl who was tellin' him that she loved him through a megaphone. He jined Paul Jones, an' sailed his ship acrost Scotland; he fought a dool a day, an' come to in th' ar-rms iv th' crool whose love he sought. Afther stickin' all th' nobility in England with a soord, he come home an' took charge iv the Rivolution, which he won in a canther. Thin he sought out th' woman he loved, an' she threw her ar-rms ar-round his neck, an' befure they cud be split out th' parson crept up behind him an' married thim. All these things he told to his gran'daughter, who set thim down with her own fair hand."

"His grandmother!" said Mr. Hennessy.

"No, his gran'daughter," said Mr. Dooley, "and she believed him."

"Thim things cudden't happen," said Mr. Hennessy.

"Anything cud happen that far back, whin they wore romantic clothes," said Mr Dooley.

The World's Discoverers.

Little, Brown and Company have just published "The World's Discoverers," by William Henry Johnson, author of "The King's Henchman." It includes only such voyages of discovery as were made with a view to finding a sea route to the Indies; and its purpose is to trace in outline the impulse which started early in the fifteenth century, with the awakening of Europe, and which has reached its final achievement in our own time. It is believed to be the only book, giving, as a whole, a connected account of the search for a route to the Indies.

A Book for Boys.

The out-of-door life depicted in "Gold Seeking on the Dalton Trail," a book for boys, by Arthur R. Thompson, makes the work noteworthy, though there is an added interest in the race of two exploring parties towards the gold fields. "Natural features, scenery, and people," says the author, "have been described faithfully, and the story throughout is based on real happenings."

Afterglow.

A dainty book of verse from the press of Charles Scribner's sons is "Afterglow," the later poems of Julia C. R. Dorr. Those who are familiar with "Afternoon Songs" and "Bermuda" by Mrs. Dorr will appreciate the present addition to her volumes. Her varses are sweet and have rhythm and poesy in their composition.

Book of Travels.

Among the Berbers of Algeria by Anthony Wilkin, (Cassell & Company) records and illusrrates the wanderings of two anthropologists amony the two great Berger tribes of modern Algeria—the Chawia and the Kabyles. The purely scientific results are not obtruded upon the notice of the reader, though many of the common occupations of the Berger's life, their arts and crafts, are described. Thns, the purely scientific reader will find plenty to interest him, and he is not so purely scientific will find little to tire or disgust. The book, in a word, is an account of travel among the descendants of an ancient race whose culture spread from one end of the Mediterranean to the other, in a country full of natural interest and beauty which the numerous illustrations are designed, so far as in them lies, to explain and exemplify.

In addition to the very numerous photographs there is a map showing the author's route and all the more important places mentioned in the text.

A New Rubaiyat.

The new edition of the "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam" (Little, Brown and Company), in addition to the renderings of Fitzgerald, Whinfield and McCarthy, contains Andrew Lang's poem, "To Omar Khayyam." The following is one of the eighteen quatrains:—

> "You were a Saint of unbeliving Days,
> Liking your Life and happy in Men's Praise;
> Enough for you the Shade beneath the Bough,
> Enough to watch the wild World go its Ways."

Magazines.

Wanamakers New Monthly.

The latest development in magazines is the entrance of the firm of John Wanamaker into the publisher's field. They will take over and publish, beginning with the December issue, Everybody's Magazine.. "We have set ourselves the task of building up in character and circalation an illustrated magazine of our own and of the best type" says the announcement. So radical a departure seems to call for some explanation; the statements made that the Wanamaker stores have become the largest sellers of books at retail in the country and that they deal with more readers directly than any other firm (the aggregate sales equalling or surpassing the sales of even the larger publishing houses) they think that a popular magazine belongs naturally to this organization. A highly attractive Christmas number is promised with contributions from James Whitcomb Riley, Miss Mary E. Wilkins, Charles Major, author of "When Knighthood was in Flower," Edwin Asa Dix of "Deacon Bradbury" fame and a novel serial by a new Southern woman writer of whom much is expected.

Of Interest to Clubmen.

Life members of the Olympic Club will be interested in the picture in the Cristmas number of Camera Craft, a reproduction of an india ink sketch made by Charles Nahl at the time the nucleus of the present institution was laid in the back yard of the artist. This picture is but one of a number of old sketches all of which will be reproduced in a monotone to correspond to the time of the original drawings. Other features of the Christmas number will be a three color reproduction of one of the best photographs ever made of "Wawona" the giant of the Mariposo grove. An article on "Photographing Children in Chinatown" by Dr. Arnold Genthe, is another interesting feature.

For Nineteen Hundred One.

The Atlantic Monthly has issued its forecast for 1901 and its promises are a surety that the coming volume will be better than ever before. In fiction, "Audrey" by Miss Mary Johnston, author of "To Have and To Hold," is the leader. Another historical novel promised is "The Tory Lover" by Miss Sarah Orne Jewett, and Kate Douglas Wiggin will publish the third and final group of the delightful Penelope papers, in "Penelope's Irish Experiences."

The most important group of papers is a series of studies of the Reconstruction Period contributed by Woodrow Wilson, Hilary A. Herbert, W. E. B. Du Bois, Daniel H. Chamberlain, William G. Brown, Thomas Nelson Page, Samuel W. McCall and William A. Dunning.

Mansfield's Elocution.

For the first time in Mr. Mansfield's career the principal New York critics joined cordially in commending his production of Henry V, although some of them carp more or less with reference to his fault as an elocutionist. But Mr. Mansfield is creating a great effect upon the public with his declamation of the numerous and varied speeches uttered by Henry, and he could not accomplish this end without a certain amount of art. Many do not seem to remember that the standards of elocution and declamation as applied to stage purpose have vastly changed within the last twenty years. Rignold's noisy, melodramatic method would not be tolerated today, and it is quite likely that audiences would now be profounnly distressed by the pompous oratory of Kemble, Macready or Junius Brutus Booth. King Henry V., measured by the speeches Shakespeare put into his mouth, was not a stump orator or a mouthing politician, but a thoughtful man valorous in deed,yet simple in manner and speech. This is the view Mr. Mansfield takes, and each of the speeches is uttered with glowing earnestness and manly sentiment, but not with the nerve-racking energy of a Bombastes Furioso.

GILBERT PARKER, the distinguished author, says a friend is a great lover of children, and all children love him. He will dress up as a robber chief to perfection, and look really splendid with his raven black hair, dark complexion, and big expressive eyes—in fact, when you look at him first you only see these large, biack, dreamy eyes. He can tell the most lovely bogey stories you ever heard; and then he plays snapdragon with you to make you not feel creepy before you go to bed, ending up with a fairy story, dainty and fascinating, and all made up on the spur of the moment. He is a brilliant conversationalist, but perhaps he is still more brilliant listener. He is one of the few men that I have met who have reduced listening to a science; it doesn't matter what you say, he is always absorbed in that particular subject. And that is, undoubtedly, a quality as rare as it is delightful.

The Richest Playwright.

The playwright with the largest income today is Edmond de Rostand. In Paris he has plays at two theatres,"L'Aiglon"—Sarah Bernhardt's, and "Cyrano de Bergerac" at the Porte Saint-Martin. His author's fees for July, a month in which the sweltering heat affected the run even of "L'Aiglon," exceeded £1,300. In August they rose to £1,800, and there is little doubt that from now on till Sarah Bernhardt closes her season M. Rostand will receive considerably more than £2,000 on the 10th of each month—the payday of French dramatists. In addition to the anthor's fees there are the seats given to the author for every performance, the sales of which brings in at least £120 a month. At a moderate estimate Rostand has made $400,000 since the first night of "Cyrano de Bergerac."

AN INVIDIOUS COMPLIMENT.—Beerbohm Tree was playing the part of Falstaff at the Haymarket Theatre in London, and the indispensable "stuffing" made him perspire profusely. Gilbert, the playright, going behind the scenes to see the actor, who may well have expected commendation on the excellence of his impersonation, said simply, "How well your skin acts, Mr. Tree!"

Her Dowry

Continued from page 9.

remote stations, then rumbling onward again.

"How far it is!" murmured Jeanne. "Is it possible he has forgotten himself—gone to sleep? He has had much to fatigue him these last few days."

One by one all the passengers left. She remained alone—all alone. The conductor bawled,

"Vaugirard!"

As she did not stir he repeated,

"Vaugirard!"

She looked at him, beginning to understand that this mysterious word was flung at herself,since she had no neighbors to appropriate it. The man bellowed for the third time,

"Vaugirard!"

Then she asked, "Where are we?"

He answered impatiently,

"We are at Vaugirard to be sure! Haven't I called it twenty times?"

"Is it far from the boulevard?" said she.

"What boulevard?"

"Why, the boulevard des Italiens."

"It's an age since we passed that!"

"Ah! Will you kindly inform my husband?"

"Your husband! Where is he?"

"On the roof, of course."

"On the roof! There hasn't been anybody up there for ever so long."

She made a terrified gesture.

"What is that? It is not possible! He boarded the omnibus with me. Look carefully—he must be there!"

The conductor was getting crosser every minute.

"Come, come, child 'nough said! For one man lost, ten can be found. Let him go! It is finished. You can pick up another in the streets."

The tears were in her eyes as she insisted,

"But, sir, you are mistaken—I assure you it's all a mistake! He had a large bill-case under his arm."

The man began to laugh.

"A large bill-case? Ah, yes, yes! He got off at the Madeleine. It's all the same; he was tired of you—ah, ha! ha!"

The vehicle was stopped. She climbed out and, in spite of herself, flung an instinctive glance upward to the roof. It was utterly deserted.

It was only then that she broke into uncontrollable weeping and, not caring who could see or hear, cried in anguish—

"Oh, what am I going to do?"

The bureau inspector approached her.

"What is all this?" he asked brusquely, and the conductor answered in a gruff voice:

"It's a woman whose husband has deserted her on the road."

"Well," said the former, "that is nothing. Go back to your duty," and he turned on his heel abruptly.

Left alone, Jeanne began an aimless walk. She was blinded by tears and too frightened and bewildered to even know where she was going. Where could she go? What could she do? What had happened to him?

Whoever had heard of such strange conduct, such forgetfulness, such indifference, such incredible abstraction and carelessness.

She had two francs in her pocket. To whom could she appeal? And suddenly came the remembrance of her cousin Barral, subchief on the Bureau of Marines.

She had just enough to pay a cab for that distance. She at once called one and was soon there, meeting him just as he was leaving for his diplomatic studies.

He carried, just as Lebrument had done, a large bill-case under his arm.

She flung herself from the carriage.

"Henry! Henry!" she cried.

He stopped, stupefied.

"Jeanne, here? All alone? What are you doing? Where did you come from?"

GLUTTONY

Is more common than we may think, if we define gluttony as eating beyond the body's need of sustenance and beyond the stomach's capacity for digestion and assimilation of food. That is a fair definition, and it fastens the name glutton on many a person who would resent the term as an insult. The fact of this gluttony is marked by its consequences. The overloaded stomach becomes diseased. The popular term for the condition is "weak" stomach. The "weak" stomach fails in furnishing adequate nutrition for the body, and soon the "weakness" spreads from the stomach to other organs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the perfect assimilation of food, by which alone the health and strength of the body is maintained.

"Your medicine helped me so much that I cannot praise it too highly," writes Mrs. C. L. Brooks, of Poland, Androscoggin Co., Me. "The first dose I took helped me. I cannot forget how I felt when I took it; I was suffering everything with indigestion, and my stomach was so bloated that it seemed as though it must burst. My husband said he was going for the doctor, but I said if he would get me a bottle of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' I would try that. I had not taken it long when I felt relieved, and have not had a touch of indigestion or stomach trouble since. I had been sick for four years, and less than four bottles cured me. Some people that knew me before I began to take the 'Golden Medical Discovery' tell me that they never saw such a change in any one, and they also say they don't see how I can do such large washings as I do now, when I had not done a washing for so long."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

Strength, Vitality, Manhood, THE CHIEF GLORY OF MAN.

KNOW THYSELF!

The Science of Life, or Self Preservation,

A Great Medical Book for Every Man—The Million Embossed cloth, full gilt, elegant Library edition, ONLY $1.00. In paper covers, ONLY 25c. Get the best. It contains 370 pp., with engravings, 125 prescriptions for Acute and Chronic Diseases, and is the Gold Medal Prize Treatise on Aptitude and Inaptitude for Wedded Happiness, Premature Decline, Nervous and Physical Debility, Exhausted Vitality, Manhood, Varicocele, Atrophy (wasting) and ALL DISEASES and WEAKNESSES OF MEN, from whatever cause arising. The distinguished author and Nervo specialist graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1864 and has been the Chief Consulting Physician to The Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch St. (opposite Revere House) Boston, Mass., during the past thirty years. Know Thyself Manual, a Vade Mecum Pamphlet, Free to every male reader of this paper; 6 cents for postage. Write for these books to-day. They are the keys to health, vigor, manhood and happiness. Address as above. Consultation by letter or in person from 9 to 6. Sundays 10 to 1. Expert treatment and positive cure.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute is a fixed fact in the medical phenomena of this country, and it will remain so.—Boston Journal.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute has many imitators, but no equals.—Boston Herald.

Sunset Limited

For the Season of 1900=1901

Tri=Weekly

Leave SAN FRANCISCO	Leave LOS ANGELES
Mondays	Tuesdays
Wednesdays	Thursdays
Fridays	Saturdays
5:00 P. M.	8:00 A. M.

ARRIVE NEW ORLEANS, 7:20 P. M. MONDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS.

MORE BRILLIANT THAN EVER
NEW EQUIPMENT
IMPROVED SERVICE

Secure Time Tables and any desired information from Any S. P. Co's Agent.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.
Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET
or at Santa Fe Ticket Office
Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters "Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable. Leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

Naber, Alfs & Brune, Agents,
325 Market Street S F Cal

With eyes drenched in tears she stammered forth,

"My husband has just disappeared."

"Disappeared? How is that?"

"On an omnibus."

"An omnibus? Oh-h!——"

And, bitterly weeping, she related her adventures. He listened thoughtfully, then asked:

"This morning how was his head? Was he quite calm?"

"Yes."

"Good! Had he much money with him?"

"Yes, he was carrying my dowry."

"Your dowry! The whole of it?"

"Every sou. He was going to pay for his legal education."

"Ah, indeed! Well, my dear little cousin, just about this time your husband is spinning along on the express for Belgium."

She did not yet comprehend, and brightened into hope.

"My husband—you say—"

"I say that he has swept up your—your whole capital—and that's the whole story!"

She stood like one stricken dumb and, half suffocating, murmured,

"Then he is—he is a scoundrel!"

After which, overcome with emotion, she fell upon the waistcoat of her cousin, shaken with sobs.

As passers-by were stopping to gaze curiously at them, he very gently pushed her under the deep doorway of his house where, supporting her with his arm around her waist, he led her up the stairs. As his astonished maid opened the door, he commanded,

"Sophie, run to the restaurant and order up a breakfast for two. I shall not go to the office today."

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt. 37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Sutter Street Hammam

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
[Phone Main 5178]
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell

FIGPRUNE CEREAL

A Perfect Food Beverage

54% Fruit
46% Grains
100 -
and nothing else

A Substitute for Coffee. Nourishing and Invigorating. YOUR GROCER SELLS IT.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Thomas Greene, Miss Grace Orr and Edward Webb of the Tivoli Company. This is not the way they appear in the "Jolly Musketeer" but is the result of a mixup in the Wave Art Department.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
For Brain Workers.

Strengthens the exhausted and confused brain, relieves nervous headache, and induces refreshing sleep.

Genuine bears name HORSFORD'S on wrapper.

Pears

obtained the only

Grand Prize

awarded solely for toilet soap at the Paris Exhibition, 1900.

This is the highest award obtainable for anything.

Pears' Soap has obtained 21 International awards.

Stylish Suits $15.50

Dressy Suits..... $20.00
Pants..... 4.50

My $25.00 Suits are the Best in America.

25 Per Cent Saved by getting your suit made by

JOE POHEIM
THE TAILOR
1110-1112 Market Street
201-203 Montgomery St., S.F.

SAMPLES SENT FREE

A TOILET NECESSITY

Wakelee's

Cold Cream of Roses

—MADE WITH—

Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss Stereo Binoculars The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power. Prices, $47.50 to $80.00.

Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.
OPTICIAN.
201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER
KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Cotton Sail Ducks Twenty two-inch, in all numbers, Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks, Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.

Murphy, Grant & Co

Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . .
Centrally Located . .
San Francisco, California

WM. B. HOOPER, - - MANAGER.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts.,
New York. . . . .
American and European Plan
WILLIAM T. BANG, Pro.

Electric Supplies

CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIRS
Cal. Electrical Works
409 MARKET STREET

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM For a Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave. Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home! BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., - - San Francisco

Thuringia Insurance Co.
OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000
Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S.F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO. General Agents.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Bank of California
SAN FRANCISCO

Capital $2,000,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits, Oct. 1, 1900 $3,514,068.82

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China; Australia and New Zealand. The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society
526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900 ..... 28,938,395.02

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary..... George Tourney
Assistant Secretary .....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker, H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union
532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900 .....$26,952,875
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.
Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

MUUUAL SAVINGS BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO
33 POST STREET
Below Kearny Mechanics' Institute Building

Guaranteed Capital $1,000,000
Paid Up Capital..... 300,000

James D. Phelan, President; S. G. Murphy, Vice-Pres.; John A. Hooper, Vice-Pres. George A. Story, Cashier; C. B. Hobson, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS:—James D. Phelan, S. G. Murphy, John A. Hooper, James Moffitt, Frank J. Sullivan, Robert McElroy, Chas. S. Neal, James McDonald.

Interest paid on deposits.

Loans on approved securities. Deposits may be sent by Postal Order, Wells, Fargo & Co. or Exchange on City Banks.

When opening accounts, send signature.

It will surprise you

All bright housewives say

Electro-Silicon

SILVER POLISH

is best in every way.

"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.,

TEL. 5610 609 Sacramento St

Arthur Roberts, who is a possible visitor to San Francisco during the coming season, has been for some years one of the popular low comedians of the London stage and in certain lines of burlesque has stood at the head of his profession. Less has been heard of him during recent seasons, although he is today ranked among the first of English comedians. He is now 50 years old and has been on the stage since he began his studies in a solicitor's office. Almost immediately after this time he went on the stage and for eight years served as an actor in small roles while following his regular duties as a clerk during the daytime. He was discovered at the end of that period. He has sung in comic opera and musical farce and was at one time about to come to this country to play in "Erminie," but the project fell through. He has managed his own theatre ike many London actors, and failed.

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

Famous for its Purity

Seattle, U. S. A

BYRON MAUZY PIANOS

308-312 POST STREET

SATISFACTORY TO THE EYE AND EA

SOHMER PIANO AGENCY

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

This brand of Wine is served at all first-class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU. Main office, 510 Montgomery Street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Page to be taken from the Library

The Wave

Volume 22. Number 38
December 8, 1900.

Published Every Saturday

Price 10 Cents

THE WAVE

Published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., Entered at the Post Office second-class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE COMPANY, PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—December 8, 1900

Proposed Primary Law and Party Organization.

The proximity of a sound, thoroughly honest and constitutional primary law brings to the front party reorganization. A primary at which people can vote will produce people that do vote, and the participation of the voter brings into being the party leader and retires the boss. Locally, the most violent changes in party organization must necessarily occur in the Republican party. The Democratic organization, although not popular, is at least decent, and it is difficult to see where its opposition is to come from. The croakers who are telling what they intend to do to upset the present Democratic system belong to the old guard which, although it may die, will never surrender as long as a hope of office is in sight. They are for the most part chronic squealers who have by past acts become utterly discredited. Their presence in any movement would add to their opponents the element which as opponents they now lack—popularity.

With the Republicans it is different. Nine-tenths of the Republican voters of this city are highly respectable men, having at heart the welfare of the city. But these nine-tenths have nothing to say regarding party management. The other tenth, composed largely of characters that are doubtful and of characters that are not doubtful at all, constitute the machine and nominate the people whom the other nine-tenths of the party feel it a civic duty not to support. It is a singular fact that among the rank and file of the Republican party, there is an absence of leadership and a scarcity of material of which leaders can be made.

The honest people lack experience and skill and the machine lacks honesty and even common decency. Thus it comes to pass that year after year the respectable Republicans of the town feel compelled to elect the Democratic ticket. This is an absurd state of things, and uuder a well-framed primary law it will cease to be excusable. San Francisco has just gone Republican by an overwhelming majority—it remains to be seen whether there is enough vitality and intelligence in its ranks to win another and a greater victory; to clear the party of polluted bosses and nominate and elect honest men to constitute our municipal government.

Tobin for Mayor.

A certain body of Democrats connected with the local administration are pressing Joseph Tobin to the front as a candidate for mayor, with the idea that Phelanism may thus be perpetuated for two years longer, it being understood that Mr. Tobin is entirely docile in the hands of the present mayor.

The theory is rapidly crystalizing into practice that only a rich man has a right to aspire to be mayor of San Francisco. If this be accepted as a fact, probably Joseph Tobin is as good as any of his kind. People would maybe prefer a man who had done something—a man whose fitness would be judged by American, rather than European models. But running the government on aristocratic lines and excluding poor and self-made men from the competition leaves Mr. Tobin well up in the running. As to his election that is another matter. He has numerous weaknesses. His regard for Mayor Phelan is such that he accepts that person's faults as virtues, and as mayor the unpopular features of the present administration would be maintained, and on sumptuary legislation and the saloon question he would be more undemocratic and meddlesome than Phelan. Then he belongs to the Burlingame association of snobs, is a distinguished figure where prominence among that class passes for distinction and among the vulgar and impudent rich more nearly approximates to being a man than the others. This association would be a weakness at the polls. To pride oneself on the assumed exclusiveness of one's company, and insist on superiority founded thereon, is to found advancement on minority as opposed to majority, and this is an objectionable policy to the people. Snobbery is offensive anywhere, but most so in the atmosphere of California which should be free from it. When the sons and daughters of the butcher, baker and candlestick maker flock together and proclaim themselves an aristocracy they furnish themselves amusement and the public laughter. But employing this sort of thing as a basis for political preferment is another phase of the subject.

Mr. Tobin has much to learn and to unlearn before he can be elected mayor. If the right stuff is in him he has time to make himself eligible. He certainly is a clean man and would give the city an honest administration.

Election at Los Angeles.

Los Angeles which less than a month ago gave McKinley an overwhelming majority has just elected M. P. Snyder, a Democrat mayor, casting for him over two thousand more votes than were received by his opponent,

Most of all the local Democratic ticket was elected. In this there is a lesson for the San Francisco administration.

When the Republican ticket won in Los Angeles two years since, the mayor then elected felt that he had been ordained by Heaven to regulate the affairs of everybody, but particularly to persecute saloon-keepers. The administration nose was inserted into everything, and enemies for the Republican organization created by wholesale.

Sumptuary laws are naturally resented by California, and the city of Los Angeles counted the days until she could free herself from unpopular and tyrannical government. The Democrats ran on a platform and policy opposed to general meddlesomeness, and have won handsomely.

Mayor Phelan ought to consider the lesson from Los Angeles and overhaul his commissions before the public decides that they must be abated as intolerable nuisances.

M. P. Snyder may be depended on to give Los Angeles a first-class business administration. He served a term as mayor once before and made a fine record.

Police Commission as Architects.

Poor old "Pop" Sullivan has had another job of explaining to do for the benefit of the Police Commission. This time the brilliant ruling was made that he should close one of his side doors, the one leading into the Grill Room and only have two entrances from that street. The first time they called the case up the Board resolved itself into an architectural commission and planned changes for the interior, such as the removal of curtains, the changing of entrances and a few other minor details. As usual in such great bodies a portion of them did not concur in the opinion, so they "passed the buck" for a future hearing. This time they have decided that there are too many doors to the place or else they desire to have all the patrons pass in through prescribed limits. So they have closed one entrance. There seems to be no reasonable solution for such a decision, as it certainly will affect the patronage in no manner, unless it may be that the front doors being broader will be patronized by men too fat to enter the more narrow portals. If the Hoffman is an objectionable place, why not shut it up entirely? If, as seems to be the opinion of every one except the Police Commission, it is an orderly resort, what is the use in assuming a gnat-like attitude and continuously buzzing in a truly insect way? Are there no greater evils to which this immaculate Board can turn its attentions? Are there no other so-called cafes in this city that require notice, remodeling, repainting, new signs and perhaps new bar-tenders? The Board has occasionally done good work. In could do more by being a little less namby-pamby.

Should be Made to Pay.

So Eugene Deuprey, the Assistant District Attorney went to jail for contempt of court, rather than pay his former wife, Florence L. Deuprey, alimony of $100 a month? Judge Daingerfield seems obdurate. What an amusing thing it must be to those who are on the inside of political affairs. At the time when he received his appointment the wheel within the wheel that always revolves in such cases was made to turn in the interest of his former wife, or at least there was supposed to be a tacit understanding to that effect. It was said at that time that Mrs Hearst, who was much interested in the welfare of Florence Deuprey, was in a large sense instrumental in his getting the appointment, because it would enable him from his salary of $300 a month to pay alimony promptly on time without at all embarassing himself. His marriage was one of the unforseen exigencies. Nor is it thought by many of those interested that he has the right to shirk a just and honorable obligation, assumed prior to his second matrimonial venture, merely that he may live at a $300 a month pace. There are many men on this earth that would be heartily glad of an opportunity to try to live in a very fair way for $200 a month and doubtless before he dies Mr. Deuprey also will be glad to join that number.

His Ox Gored.

It is odd how one's public spirit is always tested when it comes to the subjugation of one's own pocket book to meet patriotic demands. Thursday the Merchants' Association held its third annual dinner, and as usual there was a lot of eating, some drinking and an immense amount of talking. The most brilliant speech of the evening was that made by Frank J. Symmes, against the municipal ownership of public utilities. The gentleman fairly outdid himself in brilliant logic and all of his utterances were made with the utmost force of conviction. It is certainly conducive to eloquence and force when one's own ox is being gored. Mr. Symmes is a prominent Director of the Spring Valley Water Co., which in case of legitimate municipal ownership would certainly be one of the first corporations obsorbed.

Bluffer—In the matter of reading, the tastes of the man and the boy are alike.

Brightly—Not at all. The boy gets a dime novel for a nickel and reads it in hiding, while the man buys a dime novel in a dollar and a half edition and talks about it in public.

Whacht Racht.

Two nautical maids on a yacht
Cried bravely: "We care not a jacht
About mal de mer
When the weather is fer—
You can put us ashore when it's nacht."

When a man receives a quarter which is palpably of lead,
His remarks before a clergyman could scarcely be resaid.
He raves about dishonesty and snorteth with contempt;
More righteous indignation, surely, mortal never dreamt—
And ne'er a smiling countenance doth this same man present
Until he's passed the quarter on some unsuspecting gent.

"I'm engaged to a foreign nobleman, pa."
"How much does he expect me to shell out?"
"I don't know."
"That's just like you; you never ask the price of anything!"

Londoner—She is one of your most popular actresses, isn't she?

American—Oh, yes. Why, she has had a racehorse, a cigar and a tooth-powder named after her.

Drinkwater—The abuse of liquor has reached a terrible stage in this country.

Old Soak—I should say it has. Some of those temperance people should be lynched for what they say about it.

Militarism and Vegetables.

One day last week General W. R. Shafter came in at the gates of the Presidio riding in an Italian's vegetable wagon. "Turn out the guard: post commandant!" cried the startled sentry. There was a rushing of feet, a hurried grasping of rifles, the clinking of belts in the guard tent. "Never mind the guard," cried the General and really he did not want any display. He would have gladly slid by the sentry in disguise or have hid beneath the cabbages in the wagon bottom if there had been enough to cover his form. Times like these, the less ostentation, the better the feeling; then military grandeur brings no pride.

The Italian vegetable man who knew not the rank of his heavy passenger, was first frightened and then proud of the manner in which his advent on the encampment grounds was greeted. He returned each salute of hand to visor or presented rifle with a genial smile and nod as they drove up the road, and he did not notice his companion's scowl or the doubling-up in merriment of the officers and men when his wagon had passed.

General Shafter has friends on Van Ness avenue whom he frequently visits. He comes in a cab which leaves him and at a previously specified time returns to take him back to his quarters. On this day there was some misunderstanding regarding the hour and no cab was waiting when the General left his friend's house.

It was a long walk to the Presidio even for a man of average weight and besides, there was a strong head wind blowing with a slight sleet of rain. The General did not enjoy the prospect nor did he wish to return to his friends and explain. He started to walk but before he had gone a quarter of the distance his legs gave out and he was obliged to sit down on the lower step of a porch stair and rest.

As he mopped his face, wet with perspiration and rain, with his handkerchief, he saw approaching a solution to his trouble. An Italian vegetable vender with provender for the Presidio hove in sight down the street and was stopped by the General after a sharp run. The preliminaries were soon arranged, the careful Italian insisting on a guarantee for his wagon springs besides a sufficiently high fare, and the vehicle with its freight of garden truck and Shafter started for the barracks, with a group of wide-eyed street urchins running after.

Thus the General came to his sovereignty. The story is not to be whispered at the post under pain of instant court martial.

"Say, old man, how do you tell a debutante from a girl in her fourth season, when you don't know either and one looks as old as the other?"

"Watch them at a problem play or when a risky story is told. The debutante tries not to appear shocked, though she is, while the other pretends to be shocked, though she isn't."

Over the Demi-Tasse

"Speaking of General Shafter," said one of the newspaper boys at the Press Club high-jinks the other night, "reminds me of a trick he played on an Examiner reporter when he was Colonel in command at Alcatraz. Tom Garrett was city editor of the Examiner in those days and somehow it got to Tom that the officers at Alcatraz were getting all the best parts of the meat sent there for the enlisted men, leaving the bones and the hide for the privates. To right such wrongs is the Examiner's mission on earth. Here the United States government was purchasing meat for its brave boys in blue—this was before the Khaki days—and paying its commissioned officers a salary out of which they were supposed to buy their grub; and the officers were not only robbing the privates but also the government.

"Garrett sent the boy into the local room for a clever reporter named Scott. When Scott came in Garrett gave him his prompt and decisive orders: 'Get on Alcatraz; be arrested and put in the guard house. I want two columns on so and so,' and he explained the points of the story.

"Scott was bright and did not ask how. He went down to the Front and renting a row boat, pulled out to Alcatraz. Of course, as soon as he set foot on shore he was promptly picked up by a sentry and taken to the guard house. The officer of the day questioned him but Scott put up a bluff of drunk and he was left to sleep it off.

"That night Scott got his story. He was not overcautious about it because he expected to leave next morning and the sergeant of the guard heard him asking many questions which had a suspicious sound. The sergeant reported to the officer of the guard and the officer of the guard reported to the officer of the day and the officer of the day reported to Colonel Shafter. The next morning Scott was taken by a file of soldiers to the Colonel's headquarters. Scott had all he wanted to know and he felt sure he could dish up a page of horrible meat steals if necessary; he was ready to go and expected to answer a few questions, keeping up his bluff of a drunken wanderer and be put aboard the tug.

"But the first query popped at him by Colonel Shafter disabused his mind: 'What paper are you for?'

"Scott took the bull by the horns. 'The Examiner,' he replied.

" 'What's your lay?' asked the Colonel.

" 'I am detailed here,' Scott said with dignity, 'to discover the truth of the story which has come to the notice of the Examiner, that the best of the meat purchased for the privates is being used by the officers.'

" 'You will be given ample opportunity. Take him back to the guard house, corporal, and keep him there until further instructions from me. Feed him guard house meat, too.'

"Scott was led away vowing yellow-journalism revenge. For a week he was kept under lock and key and fed twice a day on prison fare. At first he had hopes that the Hearst dailies would send a steel-clad yacht to his rescue but none came. On the seventh morning he was taken down to the wharf and placed aboard the government tug.

"His first move when he landed on San Francisco soil was to hasten to the Examiner office and he caught Tom Garrett in his room. Scott was pale and emaciated from his confinement when he stepped up to Garrett's desk, and the city editor looked up at him.

" 'You've been drunk again, Scott. I can see it in your face,' said Garrett. 'I haven't noticed you around here for a week or so either. We can't stand this any more. Put in your pay-slip and get out.'

"Scott didn't say a word. Mad! It's a wonder he didn't kill Garrett as he sat there. He slammed out of the office and out of the building, and the big meat story came out in the Call. Garrett had clean forgotten all about the detail."

The Reporter who Didn't Know a Story.

The old reporter smoked for a time with a smile on his face. "Tom Garrett" he began, "always did have queer notions regarding a reporter's power to secure a story, He never excused the man that asked how to get his material or failed to make the requisite showing. There was a young fellow from Los Angeles named Bentley who came a cropper in the local room because he didn't savvy.

"It was Bentley's second day on the Monarch when Garrett came into the room, took a squint about and beckoned to him. 'Come, get your hat on!' he said. 'Follow me.'

"The reporter followed. Garrett chased him over to the Poodle Dog restaurant, and up to the second floor. A man and two women were in a box when Garrett and Bentley bumped in. The man jumped up and Garrett grabbed him by the button hole. Then they whispered for awhile. Garrett next took one of the ladies aside and conversed hurriedly in low tones with her while the man and the other woman whispered. The reporter looked on, wondering.

"It was over in two minutes and Bentley chased after Garrett back to the office. As the city editor disappeared in his box he called to Bentley, 'Give me two columns on this.'

"Well, that reporter had just as much idea of what had taken place as you or I. The proper thing for him to have done was to start out and discover, but he made the mistake of asking Garrett. He was fired so quickly that his head swam and Garrett said afterwards that Bentley didn't know a story when he bumped into it."

Melba Spoke Plain English.

One of San Francisco's society boys —some say "sissy-boys"—has decided to give up all hopes of a career as an actor and instead of singing Siegfried and Die Walkure, continue to suck the head of his cane and smoke cigarettes. It happened that he "suped" at the Grand on a Melba night presenting the part of a tin-clad soldier. It was his first opportunity in the higher form of the drama and he was there because he wished to be able to say off-hand at the club or in the drawing room that he had once acted with Melba; then too he had aspirations and dim ideas of the great prima donna noticing his strong tenor voice and asking him to take a leading part. Such things happened in the books he read.

It was in the third act. Melba was on the stage and the chorus was awaiting its cue. The tin-clad soldier had slipped into a favorable position to see and hear and was just in time to get into Melba's road as she made a hurried exit. There was a collision which for a moment threatened to upset the divine Melba. Then she turned on him.

"You damned little runt, you, get the hell out of here!" she said in remarkably pure beer shop English.

And so he has given up his aspirations in the operatic line. His name? He knows it and his friends will guess.

Have you Read Them in the Sunday Chronicle.

Justice Garoutte is still traveling. San Franciscans do not object to this. It is the presentation of his thoughts during the trip that sicken the heart and makes the blood congeal. Now what excuse is there for printing this kind of rot? The judge is supposed to be at the foot of the Eiffel tower in Paris.

"Remembering how light atmosphere is at great altitudes," he writes, "I thought it better to go to the first landing, and there lunch at the great cafe, as it was about the proper hour. Now, anybody who thinks this restaurant landing is near the ground is much mistaken. I could not see it at all with the naked eye, but my wife, who wears long-distance glasses, said that she saw something black up there in the sky, which she thought might be the restaurant.

"So we went to take the ascenseur. I took a snapshot at this ascenseur with my eyes, and it looked frail. Now, I am a heavy man, and, while that ascenseur looked all right for the first mile or so, I didn't know how the light atmosphere might affect it at a higher altitude. Of course I had no fear for myself. But there were my dear wife and two daughters. What would become of them if the thing should drop? Ah, I loved them too well to risk it, and said, 'Loved ones, go up and eat; eat your fill. I will not endanger your lives by going with you. I am fearful the extra weight would be too much. I would truly love to go. Indeed, it has been one of the ambitions of my life to ascend the eiffel tower, but I now forego the pleasure. I will not endanger a hair on your heads.' So up they went."

If the Judge's "dear wife and two daughters" would prevail upon him to curb his wild Bill Nye humor or else fall into the Vesuvian crater or off the Maetterhorn all would be forgiven. Nothing can be done at this end. Mike de Young insists on running the letters

Ed. Greenway now a Bohemian.

Ed. Greenway, mourning the loss of his formal social position; with no birthday parties and with no debutante to force in his hot-house into a social bud— at so much per bud—is going into the Bohemian line. He will next take to drink.

What a shock it would be for Ed's mother to know that her dear boy had given a supper for a person on the stage. And at the Bohemian Club! And in the Red Room of the Bohemian Club!

Dear, dear!

Bohemianism may have rubbed against Mr Greenway before but not to be chronicled in the daily papers. It is only since the loss of his heavy position as manager of San Francisco's social functions that he has taken to the foot-lights and the Bohemian supper.

Now Miss Fritzie Scheff is a dear little girl and as jolly off the stage as she is on. She can have a good time anywhere—almost. But they say she nearly froze at Ed. Greenway's Bohemian supper. It isn't pleasant to be the only Bohemian at a Bohemian supper; and she was that. She had to be shown off like a trick canary at the bird show, and Ed. Greenway was the trainer.

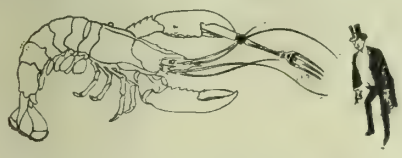
The list of those invited to meet the little singer would have kept any local Bohemian away. They were:

Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Irwin, Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. K. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Buckbee, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Magee, Miss Therese Morgan, Miss Dillon, Miss Grace Spreckels, Miss Lillie Spreckels, Miss Edith Preston, Miss Alice Hager, Miss Ethyl Hager, Miss Florence Josselyn, Miss Mamie Josselyn, Miss Elena Robinson, Miss Caro Crockett,Mayor James D. Phelan, Mr. Toplitz of Paris, Walter L. Dean, Major James McM. Wood of Portland, Nat N. Wilson, N. Stetson, J. L. Rathbone, Samuel G. Boardman, E. H. Sheldon, R. McKee Duperu, Willard N. Drown,Theodore Wores, A. B. Costigan and Walter S. Martin.



A Wonderful Financial Genius.

John I. Sabin is a good business manager. For several years he has kept competition in the telephone line out of San Francisco and at the same time has given this city the most general and cheapest system of inter-communication in the world. Then Mr. Sabin has launched two daughters successfully in the social world, marrying one of them. His last venture is the newspaper debut of Miss Pearl Ladd Sabin made in last Monday's Call with a column cut.

This shows executive ability seldom equalled; and when to top all this, it is understood that Mr. Sabin is the vestry, board of management, Sunday School Committee—in fact the entire works of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, his achievements stand pre-eminent.

Stealing Harrison's Only Joke.

Says the Call: "Every one of the students at the Girls' High School is madly in love. Of course, that is nothing strange or wonderful, but they are all worshiping the same man, and that is where my tale comes in. On Monday last ex-Minister to Siam Barrett visited the school and spoke to the pupils.

" 'How shall I address the students?' said the ex-diplomat to Principal Brooks as he stood in the auditorium facing a bewitching bunch of blooming girls. 'Shall I call them young ladies?'

" 'Call them girls,' said Brooks.

" 'Very well,' said Barrett, 'but I really would like to call them sweethearts.' "

"And that is how it came about and that is the simple fashion in which Barrett with one fell swoop captured several hundred palpitating girlish hearts."

* * * *

Of course ex-Minister to Siam Barrett may not have known, but the Call should; this little joke belongs to William Greer Harrison. He has held undisputed possession for twenty-seven years and has never missed an opening to use it.

Jim Jeffries is Not Gallant.

"In days of old when knights were bold and barons held their sway, a warrior bold" wasn't considered of much account unless he propped the concrete woman upon a pedestal and worshipped her with chivalrous devotion. To-day, here is our own Jim Jeffries, warrior and bold, coming out with the most ungallant kind of a statement in which he denies ever having proposed marriage to Miss Dorothy Drew, the actress, or that he is engaged to her.

He says: "Miss Drew herself knows this to be the truth, and I think the least she could have done would have been to make a denial of the statement instead of substantiating it, as she practically did."

And he also says: "I never gave Miss Drew any encouragement whatever in regard to matrimony."

Last Regular Meeting of the Cabinet.

Tuesday afternoon last, the Cabinet held its regular weekly meeting at O'Brien's Hall. Acting Mayor Charles Wesley Reed presided. The object of the meeting was to investigate into the action of the administration in causing the loss of a horse and cart to James O'Brien in sequence to the recent election.

Mr. O'Brien started the discussion, addressing the meeting at some length. He was interrupted by ex-Chief of Police Lees who asserted that he had detected something. Cross-examination revealed the fact that the something was a bad odor. Jim Nealon and Blinker Murphy were appointed a committee to assist the chief in unravelling the clew.

Mr. Murphy refused to serve until he had made a statement. Permission having been obtained he announced somewhat irrelevantly that it was through his son in the assessor's office that the Examiner got the inside tip that the deputies in that office were contributing to the anti-Civil service suit. Mr. O'Brien then took up the thread of his discourse and was proceeding with the genealogy of the horse when he was interrupted by Chairman Neaton of the committee on offensive odors who reported for the committee that the stench detected by Chief Lees arose from the decomposition of one of Sam Rainey's stories. Inquiry as to which story caused the trouble elicited the information that it was the old story about Mr. Rainey's going to the doctor with a bottle. The episode caused no surprise because as George Maxwell remarked, "None of Sam's stories are less than twenty years old and most of them have been rotting several years already."

At the conclusion of Mr. O'Brien's complaint it was decided to lay the dead horse on the morgue table and postpone the cart for one week. This novel solution of the difficulty was offered by Judge Lawlor who explained that he was better versed in parliamentary law than in any other kind, he having graduated from Professor Popper's Iroquois school of acting. Judge Lawlor then resigned from the Cabinet. The resignation was accepted with resolutions of respect. No question was asked as to the motive underlying Judge Lawlor's action, it being understood by all as a compliment to the Cabinet.

An application was presented from Johnny Barrett for membership. On motion of Blinker Murphy, action was suspended until it was ascertained if Mr. Barrett was sufficiently dead. Chairman Reed then offered a resolution endorsing the candidacy of Charles Wesley Reed for mayor. Charles Wesley Reed spoke for the resolution, delivering a glowing panegyric of the subject.

The resolution received the first and second reading and was ordered printed in the Wave, provided it could be paid for in hot air. Mr. Nealon presented the Cabinet with a copy of his celebrated "Treatise on Assessments." The meeting then adjourned.

Huntington's Aged Horses Taken Care of.

The pretty story comes from New York that the five aged steeds of the late Collis P. Huntington will be pensioned off for the balance of their lives and be kept from the horse poor house.

Archer Huntington, the son of the late millionaire, makes the statement:

"None of the horses is less than twenty years old.

"They have outlived their usefulness, and we do not like the idea of seeing them go into the possession of strangers, who might neglect or overwork them.

"It has now been decided to keep them and care for them until they die of old age."

Someone had started the report in Throgg's Neck that the Huntington heirs, tired of keeping the wo out nags, had decided to have them killed.

As a consequence, there was a hasty exodus of eager village folk to the estate, a delegation of hack drivers in the van.

Behind the cabbies was a nondescript following of shopkeepers, market gardeners and hucksters, and winding up the procession was the man who drives the village scavenger's cart.

They were much disappointed in not obtaining the horses as a gift.

Gave Melba a Bite to Eat.

Mayor Phelan is not to be outdone by Ed. Greenway in the entertaining of the elect in opera. He "farewelled" Melba with a dinner last Sunday night and it was in the red room at the Bohemian Club. Melba was there, as also were her sister, Mr. and Mrs. Osgood Hooker, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Dean, Dr. and Mrs. Washington Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. Older, Miss Voorhies, Miss Wells, Mr. Walter Martin, Mr. Ed. Greenway, Mr. R. J. Tobin, Mr. Hermann Oelrichs and Mr. Horace Platt. Neither Jack Carserly nor Dr. Voorsanger were invited.

Manager Grau is Delighted.

Every daily paper has given its readers this week the very flattering information that Maurice Grau is highly pleased with San Francisco. As Mr. Grau's pleasure is directly proportionate with the size of the bag he carried away, there is no real cause for much rejoicing. While Mr. Grau is uttering these words of tribute to San Francisco's liberality, he is using some of the same brand in New York, as is evidenced by the following clipping from the New York Journal of November 27th:

GRAU IS DELIGHTED.

It has been the dream of my life to have the greatest living actress and the greatest living actor on the stage at the same performance. I am delighted at their success.—MAURICE GRAU, on the Bernhardt-Coquelin performance.

Regarding Percy King's Sleeping Hours.

As the social season advances the question again arises and grows pregnant; how does Percy King manage his sleeping hours to accommodate his business and his pleasure?

Percy is the time-keeper at the Union Iron Works which means that he must be at his work before seven o'clock and mark down in a big book the exact minute when each of the numerous employes of the institution arrive. If he wasn't there the presumption is that the works would cease working.

But Percy is also a social leader—of course in a small way. Cotillions are his specialty and cotillions mean late hours. So do theatre parties and suppers. Now, if Percy gets home at half past two or three o'clock a. m., and has to be at the works at a quarter of seven, when must he sleep? And how long a social season can he stand?

Mayor Phelan's Defense of Free Speech.

Mayor Phelan gave a dinner recently that somehow escaped press notice. No anonymous communications were sent to the papers regarding it and it has been kept a close secret among those present.

The original intention was all right. Mayor Phelan desired to honor the outspokenness of Professor Ross of Stanford and show his contempt for the un-Democratic attempt to bridle free speech. He would gather around the board the foremost in educational, ministerial and judicial circles, and it could all be printed in the Bulletin and prove Mayor Phelan, once again, the defender of the people and the exponent of true Democracy. The reasons why this program was not carried out developed at the banquet. One of them, and the principal one, was Jack Casserly

When the wine had gone around once or twice, and even Judge Seawell and Dr. Rader were feeling kindly toward the world, Jack Casserly who, as everyone knows, draws a $4000 salary as member of the dignified Board of Education, decided it was his turn to talk and he told a story. It can not be printed here. The laws of the state against obscene literature prevent. The title of his tale was, "When a maid is a virgin."

The company around Mr. Phelan's table was not the kind upon which such classic literature can be sprung. Frank Lane laughed at the proper time, but the chill that emanated from Dr. Voorsanger, Prof. Ross and others of the company frosted Lane's laugh and entirely froze Casserly. It was a terrible contretemps.

Mayor Phelan attempted to relieve the strain by asking Dr. Voorsanger to say a few words. It was a case of turning on a regular Arctic cold wave. Rabbi Voorsanger was probably flustered by Jack Casserly's assininity for he seemed to forget that Prof. Ross was the guest of honor, and referred to the famous Stanford incident in a way that caused the hero of it to flush up hotly. Dr. Voorsanger said that he could not place the blame for such an unfortunate affair; that he did not know whether Mrs. Stanford, President Jordan or Prof. Ross was most in the wrong.

The people who listened were amazed and Mayor Phelan horrified. The dinner so carefully planned was a failure. No one was proud of himself or his neighbor and by tacit consent no one has talked of it. That is why the newspapers have not chronicled Mayor Phelan's protest against hampering the expression of individual views in the college faculties.

Superior Judge Graham's Grammar.

Judge-elect Thomas Graham, whose practice in the past has been principally battery cases in the Justice courts, made his debut in the higher temples of the judiciary as attorney for a woman who had brought suit for divorce. The allegations in the complaint were many and serious.

Judge-elect Graham put his plaintiff client on the witness stand. "Now," he said in a reassuring way, "just you tell the court what your man done to you."

Put his Name in the Hall of Fame.

Certainly the crowning act in a Judicial career strewn with other blazes of glory has been perpetrated by Judge Belcher of the Superior court in his recently rendered decision anent the Mechanics' Lien Law. Poor mechanics! No longer can they look for redress when their labor bills are unpaid, no longer will the protecting arm of the law shield them from wild cat speculations of impecunious builders. Judge Belcher has, in the language of George Ade, "fixed 'em plenty." Now it is time for some public spirited and broadly enlightened man to rise up and explain to these poor benighted workingmen why it is that for all these years the laws governing mechanics' liens have remained uncontested. Is this the first case where they have ever been put to the test? Is it a fact that for years the people of this state have accepted and operated under an unconstitutional law and might have continued to do so for years had not a Moses in the personage of Judge Belcher arisen to lead them from the sloughs of ignorance? By the way—Judge Belcher retires from office on December 31, 1900, this year.

Policemen Needed at the Union League.

It is stated that the Union League will expel from its membership George E. Curtis, attorney. This is the result of Mr. Curtis' peculiar ways of making bets and arranging the preliminaries.

Some months ago Mr. Curtis wagered D. E. McKinley, the prominent Santa Rosa politician, that a child born to citizens of the United States traveling abroad in a private capacity is eligible to the Presidency. Curtis wanted the decision by Federal Judges, and as judges always decide slowly, after deep thought, the matter is still holding fire.

Last Monday the money wagered, $20 a side, was being passed over from the club safe to the stakeholder, Joseph Simonson, when Curtis grabbed his twenty It was skilfully done; no pickpocket in the country could have been more adroit. But Curtis should have run and made his escape after his polite action. As it was, the police were called in and the clubman was dragged before a magistrate and forced to disgorge

The Union League is a gentleman's club and will not brook any such behavior as has been evidenced by Mr. Curtis. If necessary, policemen in plain clothes will be kept at all times in the club rooms to prevent thefts. Signs like the following will be posted in conspicuous places about the walls:

KEEP YOUR HAND ON YOUR POCKET-BOOK.

CLUB MEMBERS WILL REFRAIN FROM STEALING THE FURNITURE.

And George E. Curtis will be made an example, to teach others in the organization that while cheating at cards may be tolerated, highway robbery will not be allowed.

The Shock of Disillusion.

With a truly English rigidity of pose the proud and haughty driver held the reins over a spanking pair of silver-mounted bays, attached to a shining victoria standing in front of the main entrance to the Mills Building.

With an obsequious removal of his hat, a business man held the heavy doors leading into the rotunda open and an elegantly dressed woman passed out, stepping to the pavement daintily. Her well gloved hand kept from contact with the coarse pavement her skirts, exposing a wealth of lingerie fit for a queen. Her beautiful face, seraphic like in its innocence, had that indefinable cast which the bluest of blue blood and breeding can give. With various methods of watching, from the sly out-of-the-corner look to the more noticeable stare, the throng of passers-by made way for her, wondering at the elegance of the woman as well as that of the stylish turnout, which seemed fitted for her use. But she did not enter the victoria. Instead she paused a moment in deep thought, then—horror of horrors!—carelessly extracted a toothpick from her glove and passed down the crowded thoroughfare, picking her teeth!

Oscar Wilde Dies in Obscurity.

Twenty years ago, Oscar Wilde was a prophet with a large following; he was the originator of a cult and the founder of the school of æsthetism. Last week he died in an obscure pension in the Quartier Latin in Paris; hardly a friend in the world could he call to his side; his books had been ostracised and his plays acted without the author's name attached.

This was the punishment for the crime of being found out. Wilde's trial in the Old Bailey, London, was the most obnoxious affair that newspapers ever have handled. During the course of it, people fumigated their dailies and handled them with tongs. But the world read every detail that was printed, and felt better when the old Marquis of Queensbury won out and Lord Alfred Douglas was separated from his companion by prison walls.

But at the end, when Oscar Wilde was dying in his garret, the man beside his bed, the only friend left to the broken down author, playwright and poet, was Lord Alfred Douglas.

When he Visited San Francisco.

Wilde, at the time of his supremacy, was in San Francisco and many of the Bohemian Club remember his visit yet. It was in 1882 and the entertainment accorded him was the tribute due a man of his wit and brains. While the bulk of the world was laughing at and ridiculing this poseur, the stamp of approval had been placed upon him by the artistic set in London and New York and there was reason for it. Though he sought notoriety by the cheap trappings of the quack street doctor, he had given the cultured occasion for new thought in his books and poems.

San Francisco followed the lead of older and more settled seats of wisdom and Oscar Wilde was the guest of honor at the Tavernier-Strong studio and was received with open arms by the exclusive set, who have been striving for some years now to forget his name.

Robbing the Press Agent.

Has Mrs. Roos taken up the theatrical star line of advertising? Is she trying to rob the drama of what has always been its own particular field? Now that she has lost and found her $1000 diamond pin, will she begin bathing in goat's milk or champagne and take the last prop from under the overworked press agent?

Roos Bros. Roos Bros.

Cheapest Clothes in Town.
Prices Smashed to Flinders!
Overcoats Marked Down.
Socks Reduced to twenty cents.
Shirts that were four bits,
Now are Sold at forty cents.
Our Tremendous Hits.

Everything in the Big Store
This Week Goes at Cost.

For Mammas found the Diamond Pin
That was Lost, Lost, Lost.

Critic—Although my review is severe, I trust you do not attribute it to malice.

Author—Not at all. I ascribed its tone to your ignorance of the subject handled.

Friendship.

BY

CHARLES DENNETT BURROW.

(Mrs. Holmbush is at a secretaire writing letters. She is a widow, still young, pretty, and wears a morning gown of pale blue cashmere. To her enters Mr. Arnold Rodway, a tall, thin, gentleman, clean-shaven, somewhat nervous, but with a determined chin. The time is half past eleven o'clock.)

Rodway: Good morning, Mrs. Holmbush. Am I interrupting you? Pray don't let me do that.

Mrs. Holmbush: If you'll excuse me for just one moment——— (She continues to scribble for half a minute, makes a flourishing signature, lays down her pen, and turns, smiling, to Mr. Rodway.) Now, Mr. Rodway. I knew you'd wait patiently. Some men are so different. I can't bear impatient men.

Rodway: You're very good, Mrs. Holmbush. How sweet those roses smell!

Mrs. Holmbush: Aren't they lovely! And do you know, I haven't the least idea who sent them.

(Mr. Rodway smooths his chin, coughs, and peers inquiringly into the bowl.)

Rodway: How very extraordinary! And yet, after all, why should I say that? With so many admirers.

Mrs. Holmbush: But without a name. They may have come from somebody I hate, and suppose he happened to see them there! It is so inconsiderate!

Rodway: Let us hope you don't hate him. (A pause.) Mrs. Holmbush, I have news for you.

Mrs. Holmbush: Yes?

Rodway: I hope it will please you. It concerns your brother Hector. We are, as you know, great friends; up at college together and all that.

Mrs. Holmbush: You could hardly have occupied the same chambers for so long without being dear friends to start with, could you?

Rodway: Well, I suppose not. He was unable to bring the news himself, being—a—suddenly called out of town, but he begged me to come to you with it.

Mrs. Holmbush: Hurry, hurry! What has he done?

Rodway (smiling): Nothing scandalous. He has only become engaged.

Mrs. Holmbush: Engaged! O, Mr. Rodway, and to whom?

Rodway: To Gwendoline Mortlake.

Mrs. Holmbush; Good heavens—to Gwen! What can he have been thinking of? Mr. Rodway, this is dreadful, terrible!

Rodway (with marked surprise): But Miss Mortlake is your friend!

Mrs. Holmbush: Yes, and that being so, who is more capable of judging her faults than I? Gwen! she's the last woman in the world to make Hector happy! She's proud, extravagant, spiteful, and to my certain knowledge has been engaged three times already! We have no secrets from each other, Mr. Rodway.

Rodway: It might be as well, Mrs. Holmbush, if you had. I beg you to remember that Miss Mortlake is my cousin.

Mrs. Holmbush: That's an accident for which I can only pity you.

"FOR WAYS THAT ARE DARK" A Camera Study by Oscar Maurer.

Rodway: It's an accident for which I'm profoundly thankful. It pleases me to think that my friend Hector should choose a member of my mother's family.

Mrs. Holmbush: Mr. Rodway, I begin to see it all, and I must speak out. You encouraged him in this; you lured the poor boy into his infatuation!

Rodway: The poor boy, as you call him, required no assistance from me, Mrs. Holmbush.

Mrs Holmbush (excitedly): I must be candid, Mr. Rodway, at any cost! I never considered you a fit companion for Hector—he is so easily led, so impressionable. (Mr. Rodway smiles grimly.) He knows nothing of the world!

Rodway: I should say that he knew quite as much as was good for him. But as you don't consider me a fit companion for your brother, Mrs. Holmbush, I can hardly be so for you. I had hoped that this might bring us together, intimately together, but——

Mrs. Holmbush: O, Mr. Rodway, I spoke wildly! My nerves ——(Miss Gwendoline Mortlake is announced. She glides up to Mrs. Holmbush, and they embrace.). My dearest Gwen!

Miss Mortlake: And how is my Bessie? (Mr. Rodway stands watching them with a polite smile.) And why are you here so early, Arnold?

Rodway: I had news for Mrs. Holmbush. It always charms me so to be a witness of the affection between ladies!

Mrs. Holmbush (hurriedly, with a glance at Rodway): And such news, dear Gwen! To think that you, my best fr end, are engaged to Hector!

Miss Mortlake: Sweet, isn't it?

Rodway: I knew Mrs. Holmbush would be charmed!

Mrs. Holmbush: How could I be otherwise?

Miss Mortlake: But why didn't Hector come himself?

Rodway: He had an engagement—a—out of town.

Miss Mortlake (suspiciously): O!

Mrs. Holmbush: Aren't these lovely roses, Gwen? I can't think who sent them to me.

Miss Mortlake: Can't you, Bessie? (Rodway frowns at her meaningly.) I'm afraid I can't help you Rodway: Some token of friendship, doubtless; perhaps of more.

Mrs. Holmbush; Of more, Mr. Rodway?

Rodway: One may suspect it. (He prepares to leave.)

Mrs. Holmbush: Won't you stay to lunch, Mr. Rodway? I'm sure Gwen will stay.

Rodway: Thank you, I have to meet a man at the club. Besides, I shouldn't like to interrupt your charming confidences Good-bye! (As he goes downstairs) Gwen's all right, but the other!—I shall tell Hecto. I've had a happy escape: he won't mind. What a lucky thing I forgot to put a card in with those flowers!

Black and White.

Typog aphical.

Yes, Nature's wise, we can't deny,
In all her hidden ways,
But in her "types of men," oh, why
Are there so many "J's?"

Training the Ballet

THE fairies who gracefully float into the Christmas pantomine to the langorous music of the Rose ballet, have not always floated; have not always been fairies. Back in the dark ages they were girls and it took work and drill, work and drill, day after day, hours at a time, steady, continuous hard, before they became the graceful, rhythmic dancers of the fairy ballet.

It all looks so easy from a seat in the dress circle. There is a deep strong chord from the orchestra and as the curtain rolls up the music of a dance wells forth. From both sides of the stage, keeping perfect time, feet and arms and head and body, passing through intricate movements with graceful piroquets, the mazes of the ballet.

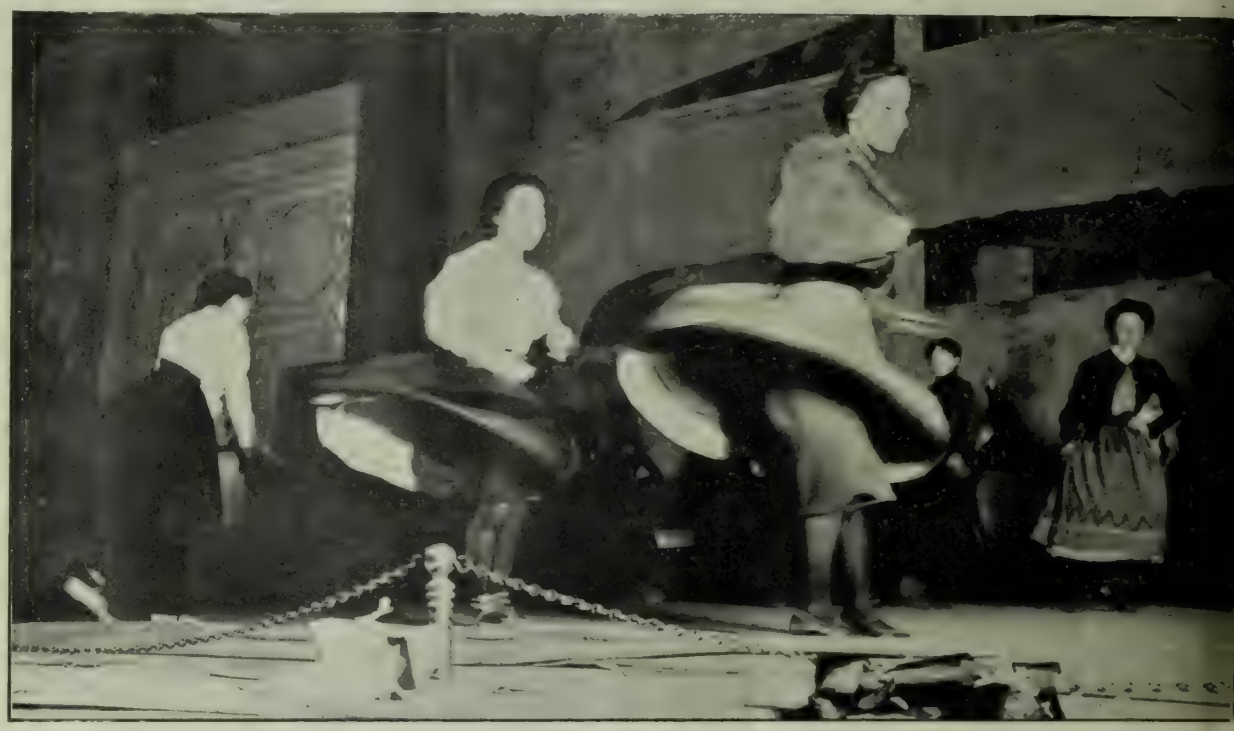
The lime-light casts a rosy hue over the sensuous motion of the youthful figures and it all seems like a dream.

But there were stern realities before there were dreams.

"Now all together, girls; follow your leaders and watch me. Not too fast! Keep the time, slowly now. One, two, three, one, two, three. Dance with your hands, dance with your bodies. Move your arms, so! Wait a moment. Fogarty. Once more from the beginning, please."

It is Miss Ida Wyatt and she is instructing the Tivoli ballet. Now they are girls—not fairies.

Some are pretty, some are graceful; none are homely, none are awkward. They have been too carefully selected for absolute awkwardness to creep in. But they are the raw material, new to the work, beginning at the beginning. Will they ever reach perfection or even presentability?



A DIZZY WHIRL.

On the big stage at the Tivoli are twenty-four of the future dancers and they are in their practice gowns. Short skirts, very short skirts and bloomers; street gowns pinned up; blouses, jackets or short waists; some have dancing slippers, some wear the ordinary pumps.

There is no tinsel, no lace, no fluffy skirts and pink hosiery. It is all woefully prosaic and business like; it is work.

Miss Wyatt in a plain black skirt coming just below her knees and a light blouse is directing. She is always good humored and seems always happy. How it must tire her!

The theatre except for the girls on the stage is almost empty. Two or three of the attaches smoke cigarettes in front watching the progress of the lesson. From somewhere above is heard the thumping of a piano and Ferris Hartman's voice attempting a new song. There are other rehersals going on.

Joseph Fogarty sits at the piano with the ballet score before him and plays mechanically while he smokes and watches Miss Wyatt's motions. It is work too, for him. Again he begins the Rose ballet.

The double procession of girls starts again through the intricacies with their eyes on their instructor. She dancing all the while, here there and everywhere, straightening out a figure that is mixed or grasping a girl and dancing her through a difficult measure. And all the time, "Dance girls; more life! Move your bodies, your hips. Don't be afraid. No one will eat you. Face the audience all the time. Dou't turn your bodies, just your heads. Keep your arms moving—so. Dance with your heads. Now cross over. Very good. You may rest now a moment."

And the girls enjoy it. They will not keep still even in the few moments rest. Some throw themselves on the floor but their feet are still dancing and their eyes are dancing and their tongues are dancing. Others prantice the steps and try new ones; turn handsprings or cartwheels to limber up their joints. Only Mr. Fogarty rests and smokes his cigarette.

Again they are off, but this time it is the Dutch peasant dance. It's a clickety, clickety, clack, clickety, clickety, click dance. Here gracefulness is not the requisite, as it is an awkward, jumping-jack ballet, and the lack of training is not so evident. Over and over again it is repeated with short intervals of rest. Sometimes individual girls are taken apart by the instructor and given lessons on the step.

Through it all a sign painter on his scaffold at the rear of the stage daubs on the paint with a whitewash brush that will transform a barren piece of canvas into the fairy grotto,

He pays no heed to the music or the dance and he does not even hear it for there is no rhythm in his brush strokes. He is as far away as though he were not in the room.

These girls have been in training for just a week and only the very outer rim of their awkwardness has been polished off. But every day counts now and improvement grows more rapid as the first dress rehearsal approaches. They are quick to learn.

"They're coming on nicely," said Miss Wyatt. "A week ago they were all new to me and most of them new to the business. An hour and a half every day of almost continual dancing is making ballet girls of them fast.

"How do I select them? Well, I can size a girl's capabilities in the dancing line up very quickly. I have been five years here and have had this same thing over many times.

"An applicant for a job must of course have good looks and a figure. These are essential points. Something of a voice is required and natural grace of action. If they have danced before on a stage it makes their work and mine much easier.

"The chorus girl of San Francisco is not the chorus

r Christmas Pantomine

AT THE STAGE DOOR.

girl of New York. Our girls are mostly of good families and all well mannered. There is none of the wild life and wine drinking, cigarette smoking, late hour existence that one imagines as associated with the girls of the ballet. San Francisco is not cosmopolitan enough as yet to have a profession of chorus girls. We haven't the theatres for it. Nearly all our girls live at their homes and this is a chance to earn a little extra money."

Henrietta Crosman had been forgotten by most people who go to New York theatres when she came back to command admiration as Nell Gwynne. Nor did the sight of her cause a general recognition, because she had been vulgarly plump in farces, while now she was elegantly slender in a comedy. In the meantime practice had made her a proficient actress, and marriage with Maurice Campbell had provided a heartfelt manager. It is likely that Dr. Parkhurst would reasonably find "objectionable" but not shocking things in "Mistress Nell," as no potrayal of the historic siren could purify her. In these days of Gwynne plays it is interesting to note how that actress climaxed her profession in Dryden's tragedy of "Tyrannic Love" or rather, how the author wrote a somewhat reckless epilogue for her. Here are the lines and stage directions:

"Epilogue to 'Tyrannic Love.'" Spoken by Nell Gwynne when she was to be carried off dead by the bearers.

Nell (to the Bearers)—Hold. Are you mad, you dammed confounded dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

(Then she advances to the audience.)

I come, kind Gentlemen, strange news to tell ye,
I am the Ghost of poor departed Nellie.
Sweet Ladies, be not frighted. I'll be civil;
I'm what I was—a little harmless devil.
For after death we Sprites have just such natures
We had for all the world, as human creatures;
And, therefore, I, that was an Actress here,
Play all my tricks in Hell, a Goblin there.
Gallants, look to it; you say there are no sprites,
But I'll come dance about your beds at night,
And, faith, you'll be in a sweet kind of taking
When I surprise you, between sleep and waking,
To tell you truth I walk, because I die,
Out of my calling, in a Tragedy.
Oh, Poet, damned. Dull Poet, who could prove
So senseless, to make Nellie die for Love:
Nay, what's worse, to kill me in my prime?
But farewell, Gentlemen, make haste to me,
I'm sure ere long to have your company,
As for my Epitaph, I will write my own:
"Here Nellie lies, who, though she lived a slattern, Yet died a princess, acting in 'Saint Catherine.'"

Dr. Parkhurst will kindly observe that Dryden provided profanity in abundance for the original Nell to utter, and that the only bad language put into the mouth of her representative by Hazelton is a single outbreak, "To hell with all of yez!" We are not degenerating hopelessly.

Sarah Bernhardt is to receive for every appearance during her present American season the sum of $1000, which is more than any actor ever got here before. Eleonora Duse, when she was negotiating with an American manager three years ago, demanded only that sum for the services of herself and her company. She was to get $1,000 a performance for seven performances a week and was to pay the other actors. Mme. Bernhardt is the only actress speaking a foreign language who ever made money for her managers in this country.

Miss Jessie Bartlett Davis who has recently gone on the Vaudeville stage, describes her first sensations:

"Well, I can just tell you that when I got out in the center of the stage all alone and felt that I was the only thing and had to do it all, why, it nearly scared my wits away.

"I have been eleven years with the Bostonians, and have had only eight weeks in vaudeville, but I like it immensely as far as I have got. My first part on any stage was Buttercup in "Pinafore," and, strangely enough, I could have played in the New York production, as Mr. Savage offered me a good position in the English Grand Opera Company.

"My first three nights in vaudeville I sang arias from the operas, but I found the public did not want them. Then I sang ballads and made a big hit. My best success has been 'Oh, Promise Me.'"

Mr. Thomas Whiffen the New York baritone, has just gone to London to play the lover in the "Casino Girl" at the Shaftesbury. His name is fairly well known in America, for his father was the original Major-General" of "Pinafore." Thomas Whiffen senior started his career in light opera in England and was afterwards popular in serious American drama, while his son has reversed the position, having come out, a few years ago, in serious drama in the States, and now playing comic opera in London. Mr. Whiffen has been many times in England, but he has never played there before. He is singing an up-to-date, rattling song in the first act at the Shaftesbury, called "The Automobile Girl."

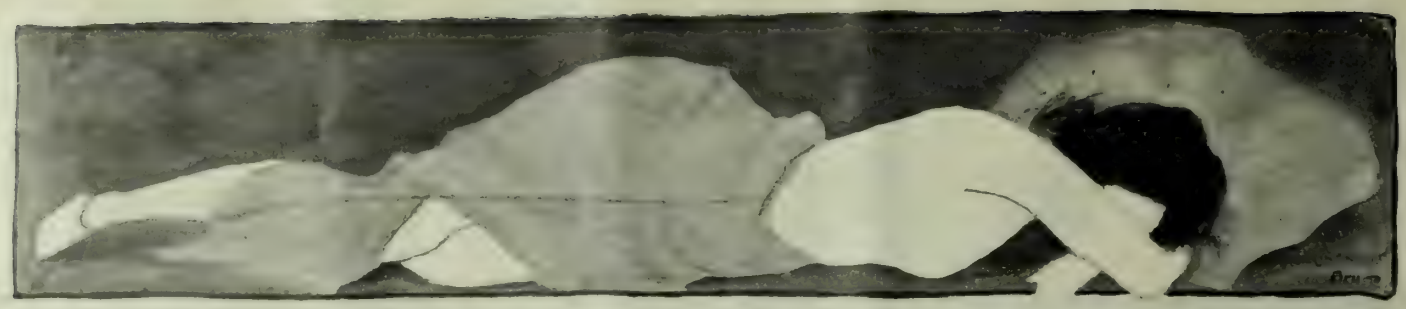
De Garry—I met that old summer girl of mine in a cable car and I was afraid she would speak to me.

Giles—How did you stop her?

De Garry—I offered her my seat.

"Dobley has at last painted a picture that will keep the wolf from the door."

"That so? Painted it on the door, did he?"



Caught by an Advertisement

By Jules Hoche.

When Hector Giral, an employe of the puhlic board of instruction, had reached his thirtieth year, his dreams of marriage took a serious turn. But, unhappily, a formidable stumbling block lay across the sill of his bachelor life, threatening to debar him from family ties. Yet, when I speak of this as a "stone" I am conscious that the image is not well chosen, for this something was infinitely softer and more tender—a woman's heart. Nay more, a woman's whole existence.

For six years she had been Hector's mistress, this charming girl whose innate virtue was beyond question, and he had loved her with his whole soul; indeed he loved her yet. This was not wholly because she gave him back such generous measure, but largely because he had taken her when very young and utterly alone, death having removed her parents and left her helpless and unprotected upon the streets of Paris.

Under such circumstances you might think there was nothing to hinder Hector, himself a free lance, from crowning his work by a legitimate union, sanctioned and sweetened by these six years of happiness.

And in fact there was nothing—nothing at all—except that universal prejudice which forbids a man to marry his mistress. Like all persons of moderate intelligence, lacking any breadth of view, Hector was a slave to prejudice, and confined himself strictly to the routine of his own day and age. So single was his eye to this duty that he would have felt guilty even to adopt any new fashion of parting his hair, unless sanctioned by the best usage.

So, though his heart bled within him, he ended by telling Juliette the whole truth, reminding her as he did so of what he had always forewarned her (which she could not deny) that sooner or later the time must come when such a separation would be inevitable, necessitated as it was by all his hopes for a peaceful future.

Like many other poor girls, set suddenly face to face with such desolation, Juliette made no great ado; on the contrary, she let her lover understand that she accepted the situation—yes, even cheerfully paid the heavy price of her broken future that his might be untrameled. She made but one demand, that, once separated, there should no longer be anything in common between them, and to this he agreed.

Thus freed, but with his heart torn and empty save for the memory of a past which left him nothing but a crop of sincere regrets, Hector started for the country to hunt up that ideal wife who should bear his name and share the responsibilities which would pertain to him as a settled family man.

He found this a far more difficult task than he had imagined it. He had few connections, or intimate acquaintances, and those whom he thought the most of could offer no suitable parti.

He began to tire of this unremitting and unproductive search, and to weary for something more adventurous and exciting until, finally, he had recourse, like so many others, to a method tolerated by usage, perhaps, but which experience too often forces us to condemn. In a Parisian journal he had read the following announcement:

"An orphaned girl of twenty-two years with simple tastes, an excellent education which procures her a situation worth from 2000 to 3000 francs a year, domestically inclined and a finished musician, desires marriage with an employe of the government, or of a commercial company, in an assured position. Write to Letter Z, 13 Poste restante, etc., etc."

"Here is my opportunity!" cried Hector, and without loss of time, he addressed to the place indicated the following note:

"Mademoiselle:

My tastes are yours. My sweetest dream has always been to become the husband of some young girl alone in the world, that I might make up to her for all the affection she had lost, and thus completely fill her heart. Hence, I dare to predict that we are made for each other! I am a government employe, and my only desire is to unite my fate with that of a young and pretty woman, who will understand how to manage a modest establishment and ornament it with all the domestic virtues. Young you are by your own announcement; pretty I fully believe you to be; all the rest is secondary. I await with full confidence your reply, and beg of you, mademoiselle, to accept my most tender and respectful homage.

HECTOR GIRAL.

No. 13, second bell, Lady street.

P. S. Enclosed is my photograph, in exchange for which I hope to receive your own."

The reply was not long delayed. It consisted of eight closely written pages in a handsome hand a thought masculine in style, and contained the most ample biographical details of the young lady's life.

Thanks to the thorough instruction given her by her relatives she had built up a fine position for herself, giving English and music lessons in several great families. Outside of these duties she lived in a quiet so deep, nothing but the thought of sweeter joys in wedlock would have had power to disturb it. As to her looks—she knew herself pretty, and it would be false modesty to deny it! Still, either from coquetry or simple caprice, she insisted that he must take her word for this, as she desired to deepen his attachment to her before showihg him her face. This decision was her ultimatum. His srrict observance of it was positively enjoined, if their exchange of confidences was to continue.

Piqued and interested by this move in the game Hector accepted the situation, and from that moment drew upon the sleep of each night to expend it in evoking from his imagination a thousand and one shadow pictures, which might stand for his mysterious correspondent.

Meanwhile, the affair progressed with rapid strides. Each wrote twice a week, and Hector, captivated by the tender yet picturesque style of the unknown, soon cast out every fear. It was certain, whatever she might exact, however inexplicable this exaction might be, that so spiritual a creature could not be encased in physcal deformity. There must be some other cause for resisting his desires.

* * * *

A first meeting was once more proposed by the eager Hector, at last to be promptly accepted by his unknown friend.

"This evening at 10 o'clock in Saint Sulpice place," said the note received by him one morning, and so strong was his emotion as to strain every vestige of color from his face.

The afternoon, naturally, seemed of interminable length and by 9 o'clock he was posted by the fountain, which rises in the center of the square.

It is scarcely necessary for me to explain that there was no light in that spot—all Paris knows that Saint Sulpice is filled with shadows the minute the gas is lighted!

There Hector waited near the fountain, holding in his fist a handkerchief, which was the sign agreed upon for his indentification.

As 10 o'clock was sounded from the nearest clock he saw the figure of a young woman approaching him, and her gloved hand also displayed one corner of a dainty mouchoir.

They recognized each other simultaneously, but oh deception! the face of the unknown was impenetrably veiled. Her voice, however, war charming, with a musical resource that recalled another voice to Hector—one whose accents had formerly played upon his heart strings, while even its remembrance filled him with a strange and sudden trembling. No, decidedly she could not be ugly!

Hector longed to be done with this mystery. Making the cold a pretext he invited the veiled figure to come home with him, if only for a few minutes, assuring her that she was under the safeguard of his loyalty. After raising many objections she at last consented and, taking his offered arm, went docilely beside him to Lady street

Here, in Hector's parlor, lamps were lighted and the piano was open. Without waiting to take breath, even the mysterious stranger seated herself before the instrument and began the prelude to Beethooven's famous 'Moonlight Sonata."

Then, while both were floating in the delicious tones of this sonata, Hector began to understand the whole! Seized by hopes and fears and trembling with inexpressible ecstacy, he crept softly behind her while with slow hesitating movements, born of his nameless dread and desire he tried to snatch away the violet veil which made her features still a problem.

It was not easy. As he succeeded the last note of the sonata died beneath her touch, while the head of the player turned softly towards him showing the

Continued on page 14.

The Local Theatres

At the Orpheum.

The Orpheum's new bill promises to be a good one. It will be almost entirely new and includes some of the best acts in vaudeville.

The Harmony Four is one of the strongest musical combination in America. Every member is a finished soloist, and their work together is the perfection of harmony. They have a well selected repertoire and should be one of the most popular features on the bill.

Hal Davis and Inez Macauley are two comedians. They will present "One Christmas Eve," a sketch by Will M. Cressy. All of Cressy's sketches are good and this one will be in first-class hands.

Spenser Kelly is a famous barytone. He has an extensive repertoire and will draw on the best of it for this Orpheum engagement.

After an absence of several weeks, the ever popular Biograph will return with views never before exhibited in San Francisco. Among the new pictures will be some views taken recently in China.

BESSIE MARLOWE in "A Bell Boy" California Theatre

INEZ MACAULEY at the Orpheum.

At the California.

The diverting, breezy and buovant farce comedy, "A Bell Boy," will occupy the boards at the California Theatre for one month, beginning to-morrow afternoon. It is written in the happiest vein of James D. Flynn, one of the country's foremost producers in that line of work, and it boasts of a plot that is so simple yet withal so funny, that old and young alike are kept in a continuous grin of expectation from the rise of the first till the fall of the final curtain. The singing is said to be of a high grade, the choruses bright and catchy and everything goes with a snap and dash highly entertaining. Among the clever people who will be seen in "A Bell Boy" are John M. Welch, Lon Harvey, Harry Hughes, George Gale, Bessie Marlowe, the Young sisters and other funmakers of repute.

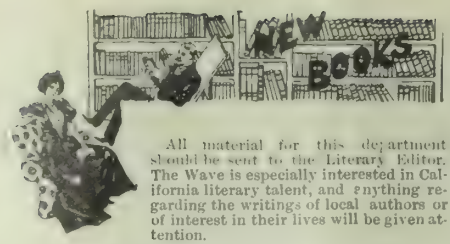
"Ole Olson" with Ben Hendricks, the creator of the part, will follow.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

Commencing Sunday Afternoon, December 9th
and for One Week Only.
That Funny Fellow JOHN M. WELCH,
In the Comedy Cyclone
"A BELL BOY."
New Songs, Dances, Specialties. Costumes Elaborate,
Comedians Clever, and a Bevy of Pretty Girls.
POPULAR PRICES.
NEXT "OLE OLSON"

Orpheum

The Harmony Four; Hal Davis & Inez Macauley;
Spencer Kelly; May de Sousa; Pantzner Trio;
Patrice; Roberts and Winfreds; Biograph.
Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats
50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.



All material for this department should be sent to the Literary Editor. The Wave is especially interested in California literary talent, and anything regarding the writings of local authors or of interest in their lives will be given attention.

Could Not Remember the Name.

In his "Literary Friends and Acquaintance," which the Harpers have just published, Mr. Howells tells a little anecdote of Emerson in his last years which is as interesting as it is pathetic.

The great thinker had come from his home to be present at the funeral of Longfellow.

He was but a wreck of what he had been, and his memory had altogether failed him.

He stood for some time beside the bier looking down into the dead poet's face struggling to recall him.

When the last ceremonies were over he said simply to the friend who accompanied him, "The gentleman we have just been burying was a sweet and beautiful soul; but I forget his name."

A Story of New Hampshire.

The always pathetic and as invariably romantic subject of the "abandoned farm" of New Hampshire furnishes the background of "Mountain Playmates," a story by Mrs. Helen R. Albee, which will be brought out in late October by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The "playmates" found their home and playground on an abandoned farm on a hilltop near Mount Chocorua, in New Hampshire. They "reclaimed" the land with skill, energy, and patience, made the house habitable, and the farm partially profitable. Then, following the Roycroft example, they took unto themselves other playmates and engaged in an industry which they developed into an art, giving remunerative and satisfying employment to many industrious women of the region. The book has a genial philosophy and a bright humor, it describes a beautiful country, and it narrates a story which carries one back to the work-spirit of William Morris, and also reminds one of "Fra Elbertus" and "East Aurora."

Miss Robins Improving.

Miss Elizabeth Robins, the well-known actress and the author of "The Open Question," a novel that had a great success a year or two ago, has been seriously ill for the past few months.

She left New York last spring for a trip to Alaska; but on her return was stricken with typhoid fever at Seattle.

The latest word received by her publishers was that she was recovering. The publication of her new novel has been postponed until the early part of 1901.

Secures "Wave's" Former Editor.

John O'Hara Cosgrave, former editor of the Wave, has taken the editorial position upon "Everbody's Magazine," John Wanamaker's new venture, in New York. Mr. Cosgrave has seen long service in the Pacific Coast field of literature and has won his spurs on a rocky road. He is a careful and able writer and student, and has a discriminating knowledge of what constitutes literature, both permanent and popular. The great Wanamaker firm is to be congratulated on securing this brilliant product of Californian advancement.

Lacking in Ideas.

There seems to be a woeful paucity of ideas on the lines of Christmas illustrations. The artists have certainly been worked to death during the past few years with the immense number of publications doing color-work Christmas specials. But two covers and one double page illustration of the same subject treated similarly in color scheme and in execution is an indication that either new material must be sought in the Christmas literary line or new artists brought to the front with some original ideas.

One of the finest covers of the month is Joel C. Leyendecker's "Wise Men with Presents" on December "Success." Kneeling with salvers and jewel-boxes, eyes downcast and reverent looks, the men from the east make obeisance to the new King. The colors are rich, in red, blue and gold.

Scribner's cover presents the same idea very similarly treated. One of the figures is standing. In both pictures the Christ child is not shown, but indicated in the positions of the wise men.

The third similar drawing is one of F. V. Dumond's illustrations to Milton's "Ode on the Nativity" in the Centurg. It is strikingly like Leyendecker's cover in its handling of color, and bears a resemblance in the postures of the wise men bearing presents.

The Christmas number of "Success" is a remarkable issue in the line of refined art and helpful literature. Edwin Markham opens with his greatest poem since "The Man with the Hoe." It is entitled "The Mighty Hundred Years." W. T. Stead arraigns his own government for its Boer War policy in scathing terms; while J. Henniker Heaton, M. P., writes hopefully of the unwritten alliance of the Anglo-Americans. S. R. Crockett is represented by a clever piece of fiction entitled "Tadmor in the Wilderness," the story of a poor clergyman who won renown. Grace McKinley, niece of the President, is shown in her new environment as a schoolteacher. A masterly summary of the achievements of the century, illustrated by forty drawings, is not the least brilliant in the long list.

"Her Guard of Honor," by Miriam Michelson, in the December "Smart Set" is the strongest short story that has been published in this country in recent years. It cannot be read without profound emotion. The leading characters are an actress and her son. The child, whom she worships passionately, constitutes himself her guard of honor, and finds his task difficult.

The fact that Andrew Carnegie has just pledged himself to the foundation of a technical institute at Pittsburg, at an expense of $3,000,000 or so, gives special timeliness to the publication of his book expounding "The Gospel of Wealth," with an introductory sketch telling how he served his apprenticeship as a business man. Mr. Carnegie has thus far devoted about $15,000,000 to philanthropic purposes, in accordance with the principles laid down in his essays.

H. Reuterdahl, the marine artist, has returned from abroad with drawings to illustrate a series of articles on the life and customs in the Navies of the World which will appear in early numbers of "Collier's Weekly." His sketches were obtained under great difficulties and in spite of the fact that the naval regulations of most countries forbid the presence of an artist on board their various ships. This is the first time in the history of journalism that an emissary of an American paper has successfully managed to penetrate the Chinese wall of secrecy surrounding the navies of Europe.

From 324 illustrations in 1894 to over 1600 in 1900 are the figures which denote the numerical growth and development of the pictorial features in the "Ladies Home Journal" in six years. This 400 per cent increase in numbers is rather dwarfed by the fact that nearly 1000 per cent more space is now given to pictures than six years ago, and that the quality, or artistic value, of the illustrations has improved beyond computation. A few years ago magazine making was thought by some to have attained a degree of perfection that precluded further advancement, but it seems to have been in its infancy. The reading public now insists upon illustrations, and in meeting that demand it is safe that the pictures printed in the "Ladies' Home Journal" in 1900 exceed in number, size, quality and cost those published in all the leading magazines ten years ago.

One of the best novels in Gertrude Atherton's succession of literary successes is "The Doomswoman," an historical romance of old California. The reading public quickly exhausted the small first edition issued a few years ago, and was delighted with it. But the failure of the publishers, which was almost simultaneous with the issue of the book, caused its withdrawal from the market. The Continental Publishing Company of New York, having secured all rights in the book, novel readers will be glad to learn that a new and beautiful edition will shortly be issued. The full force of the title is given in a quotation from an old Spanish manuscript:

"For it is believed that the woman who is twin is also the woman of doom; that in her doth abide the power to heal and to curse; to give and to know the highest joy and deepest sorrow; her love exalts, her hate blasts; in her nature is iron and fire, and the fire shall melt the iron; calm is not her lot, nor the lot of those whose fate is hers—and so unto the end."

The Continental Publishing Company also have in hand for early publication a collection of Mrs. Atherton's best short stories of the old days in California. Some of them appeared in the magazines and added greatly to her literary reputation. "The Splendid Idle Forties" is to be the title of this book.

The "strenuous life" of the football season has its literary accompaniment in Mr. R. H. Barbour's brilliant new story, "For the Honor of the School," which pictures football as well as track athletics and cross-country runs. Mr. Barbour's successful football tale, "The Half-Back," published last year by D. Appleton & Company, is said to hold its own this year as one of the most sought-for juvenile books.

Stephen Crane was "discovered" by English readers, and it looks as if a new American writer in Crane's own field is to win noteworthy recognition from the same source. The publishers say that a large edition of "Who Goes There" has been taken up by English readers. This is the story of a spy in the Civil War and a love story too; but its interest turns on the spy's loss of memory—amnesia—while in the enemy's camp. The first American edition was exhausted the day after its publication by the Macmillan Company.

"The Eagle's Heart," Mr. Hamlin Garland's new romance, promises to add another striking success to the list of remarkably successful American novels published within the last two or three years. The book is attracting much attention in England, while in this country there has already been a demand for new editions.

Books Received.

Afterglow: Later Poems; by Julia C. R. Dorr. (Charles Scribner's Sons.) $1.25.

The Riddle of the Universe; by Prof. Ernst Haeckle. (Harper & Bros.)

A Bicycle of Cathay, by Frank R. Stockton. (Harper & Bros.)

The Stickit Minister's Wooing; by S. R. Crockett. (Doubleday & McClure Co.)

Lord Jim; a romance; by Joseph Conrad. (Doubleday & McClure Co.)

The Problem of Asia; by A. J. Mahan D. C L., L. L.D. (Little Brown & Co.) $2.00.

Boy's Book of Explorations; by Tudor Jenks. (Doubleday, Page & Co.) $2.00.

Napoleon the Last Phase; by Roseberg. (Harper & Bros.) $3.00.

In the Hands of the Cave Dwellers; by George A. Henty. (Harper & Bros.) $1.00.

Songs of the Old South; by Howard Weeden. (Doubleday, Page & Co.) $1.50.

Sister Carrie; by Theodore Dreiser. Doubleday, Page & Co.) $1.50.)

Woman of the Bible; by Eminent Divines. (Harper & Bros.)

GLUTTONY

Is more common than we may think, if we define gluttony as eating beyond the body's need of sustenance and beyond the stomach's capacity for digestion and assimilation of food. That is a fair definition, and it fastens the name glutton on many a person who would resent the term as an insult. The fact of this gluttony is marked by its consequences. The overloaded stomach becomes diseased. The popular term for the condition is "weak" stomach. The "weak" stomach fails in furnishing adequate nutrition for the body, and soon the "weakness" spreads from the stomach to other organs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enables the perfect assimilation of food, by which alone the health and strength of the body is maintained.

"Your medicine helped me so much that I cannot praise it too highly," writes Mrs. C. L. Brooks, of Poland, Androscoggin Co., Me. "The first dose I took helped me. I cannot forget how I felt when I took it; I was suffering everything with indigestion, and my stomach was so bloated that it seemed as though it must burst. My husband said he was going for the doctor, but I said if he would get me a bottle of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' I would try that. I had not taken it long when I felt relieved, and have not had a touch of indigestion or stomach trouble since. I had been sick for four years, and less than four bottles cured me. Some people that knew me before I began to take the 'Golden Medical Discovery' tell me that they never saw such a change in any one, and they also say they don't see how I can do such large washings as I do now, when I had not done a washing for so long."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

Strength, Vitality, Manhood, THE CHIEF GLORY OF MAN.

KNOW THYSELF!

The Science of Life, or Self Preservation,

A Great Medical Book for Every Man—The Million Embossed cloth, full gilt, elegant Library edition, ONLY $1.00. In paper covers, ONLY 25c. Get the best. It contains 370 pp., with engravings, 125 prescriptions for Acute and Chronic Diseases, and is the Gold Medal Prize Treatise on Aptitude and Inaptitude for Wedded Happiness, Premature Decline, Nervous and Physical Debility, Exhausted Vitality, Manhood, Varicocele, Atrophy (wasting) and ALL DISEASES and WEAKNESSES OF MEN, from whatever cause arising. The distinguished author and Nervo specialist graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1864 and has been the Chief Consulting Physician to The Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch St. (opposite Revere House) Boston, Mass., during the past thirty years. Know Thyself Manual, a Vade Mecum Pamphlet, Free to every male reader of this paper; 6 cents for postage. Write for these books to-day. They are the keys to health, vigor, manhood and happiness. Address as above. Consultation by letter or in person from 9 to 6. Sundays 10 to 1. Expert treatment and positive cure.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute is a fixed fact in the medical phenomena of this country, and it will remain so.—Boston Journal.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute has many imitators, but no equals.—Boston Herald.

The Saint and the Sinners.

Mr. Horace Wispear was one of the holiest men breathing, and he breathed very hard and snuffed between whiles. He was wealthy, too, having made his money in advocating Christian principles and ignoring these himself in business hours. No employer got more work out of his men for less wages than he did, and he expected them to give more than they received, as his religion directed.

Yet somehow, he had enemies. He went to church regularly, he gave liberally to charities when his name was advertised, he was even prepared to give a good man work if he would work for less money than the ungodly, and yet some people had no love for him.

He went to Paris, and while there met and reproved some young men whom he had known at home, and he was so circumspect in his conduct that the Recording Angel had absolutely nothing to debit his account with during his stay. Yet when he returned, and revisited his special church, good folks looked away when he came near them, and the pastor called him aside after the service.

"Brother," said his reverence, "this is indeed sad."

"It seems so," said Wispear. "What is the calamity? Everyone seems desolated."

"Be not unseemly, sir," said the pastor, severely, and then drew a photograph from his pocket and gave it to the saint.

A SKIRT DANCER.

Wispear looked at it in horror. It depicted him side by side with a lady in tights.

"Brother," he cried, "there is some mistake here."

"There is, indeed, but there is yet time for repentance."

"But I didn't do it. I never saw the woman."

"Oh! brother, brother!" groaned the pastor. "To fall is terrible, to lie about it is more terrible."

"Lie yourself!" said Wispear, hotly "I tell you I never saw the woman."

"Do you deny that this is a likeness of yourself, brother?"

"No, that's true; but the woman—I swear I never saw her."

"Brother, go home and pray, and when you have repented, come and see me again," said the pastor kindly.

"I'll be hanged if I do," said the saint, foaming.

"Then we cannot meet again. Yet I hope——"

"Oh! go to—well, you know," said Wispear, and, going home, he wrote a check out and sent it to another minister, and intimated that he should join his congregation. Yet the check came back, for the photograph had gone the rounds, and now the saint is an outcast, and no one has told him how easy it is for a photographer to work up two photographs into one.

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

Lady Francis Hope.

Lady Francis Hope has disappointed many of her old acquaintances who thought that a title might have increased her ideas of her own importance. She is quite as unpresuming as ever and rides now in a cable car with as much apparent satisfaction as she exhibited on the Broadway horse car before she went to England and became accustomed to hansoms and other luxuries of the titled London actress. After her marriage Lady Francis Hope is said with characteristic American independence to have made no effort to become reconciled with her husband's relatives. She continued to lead the life to which she was accustomed and made no changes, in view of the great name and position that may some day be hers. So if her husband ever does become a duke she will have altered in no particular way since the time of her theatrical career.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, price 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper-hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.,

TEL. 5610 609 Sacramento St.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

MRS. SACHT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

DIRECTIONS.—Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT

Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:

Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt

708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.

Telephone Polk 1321

Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.

J. Isacson, Pharmacist, cor. Geary and Larkin sts.

Phone E. 406

Sunset Limited

For the Season of 1900=1901

Tri=Weekly

Leave SAN FRANCISCO	Leave LOS ANGELES
Mondays	Tuesdays
Wednesdays	Thursdays
Fridays	Saturdays
5:00 P. M.	8:00 A. M.

ARRIVE NEW ORLEANS, 7:20 P. M. MONDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS.

MORE BRILLIANT THAN EVER
NEW EQUIPMENT
IMPROVED SERVICE

Secure Time Tables and any desired information from Any S. P. Co's Agent.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters "Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

Naber, Alfs & Brune, Agents,

323-325 MARKET STREET. S. F., CAL

Caught by an Advertisement

Concluded from page 10.

lovely, tender face of Juliette. And without a word she was enfolded in her lovers arms!

* * * *

It is told in the quarter that Hector has married Juliette and that her happiness is great, but I would not advise the reader, should he find himself in the same situation as my hero, to follow his example. Such fantasias, in love and music, end in this harmonious fashion only under the hand of the romancer!

Inconsistent Woman.

While visiting in the East she learned that her fiance had once been engaged to a girl who lives in Providence. Of course she insisted on meeting this girl, jealously recognizing that she was handsome, bright and unusually attractive.

"I have heard," the Detroit girl finally blurted out, "that you and Harry used to think a great deal of each other."

"Fiddlesticks! He was a little boy and I a little girl. Just pappy love, don't you know. He went west and had the good sense to fall in love with you and I'm going to marry at Easter."

"But who broke it off?"

"Neither of us. We just drifted apart. Harry's a capital fellow and he was fortunate in finding you. I want you both at my wedding. Remember me kindly to him and congratulate him."

All this was tactful, but the young lady came home annoyed because Harry had been engaged and because he had never told her of it.

"Why," he said, when brought to book, "I never thought it worth mentioning. We were mere children. I long since ceased to think of her as more than a friend."

"But she's a sweet girl."

"Very."

"And she's stylish, vivacious and smart."

"Yes."

"And much more beautiful than I."

"Ye——; why, darling, you don't mean it," for she was holding the ring toward him, her eyes flashing and her face as hard as granite.

It required an hour of endearing words, praise and caresses to get that ring back where he wanted it.—Detroit Free Press.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER & CO.

5 & 7 DRUMM STREET,

San Francisco, Cal.

Yosemite Engraving Company.

Makers of High Grade Printing Plates,

Half-Tone a Specialty.

24 Montgomery St., S. F. Cal.

After losing a thick head of hair, I was recommended to use Mrs. Sacht's Hair Restorer, upon using I found it strengthened both the scalp and roots of the hair thus producing the former growth.

MR. E. A DEHAY, 756 Bush St., S. F.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports. 11 a. m., Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For Victoria, Vancouver, B. C. Port Townsend, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Anacortes and New Whatcom, Wash., 11 a. m. Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, and every fifth day thereafter. Change at Seattle for this company's steamers for Alaska and G. N. Ry.; at Seattle or Tacoma to N. P. Ry.; at Vancouver to C. P Ry.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Dec. 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Jan. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Santa Barbara Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles)—Steamer Queen, Wed. 9a. m. seamer Santa Rosa. Sun. 9 a.m.

For Santa Cruz, Monteyey, San Simeon Cayucos, Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Gaviota, Santa Barbarba. Ventura, Hueneme, San Pedro (Los Angeles) and Newport—Steamea Corona, Fripays, 9 a. m. steamer Bonita, Tuesdays, 9 a. m.

For Ensenada, Magdalena Bay, San Sose del Cabo, Muzatlin, Altata, La Paz, Santa Rosalia and Guaymas, Mexico, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE -4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S. S. Sierra for Honolulu Samoa, New Zealand and Australia Wed. Dec. 12th, 9 p. m.

S. S. Australia. for Tahiti, Sunday .Jan 6, 4 p.m.

S.S. Zealandia for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, Dec. 22, 6. p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

REFRESHING SLEEP.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Taken just before retiring quiets the nerves, nourishes the tired and confused brain and induces refreshing sleep.

Genuine bears name HORSFORD'S on wrapper.

Going to San Jose?

"The Stanford"

is one of the most centrally located rooming houses in San Jose. It is especially desirable for traveling men and tourists. Everything clean and first class and rates are reasonable.

MRS. McCUNE, Prop.

192 South 1st St., San Jose, Cal.

Pears

obtained the only

Grand Prize

awarded solely for toilet soap at the Paris Exhibition, 1900.

This is the highest award obtainable for anything.

Pears' Soap has obtained 21 International awards.

A TOILET NECESSITY

Wakelee's

Cold Cream of Roses

—MADE WITH—

Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

Bausch & Lomb-Zeiss Stereo Binoculars The most compact Field Glasses made, with the Highest power. Prices, $47.50 to $80.00.

Send for Illustrated Booklet

Geo. H. Kahn.

OPTICIAN.

201 KEARNY ST., CORNER OF SUTTER

KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention A Quiet Home . . . . Centrally Located . . San Francisco, California

WM. B. HOOPER, - - MANAGER.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York. . . . .

American and European Plan

WILLIAM T. BANG, Pro.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM For a Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave. Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home! BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., - - San Francisco

Thuringia Insurance Co. Capital, $2,250,000 Assets, $10,984,248

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S.F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO. General Agents.

Cotton Sail Ducks Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks. Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.

Murphy, Grant & Co

Sutter Street Hammam

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON [Phone Main 5178]

TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS

Open Day and Night for Gentlemen For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co. Portland, Or.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt. 37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital . $2,000,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits, Oct 1, 1900 $3,514,068.82

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China-Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN

Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900.....28,938,395.02

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary.....George Tourney
Assistant Secretary.....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann, Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker, H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.

Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

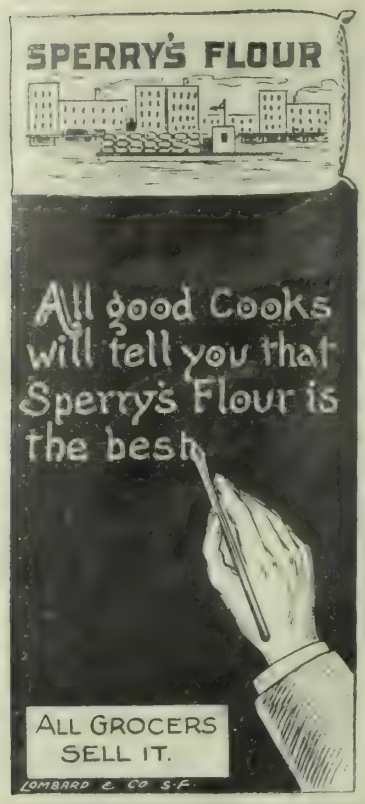
No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 305.



Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Byron Mauzy Pianos

308-312 POST STREET

SOHMER Satisfactory to the Eye and Ear. PIANO AGENCY

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

This brand of Wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St.

A. REPSOLD & CO.

FIGPRUNE CEREAL

A Perfect Food Beverag

54% Fruit

46% Grain

100 - and nothing else

A Substitute for Coffee. Nourishing a Invigorating. YOUR GROCER SELLS

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager.

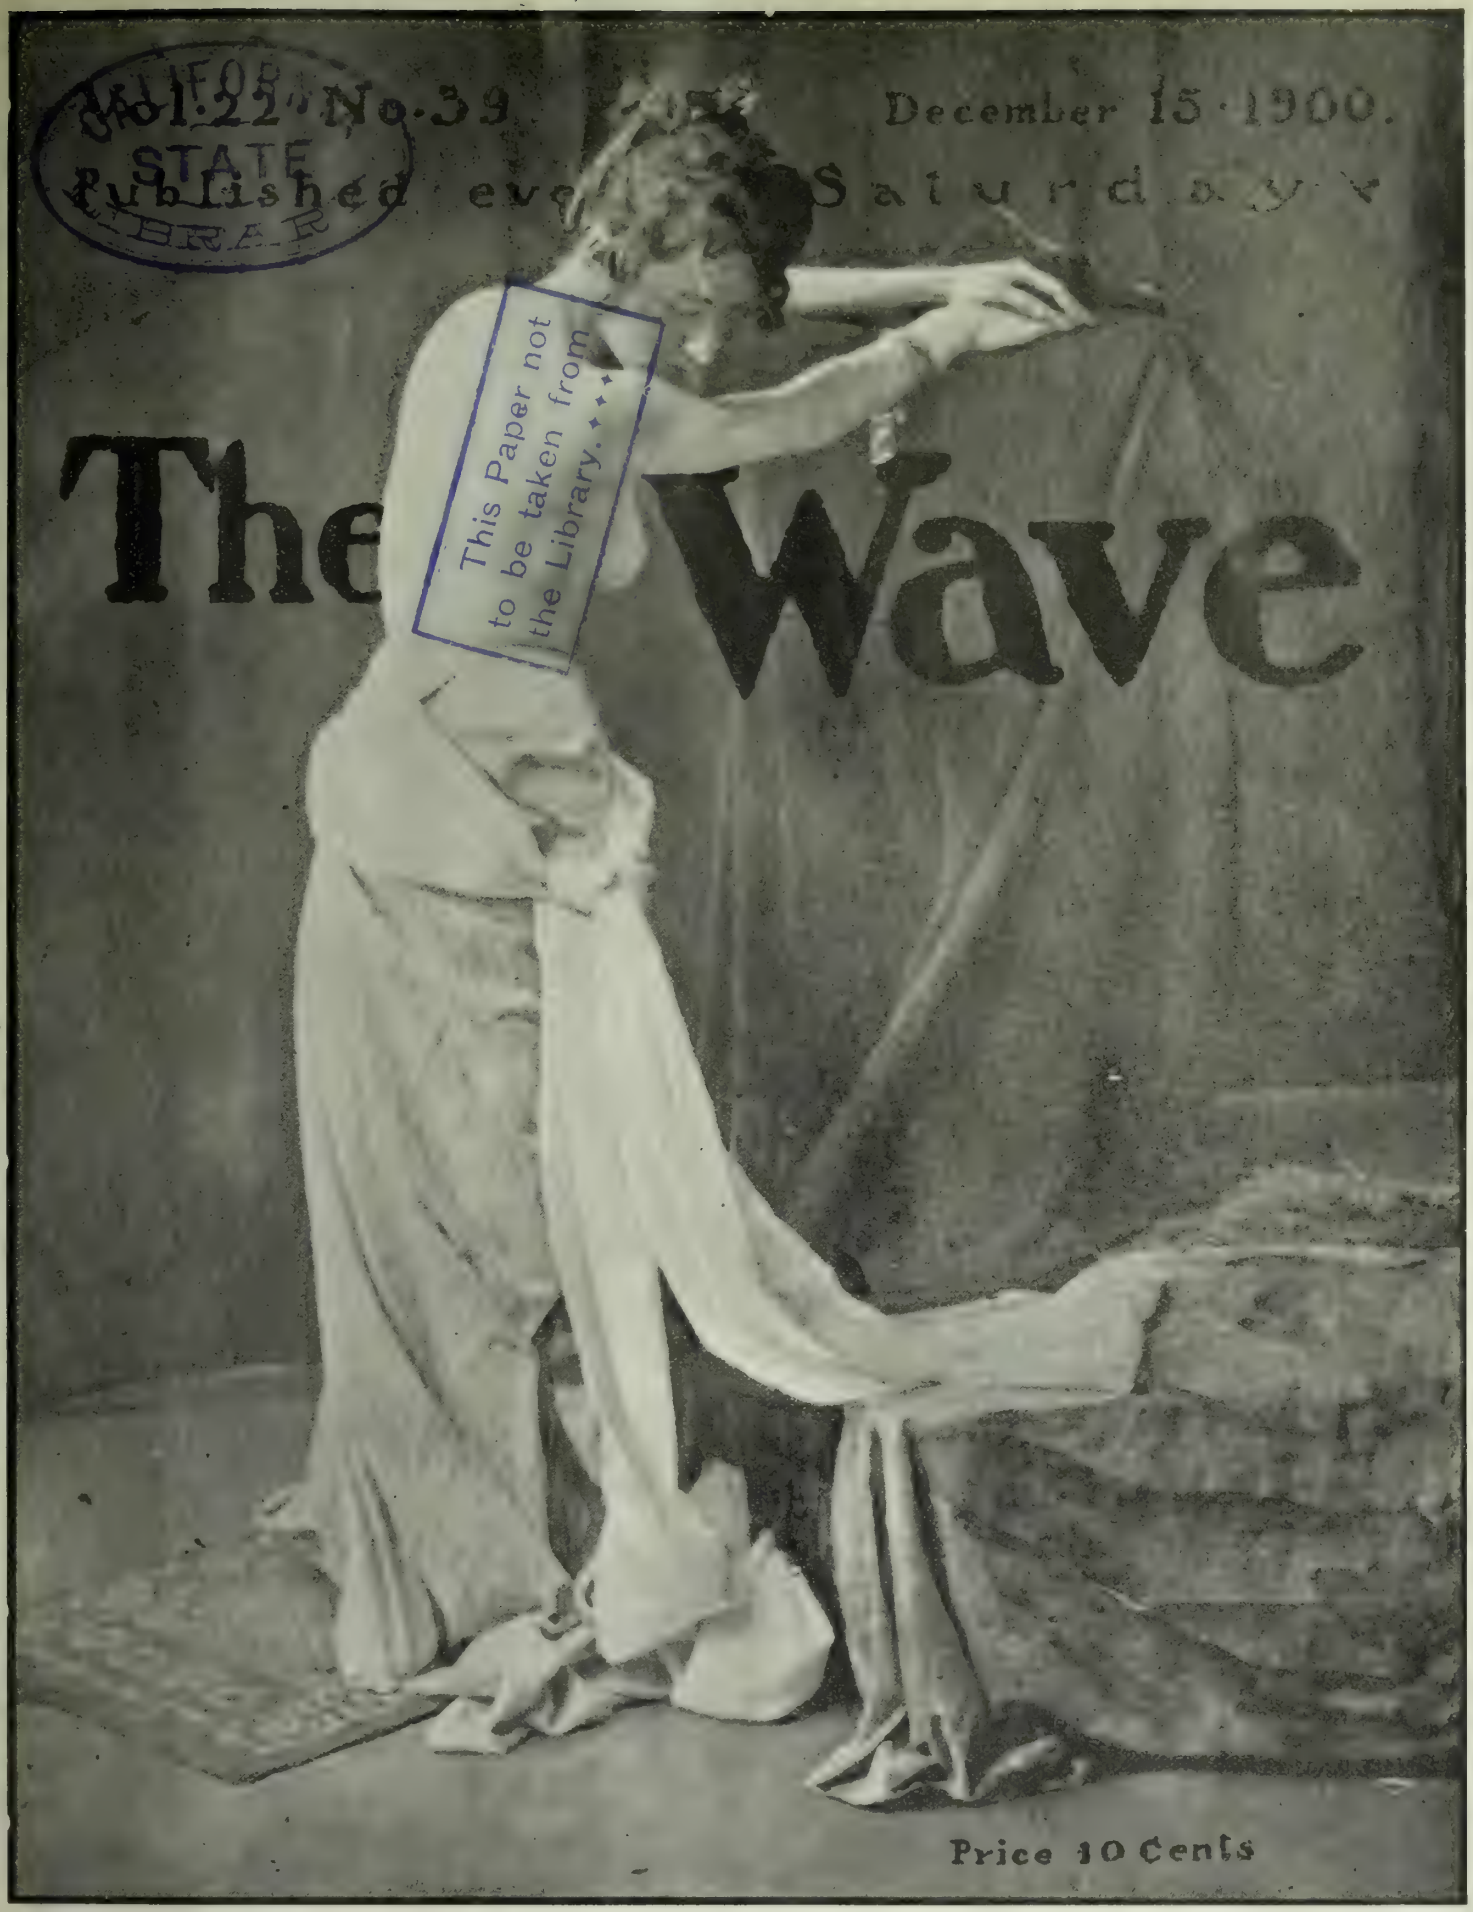
Monterey, California

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

Vol. 22 No. 39 December 15 1900.
Published every Saturday

This Paper not to be taken from the Library.

The Wave



Price 10 Cents

THE WAVE

Published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the Post Office second class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE COMPANY, PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—December 15, 1900

Our Governmental Aristocracy.

It is reported that Mayor Phelan will in January appoint J. Downey Harvey as member of that Municipal Aristocracy, our government, as Park Commissioner to succeed Frederick Zeile.

As the appointment will be that of an alleged Democrat to succeed a so-called Democrat, it illustrates how the Democracy is advancing.

Who can now urge that the party is composed of the vulgar common people—laborers, mechanics and shopkeepers? Why, the Democracy is getting into society, attending cotillions, placing its legs under the tables of the rich, eating fine food, drinking good wine and learning to talk small talk.

This is as it should be. The common people have had their way long enough. They should be suppressed. And if Mayor Phelan can make of the local Democracy an aristocracy, make it fashionable and have it attend pink teas and other social functions, he will have accomplished a great work, and future generations of fobs and snobs will call him blessed.

And why should not Mr. Harvey become a member of our government? Is he not very rich? And is not that a sufficient title to office? Have we not Scriptural authority for this? To him who hath shall be given? Then Mr. Harvey has an additional advantage. He did not earn his wealth. Therefore it is not contaminated by contact with the struggling and intolerable herd sometimes called the masses. No, he inherited his prosperity, and this makes him additionally eligible. As for the arguments that this man has never performed any service for this city, or for the party of which he is accused of being a member—such suggestions may have had weight in former times, but no longer. Mr. Harvey has higher claims to public honor than civic or party service: Have not he and Mr. Phelan for years guzzled together? And should not that entitle him to be one of the Court that supports the throne of the Lord Mayor?

The Law Resumes Sway.

After all it appears that the judges of the Superior Court are not going to be destroyed on account of the Civil Service Suit.

After W. R. Hearst had struck an attitude in true story book style, and said "Fee, fo, fi, fum! I am going to eat some one; observe me eat a judge!" the whole affair has flattened out. Nobody has been eaten and the case goes to the Supreme Court like any other case.

After declaring their wish for martyrdom, their willingness to go to jail for the principle, the Civil Service Commissioners suddenly stopped talking, did nothing, and law takes its course. This is as it should be. But in the light of the bellicose intentions expressed immediately after the decision, the people have a right to inquire what soothed the bold and melodramatic commissioners.

The truth is that these worthies had been led to believe that contempt of a Superior Court judgment would in all probability lead to nothing more serious than a formal commitment to jail for a day and a Habeas Corpus to the Supreme Court.

Without any inconvenience to themselves, they would thus receive an extensive advertisement much to the delight of their vanity and would play a part in mock heroics to a supposedly admiring public. But the rumor spread about the city that Judge Hebbard did not regard lightly a contempt of a solemn judgment of a Superior Court, and that if the lawbreaking Commissioners were brought before him, he would in all likelihood place against them respectively, a five hundred dollar fine. As the charter requires that no money be paid by the city to any person who is owing the city money until the city debt is paid, Messrs. Freud, McCarthy and Quinn would not have been able to draw their salaries until the fines had been collected from the Commissioners.

This settled the matter. The celebrated vocal organ of McCarthy was stilled, Freud withdrew into the secret recesses of the Merchants' Association, Quinn disappeared from public view, and law and order resumed sway in Ssn Francisco.

His Sentence.

"Stand up, Henry Oxnard.

"You have been found guilty by this Social Court of a grave crime, that of marrying beneath you. The evidence shows that you fell in love with a lady's-maid; that you overset all the laws of society by offering her honorable marriage; that such marriage has been consummated and that you now present this woman as your wife.

"It has been presented in your defense that the young woman is refined, cultivated, honest, good and handsome; that she has been obliged, in order to secure a livelihood, to have recourse to work; that she has been able and conscientious in this work; and that there is nothing in her past life to reflect upon her character or disqualify her from holding a place in society.

"This defense is entirely outside of the case and can have no bearing before this Court. The jury, under instructions, gave it no recognition, and their conviction is absolute.

"There is no necessity for this Court to expatiate upon the heinousness of your offense. You were an eligible parti and widows, spinsters and debutantes in society regarded you, and had the right to regard you, as a possible husband. By marrying outside of this class, you have left a vacancy which it is difficult to fill. In taking for your wife a lady's maid, you have gone still deeper into crime and there is no forgiveness, no charity in this Court for you.

"The argument made in your defense can only be regarded as ridiculous and as an insult to this Court. The statement that other women now in San Francisco society, have at some time in their career worked for a living, have taken in washing and kept corner grocery stores, is simply malicious. The assertion that Society is not morally clean and the insinuation that women in society have broken the laws of the Commandments, is absurd and has nothing to do with the case. There is no charge before this Court that the woman you have married is not altogether too good for you; there is no question but that she will be a help to your future life instead of a hindrance; there is no doubt but that your happiness is assured. Your crime is marrying out of your social sphere—out of the Four Hundred.

"Henry Oxnard, listen to the sentence of this Court.

"You shall, for the term of your natural life, be ostracised by Society and your wife shall not be received.

"Take the prisoner away."

California's New Industry.

Recent developments in the oil fields of California prove conclusively that the industry is not only a permanent one but its scope is far greater than has been imagined even by the most sanguine. The fields now extend from Colusa county to San Diego and new territory is constantly being proven as oil bearing after careful investigation. The production in the developed fields, notably Bakersfield, McKittrick, Coalinga, and Sunset districts and in the old producing fields of Ventura county has now reached a point that settles definitely the fuel question on this coast and has attracted the attention of the large financiers of the East.

The one thing above all others that has caused worry in the minds of the heavier manufacturers of California is the question of fuel. The high price of coal has always been a thorn in the side of the manufacturer and has caused many to leave the field. With this problem settled by cheap oil fuel the advancement in manufactures can not be over-estimated.

San Francisco has barely awakened to the significance of this wondeful discovery of oil. It may be due to the fact that California has always been a state of great mining discoveries and the people do not enthuse as readily as elsewhere. Certain it is that the East is more alive to the opportunities here than our own capitalists and money is coming in large amounts from eastern financial centers. The Standard Oil Co. is early securing what it can of the best wells and has recently purchased the Pacific Coast properties in Ventura county. Other financiers have men in the fields watching developments and purchasing properties.

There are at present probably more than five hundred companies organized to deal in oil or oil stock in California. Fully two-thirds of these are seeking the capital for development in small amounts by the sale of stock. Many of these companies are wild-cat and any investment in them is, of course, lost; but they are of short life and will soon be lost to sight as the business settles down to a permanent basis.

Frank Symmes for Mayor.

The appearance of Frank Symmes at the banquet of the Merchants' Association programmed to speak against the acquisition of public utilities has established that person's candidacy, at least among his friends for the Republican nomination for Mayor.

The Merchants' Association, it is claimed, desires to remain in control of the city government, having become less a civic improvement society than a political club. Consequently it is grooming available candidates. But Mr. Symmes is not available. He is a director of the Spring Valley Water Company, the corporation which has the heaviest dealings with the city and with its inhabitants, and which is most interested against municipal ownership of public utilities, and although the Merchants' Association, which is largely composed of stockholders in quari public corporations may have concluded that the time has arrived to suppress the agitation for acquisition of public utilities, it is a mistake to suppose that the people are similarly inclined.

The citizens of San Francisco believe in the acquisition of public utilities and this belief makes Mr. Symmes ineligible to the office of Mayor.

"Examiner" Will Have to Pay.

The case of Mize against Hearst, which grew out of a libel of the Examiner against the plaintiff, and in which Mize obtained a large verdict against Hearst in Judge Daingerfield's court, and the refusal to grant a new trial in which action was one of the causes of the Examiner's bitterness towards Dangerfield in the late campaign, has been affirmed by the Supreme Court and Hearst will have to pay the verdict, interest and costs. The newspaper defense association which is composed of all the daily papers, forbids the news of any libel suit to be published. But it is well that the people should know that justice is sometimes meted to the powerful so that the helplessness of the individual may not become too much accentuated.

Wilde's Last Poem.

Ah! happy they whose hearts can break
And peace of pardon win!
How else may man make straight his plan
And cleanse his soul from sin?
How else but through a broken heart
May Lord Christ enter in?

And he of the swollen purple throat
And the dark staring eyes
Waits for the holy hands that took
The Thief to Paradise;
And a broken and a contrite heart
The Lord will not despise.

* * * *

And all men kill the thing they love,
By all let this be heard;
Some do it with a bitter look,
Some with a flattering word.
The coward does it with a kiss,
The brave man with a sword!

—Oscar Wilde, (The Ballad of Reading Gaol.)

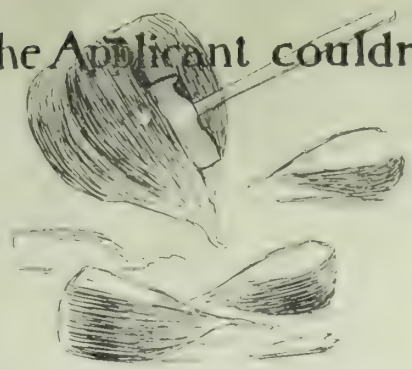
The Applicant couldn't Stand the Strain



Once in a while the inherent Irish wit of Police Commissioner George A. Newhall overflows its bounds and bubbles out like a spring of sparkling Napa soda. He can not stop it or stem its merry tide. Before it men go down in the convulsions of hysteric laughter —that is, if it is necessary to hold their jobs.

He is a wit of the Eddie Foy class, or perhaps more like the clown in a three ring circus. His jokes have that effervescent quality which made Joe Miller's joke book a classic.

One day during the examination of applicants for the position of protector of San Francisco's peace, the information came in answer to a question, that the man had formerly been a gripman on the Market street car-line. This was Newhall's opening and his humor was irrepressible during the balance of the civil service examination.

"If you were detailed" he asked, "on the water front, do you believe you could catch the grippe?"

There was a howl of merry laughter. The applicant doubled up and rolled about the floor holding his sides and shrieking with the humor of the sally. When he had sufficiently recovered to arise, Commissioner Newhall, with sparkling eyes, sprang this:

"If you laid hands on a thief, could you hold your grip?"

The paroxysms were again violent. As soon as the laugh subsided, Newhall, who could barely control his witticisms from burning his tongue, cried again,

"If you had the grippe and should see a thief grip a grip and jump a grip could you grip your grip on the grip and the thief?"

This was a trifle complex and the laughter was not so long and had a tired ring about it. But Newhall was just "getting good." He realized better than anyone present that he was making the hit of his life and wondered if he could not send out for a reporter to take it all down. He gave his masterpiece.

"Now Mr. Gripman; you are anxious to grip your grip on this job. If you do grip your grip on this job and and don't catch the grippe will you grip the duties of the office as you would grip the grip and the grip and jump the grip if the thief stole a grip?"

"Sir," said the applicant politely but firmly, "I have done my best to laugh at these previous ones you put out. But I'd rather not have the job, sir. I'll go."

"Your poem used? I should say not," answered the editor.

"Would you give me a criticism of it?"

"Certainly. It's clumsy and vulgar and unspeakably idiotic."

"Good!"

"Good?"

"Yes, set it to music, and it will become a popular song."—The King.

Over the Demi-Tasse

She was a coffin-dealers wife and she looked on the maid with scorn.

"You are not of the aristocracy, you are not to the purple born,

"You have failed to pass the Fortnightly's list and my dear friend Mrs. McClung

"Has never sent you her 'at home' card, and your door bell has never rung.

"Go back to your Alameda cows and the pastoral life you have led,

"For my husband's caskets will rot in their graves before Horace and you are wed."

Giving him Good Advice.

Now Horace Morgan, listen to some good advice. It isn't expected you will follow it, but read it over carefully, for it won't hurt you, and remember all the time that it isn't the fault of the papers of San Francisco that your private affairs are public property. Your family has used the columns of every daily and weekly in San Francisco for years past to hoist themselves into social prominence, and now there is no use in objecting just because a certain style of handling this present affair does not suit you. It is the only good news story in all the endless rot that has been published concerning the Morgan family, and this is the first opportunity the papers have had to even up for the puffs they have given you. Then again, remember that if these puffs had not wafted your family into society, the present affair would have amounted to nothing as a news story, and would have been given but two lines in the Sunday social column, something like this: "The engagement is announced of Miss Lillian Beaumont and Horace Morgan, son of W. P. Morgan, president of the California Casket Co."

But for the advice: You are now on the inside of that higher strata of individuals known as Society, with the upper-case S. You have had the opportunity to guage it pretty accurately. You have seen the class of men and women who make up the aggregation and have been able to determine the value of their approval or disapproval. You know it is not the aristoracy of many generations of noble names or blue blood; that the money bags rule it with the absolute monarchial government of an empire.

Have you, personally, as a unit in this combination, any especial reasons for social rank? Have you long lines of ancestors or is your name in Burke's peerage? Your father's business of selling coffins has given him wealth, but has it given him the right to look askance at anyone who does not move in the same social set?

There have been objections made to your engagement by members of your family on account of a difference in social positions. If you give such advice attention, you place yourself in the same category as the objector and forfeit all right to any good girl's love. If your fiancee goes to Europe now, the wager is a safe one that you never marry her. Parental objections are stumbling blocks to matrimony and there is no evidence in your career that you are stronger than circumstances.

Is the girl not worth the giving up of social position? If not then give her up. If she is, marry her rent a flat and go to work to earn her an honest living.

Lady Teazle's Twaddle.

It was oh! such a lovely time! I was there. So was Mrs. Eleanor Martin. She had on a blue bombazine gown direct from Paris, cut on the bias with scallops a la pinky-pank-punk. So sweet! And Therese Morgan wore her Bohemian Club portrait. It was a novel idea and so pretty. I was there, too.

Everyone had a good time. So did I. Bernice Drown and Olive Holbrook led the German. Olive's gown was sea shrimp polonaise over turtle dove denim trimmed about the bottom with ostrich feathers, and Bernice was a Sunday supplement half-tone in three colors. I know them both.

Of course I went to Della Mills' card party. Why shouldn't I go—they have refreshments? Mrs. Eleanor Martin wasn't there nor was Therese Morgan, but I was. Such fun as we had! It was the most original and unique affair I have attended this year. Della confided to me afterwards that she felt shaky in the knees, but I didn't.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin was at home last Friday and I was there, too. So was Therese Morgan.—Sunday Chronicle.

Sally Sharp's Slop.

I predict that Mrs. Eleanor Martin's rhinocerous-hide tea next Friday will be the jolliest affair of the holiday season. That settles it, because when I predict, things have to drop. My rates for predictions sent on application.

I am still wearing blue goggles from the glare of Therese Morgan's portrait in the Bohemian Club. Such a work of art! and oh, such a dress! I'll wager a bunch of dried carrots against an old cheese, that her gown was an imported one and that the paint it was done in was imported too. White organdie, appliqued in gorgeous Ecrustan pattern on white mosquito net and the whole made over green canvas. When I caught my first glimpse of that gown, I could not rest until I had criticised the painting.

I went to the Fortnightly last Friday and am still anxiously seeking for information and fairly perishing to know what has become of poor old Ned Greenway.—Monday Call.

Now, Chief Sullivan, Warn the Attorneys.

Chief Sullivan has warned the presidents of the threatening highbinder tongs to be good. Past history gives no encouragement in this system of preventing bloodshed in the quarter. If the chief would go to the American attorneys of the rival tongs, who draw monthly salaries to aid and abet murder and prevent its legal punishment, and hold these attorneys personally responsible for any outbreak in Chinatown, the war would be over.

Some people may not know that each highbinder tong has its attorney, that these attorneys are members of the local bar association and in good standing, that they receive a regular salary as a retainer, besides fees for each case, and that they are consulted before any serious move, such as the beginning of a war or the concoction of a murder. These attorneys trade upon their profession to commit the gravest of crimes, and were the victims white, and were they not attorneys, would hang for their participation in the murders.

Babies of the Rich.

There is more fuss upon earth over one baby born to the Very Rich, than to the ninety and nine that are lost.

While columns pile upon columns in our daily papers, describing the new Vanderbilt baby, born to San Francisco's own "Birdie;" fighting over the naming and mussing about its dainty clothes; detailing to disgust its every move and cry and rioting in the rot of its many christening presents; while the Vanderbilt baby holds the entire center of the stage with the lime-light turned on full head, Dr. G. W. O'Donnell, professional abortionist, accused of murder and convicted of using the mail for unlawful purposes in advertising his foul and obnoxious trade is passed over as a matter of no import. His business has been to prevent the coming of the stork to the homes of the rich and he has made a fortune out of his practice. Caught now in the place where fines can not buy him clear, he will be defended by the ablest attorneys his wealthy patients' money can secure

He Took the Advice.

A certain club man who lives across the bay has been devoted for a long time to a pretty girl. Recently he read in the "Heart to Heart Talk" column of a local paper, which seems always to have an interest to men contemplating matrimony, the following advice: "Before marrying a girl, look her mother over."

The young man did so with the cheerful result that he is now engaged to the mother.

Entitled to a Trial by her Peers.

Is the constitutional right of an American citizen to be tried by a jury of his peers, not being infringed in New York? Bridget White was on trial in that city for slander. Bridget is a respectable, clean and honest scrub woman. She is a naturalized American and entitled to every privelege of the law of this country.

In the jury box during the trial sat William Rockefeller, J. Pierpont Morgan, Peter Cooper Hewitt, Frederick T. Adams and several other millionaires, to pass judgment on this honest American citizeness. To prove they were not her peers, they laughed audibly at her Irish brogue and at last Pierpont Morgan who was vainly striving to restrain his hilarity secured the rebuke from the defendant that the policecourt justice feared to give.

"Oi'm a lady," said Mrs. White, her flashing eyes turned straight on Mr. Morgan, "an' I hope you be gentlemen. Yez can laugh after yez git out of here."

Thought Best not to Prosecute.

There is probably no better known money lender in the city than Jake Rauer, nor one who knows how to make better use of his capital. Jake is an artist in the many devious wiles of money lending, he has men of all classes, lawyers, doctors, and alas, newspaper men in his clutches, and it is rarely that any unfortunate borrower, once in the toils, escapes. But there was one famous occasion on which Jake was sadly slipped up, and by his own trusted employees, too.

It happened sometime ago, and but few people know the story, because all the actors in it had necessarily the greatest inducement to maintain secrecy. In his business Jake has of course need of many assistants, collectors, cashiers, bookkeepers and so on. Well, once upon a time Jake's staff put their collective heads together, and the game they worked played havoc with the money lender's profits. Everyone was in it, from the office boy to the confidential typewriter, the only man in the office who did not know what was going on being Rauer himself.

The method employed was very simple. With the connivance of the bookkeeper the cashier manipulated the cash, the collectors made false returns, even the office boy stole the money given him to purchase postage stamps. It was a perfect bonanza for all hands while it lasted, but of course Jake eventually got wise to the whole scheme. He found his profits diminishing at an alarming rate without any apparent cause, so he got in an expert who worked secretly on the books after the staff had gone home. The result amazed Rauer, and, in a moment of ill advised rage, he called the staff together.

"I'll send some of you to San Quentin for this," he thundered.

"If you do," they answered,"you will come with us."

It is not on record that any of Jake's staff were ever prosecuted for their embezzling scheme.

Not Good at Finding News.

The cowardice of the morning press of this city was never more clearly exemplified than in the case of the British American Union, the new association which is now making rapid progress. The idea of the B. A. U. is, of course,to bring about more harmonious relations between the two great nations,and to discourage that ceaseless twisting of the lion's tail, which has been the favorite of our low class politicians The idea commends itself to every patriotic citizen' but it did not suit the editors of our dailies. They had been too long accustomed to vilifying the British, and feared that they would lose the support of their anti English subscribers if they opened their columns to impartial comment. As a result they practically ignored the association, which was perhaps the best thing they could have done, for the movement,meeting with no opposition, grew with startling rapidity. The membership is now getting well on to a thousand, all the leading Englishmen in the city belong to it,and the association is becoming a force which politicians can no longer afford to neglect. Many prominent American citizens have given practical support,men of weight and culture like President Wheeler, of Berkeley, Professor Fairclough of Stanford, Irving M. Scott, and many others, have spoken at its monthly meetings, and yet the papers have quite overlooked the circumstance. At the meeting held last week, Irving Scott delivered a powerful address. Now if Scott had spoken anywhere else, say at a meeting of the Associated Dishwashers, he would have been good for one, if not two columns, for the papers always give great prominence to his remarks. In this case the meeting was entirely ignored by the Examiner and Chronicle, and only mentioned casually in the Call. To make the matter worse, the Chronicle's leading editorial writer, Taliesin Evans was one of the speakers, yet that paper overlooked its own man. This style of news gathering may be peculiar to San Francisco, but it cannot be considered fair to the general reader.

"Examiner" Gas for Suicides.

With a great pretense of secrecy, the Examiner has been instructing its readers in the gentle art of suicide. It tells the story of a fakir who offered to show Helen Dare the way to Lethe for the trifling sum of ten dollars. Helen bought the poison, but unfortunately she has not taken it yet, for, with charming naivete she tells us exactly how to make the deadly gas,one whiff of which will terminate existence. Two chemicals, both commonly employed in photography, are to be used. The combination of these substances produces the gas, which can be easily collected and saved for future use. The name of one, cyanide of potassium, is given, also the exact method of preparation, and we are left to guess the other. Such an easy guess too. As if this was keeping the fatal secret from a too curious public. Any schoolboy could tell you that hydra-cyanic acid is the gas meant. Now cyanide of potassium is simply a combination of cyanogen with potassium. Cyanogen, which has a delicious odor resembling crushed peach leaves, is prepared from carbon and nitrogen. It follows therefore, that if an acid is added to cyanide of potassium, strong enough to dissolve the metallic base, hydro-cyanic acid gas, is released. Almost any inorganic acid, say sulphuric would do. And this is the great secret for which the Examiner paid ten dollars. Surely Hearst's people are easy. It looks as if the so called suicide expert has merely developed a new variety of the "sure thing" game.

Judge Bahrs Gave Him the Tip.

It is not customary for the judge who is hearing a case to indicate his decision to one of the contestants, and it is not quite regular; but friendship is friendship—especially if it is political friendship.

Judge Bahrs has recently heard the divorce suit of Kelly vs. Kelly. Judge Bahrs and Kelly are pretty close. They were pretty close even before Judge Bahr's election, and his honor did his level best in the case for his friend. It was no use. The evidence was all the other way and there was no chance for Kelly.

Then Judge Bahrs made a mistake. He reserved his decision and invited Kelly to his house for dinner. "I've done all I can for you, Kelly," said the judge, "and my decision has got to go against you. Get in now and fix up a compromise. It's the best you can do. I've given you the tip—now you do the rest."

Noble Visitors are on their Way.

The Duke and Duchess of Manchester will soon be here and Society is already beginning to quiver with excitement. They are coming in Papa Zimmerman's private car and Papa pays the bills. He can afford it.

The honeymoon itinerary of the Duke and Duchess as given out, is as follows:

Leave Cincinnati for Chattanooga, Tenn., for a brief stay in a few days.

Leave Chattanooga for Talladega, Ala., where an old-fashioned English manor welcome, with reception, will be given by employes in the Zimmerman iron mills.

Will stop at Meridian and Jackson, Miss., and then go to Natchez, Miss., for a two days' visit to the Duke's grandmother, Mrs. Antonio Yznaga.

From Natchez the bridal party will go to New Orleans, and from there to San Francisco.

Returning east, they will stay at Cincinnati a short time, then will visit New York and go abroad to the Duke's home, Tanderagee Castle, Ireland.

Duration of honeymoon journey, about six weeks.

Now who of the local 400 will have the first shy at the noble young ones? That is where the competition is coming in.

The Institute Changed Its System.

The real reason why the Mechanics Institute has amended the constitution to do away with the preferential system of representation is amusing. It was the first system of suffrage ever adopted in which the minority had equal representation with the majority and it has been copied the world over. For eight years the elections for directors have been conducted on this plan, and the return to the old method of representation by the will of the majority is a decided setback for the Institute.

The reason for the change may be found in a comparison of the nominations for next year's trustees with the present list. Of the following, seven will be chosen to regulate the affairs of the institution: Messrs. Beattie, Gniesen, McLaub, McLaren, Joseph Leggett, H. A. Wilson, Root, Von Caten, Spaulding' George F. Day, A. E. Buckingham, H. H. Reed, and Joseph L. Sharp. P. J. Healy's name is not there among. To oust Mr. Healy from the board of trustees a world-famous system was abolished.

Mr. Healy has been a member of the directorate for several years and he has not been the most popular man on the board. Every year he secured re-election on a minority representation. There was no way to remove him and he wouldn't be lost, but bobbed up serenely at the annual election with just enough ballots to make good. Next year he must look for another board.

The Kind of Wife Needed.

Edgar Saltus started it and there are plenty to keep it up. "Is marriage detrimental to an author's career?" That is the question.

After reading letters on the subject, pro and con, the Wave would suggest that it depends a great deal on the woman. If she is capable of living on dried beef, codfish, round steaks, smoked herring and crackers; if she can occasionally do without any and all of these; if she is willing to get up first in the morning and give the genius his breakfast in bed; if she has no literary, artistic, political, or social aspirations herself; if she can cook, mend socks, turn her old dresses, and make a shirt; if she is always cheerful and jolly and never loses her temper; then the Wave would say that she might help her husband in his career. This is the crying need in the matrimonial line among young authors at the present time.

No Announcement yet Made.

There is some surprise among friends that Miss Jessie Fillmore has returned to the East and no announcement has yet been made of an engagement. There was a general idea that Jack Partridge had won out. He made a good running and it may be yet that family reasons withhold the announcement. It is hard to believe that handsome Jack Partridge could be refused.

Tod Receives Little Sympathy.

Tod Sloan seems to be up against it and he will receive very little sympathy, for Tod is a snob. Breaking bottles over an English waiter's head would not have cost him his position in the hearts of his countrymen had they not been champagne bottles. He might have killed two bartenders and eight waiters with beer bottles and still remained the idol of American hearts.

Then Tod has too many clothes to suit the popular mind. An extra outfit for Sunday would have been allowed and even cheered. But eighteen coats and twenty-four pants are not permitted.

If Tod Sloan had stuck to winning English races in an American way he might never have returned and still have been Our Tod; but he mixed with the aristocracy and he learned to drawl and drop his h's. And then he did worse, as the following cable from Weatherby of London to Tom Williams signifies:

"Findings proved. Sloan accepted large offer of Cadoman's winnings. He made frequent wagers and has been informed that he need not apply for a license."

There is still a chance for Tod in San Francisco Society may take him up.

Rumors of an Engagement in High Life.

It is current rumor that a matrimonial alliance has been arranged between Miss Caro Crockett and Mr. Lawrence Scott. Miss Crockett is the daughter of Joseph B. Crockett, president of the San Francisco Gas Light Co. Laurence Scott is the son of Henry T. Scott. The alliance is regarded in the 400 as suitable and fitting. There is no discrepancy in social standing to be bridged and no questions need arise regarding finances.

The announcement, should it come—and rumor is strong—will surprise no one. It has been thought for some time that Miss Crockett would follow the lead of the Hopkins girls into matrimony and secure a little more extended notice in the society columns of the press than the usual weekly announcement, "Among those present."

Merely a Suggestion.

There is an opportunity for Judge Belcher to attract considerable attention to himself and add a little vermilion to the glorious coloring of his judicial sunset, by delivering his decision in the divorce case of Adgie Hall against Frank R. Hall in Adgie's lion cage. Adgie became a wife in this iron-barred den, now free her from her matrimonial chains in the same spectacular way.

Society Ladies in the Nielsen Chorus.

Jo. Mansfield was all wrought up this week over a joke. "Doc" Leahy was also wrought up, and it was no joke to him. George Bowles was the perpetrator and he sti all the laugh.

day early last week Mansfield, city editor of the Call, met Bowles, assistant manager of the Alice Nielsen company at a place where men sometimes congregate. Of course they began talking business—Bowle's business. After a bit Bowles dropped a remark in a casual way which stirred up all of Jo. Mansfield's journalistic instincts.

"We go south from here," said Bowles, "and, by the way, we are taking four San Francisco ladies with us."

"That so?" queried Mansfield. "Who are they?"

"They're society ladies. I can't give you their names."

"What? not society women?"

"Yes. Bang up, too. You'd be knocked silly if I told you who."

"Tell me. That's the kind of stuff we hire men to get in the Call office."

"I'm sorry, Mansfield. I simply can't. I'm tied up tight and if you ran it they could tell in a minute that I leaked. No. Forget that I mentioned it."

Mansfield did not answer.

"Come, Jo," continued Bowles pleadingly. "My tongue slipped. I forgot you were a newspaper man, or I'd have bit it off before saying a word about this. Just forget all about it, that's a good fellow!"

But Mansfield wouldn't promise and as soon as he could break away, he hurried back to the office. In ten minutes, two reporters were scurrying about hunting for Bowles' society chorus girls.

It proved a difficult detail, and they reported back late that night, unsuccessful. Manager Perley of the Nielsen company had put up a bluff that he knew nothing of it and simulated surprise. Alice herself had laughed and said it must be a joke. The reporter who had handled the society end, met with no better results. None of the social leaders knew of desertion in their ranks for the footlight's glare.

Mansfield listened with a sneer in his smile. "You boys will have to wake up," he said. "Sit on a keg of dynamite. Here I tip you to a hot one and you cannot even smell smoke. Get alive! This is straight and we want it for to-morrow."

It did not run "to-morrow" nor the next day. The reporters who had suspected some hoax their first trip, were put wise by Bowles; and they reported back every night to Mansfield that there was nothing new; Perley had admitted it was true, but wouldn't give names; Nielsen had hinted that the ladies were in the upper crust but was equally reticent regarding their identity.

Mansfield was furious. "If you don't land to-day," he exclaimed, "I'll have to get out on the street myself. What's the use of paying you people salaries?"

That was Friday. The story came out in Saturday's Call.

The society ladies were the Misses Justina Wayne, Mabel Hilliard, Annabell Gordon and Blanche Woodman. They are not in the upper crust of the Four Hundred. They are chorus girls with pretty faces, shapely figures, musical voices and nimble toes. They are Tivoli chorus girls, and that is why "Doc" Leahy does not see the joke.

And Jo. Mansfield is laying for George Bowles with the shears in one hand and the paste-pot in the other.

He Kept Them all Jolly.

"Throughout the long sea voyage of the Shriners to the Islands," remarked a member of the organization the other night, "there was one man who arose to every occasion. G. W. Harris was the life of the steamer. His stories, his jokes, his quips and repartee were always on tap and always bright and sparkling. He kept ennui away even on the dullest of days and everyone aboard had kindly words and thoughts for him. How he managed it was a mystery but all the while during the voyage his stories were fresh and crisp, his poetry was new and entertaining, and he was better than a whole minstrel show at gags. He never repeated and his mind seemed to be stored with an inexhaustible supply of good things.

"Of course this state of affairs made some of the boys jealous of Harris' popularity and they did their best to keep even with him, but in vain. No other one man could carry all the humor and nonsense that he held in his brain.

"It was on the trip back that one of the jealous ones made a discovery that resulted in Harris' fall. Two or three were let in on it and arrangements made to floor the ship's comedian.

"It was in the cabin after dinner and a number of us, including Harris, were conversing about the day's run and the usual topics when some remark recalled to Harris' mind a story. As usual a crowd gathered about him to hear.

"'Gusher's wife was pretty sick,' began Harris, and naturally Gusher was worried. He went to a doctor—'

"'Page 69, second volume,' interrupted one of the boys. Harris flushed up and looked at the disturber 'What's the matter with you?' he queried.

"The man who had interrupted made no answer but took up the story where Harris had left it, and finished. Everyone was surprised and Harris was aghast. The next time Harris began a story the same thing transpired. One of the boys called out a page and volume number and completed the story. It was so for the rest of the voyage.

"It gradually leaked out that the boys had discovered Harris' method of gaining a reputation as a raconteur. He had three scrap books filled with many years' collection of bright stories, poems and witticisms. Late at night and early in the morning he studied his books and prepared himself for the day ahead. The boys got hold of these volumes some way and they worked up the demoralization.

"It is lucky they didn't find it out earlier in the voyage. Harris was no good afterwards, and it is certain that he did help make that voyage pleasant."

Gossip about the Tennis Courts.

In tennis circles the year 1900 is regarded as one of the most prosperous in the history of the game. Doubtless the greatest interest centered upon the Eastern trip of the Hardys. To most enthusiasts, however, the outcome of the journey was a disappointment. Many still claim that Sumner Hardy failed to exhibit his true form while away. It is almost the unanimous opinion of tennis devotees, in fact, that he should have defeated Kreigh Collins at Chicago, thus bringing the western championship to this state. By again taking Hardy into camp last July, Geo. F. Whitney decisively demonstrated that he is the wizard of the west, and that this title belongs to a Californian.

Of late the tennis world has been agog over the announcements that George Whitney as well as Sam and very likely Sumner Hardy had decided to permanently quit tournament play. Every effort is being brought to bear on these gentleman who with Robert N. Whitney, are doubtless the big four of the Pacific tennis world, and it is to be hoped that they will reconsider their determination.

Sumner Hardy has recently expressed his intention of joining the California Club. His name on the membership roll could not fail to raise the standard of play at the local courts.

With the Hardy brothers and Whitney out of the race the championship next year would probably lie between R. N. Whitney, Grant Smith, Collier and Reuben Hunt, with chances in the order named. Should Smith continue to improve as he has during the past six months, however, his name should head the list. J. Code is looked upon as the darkest of dark horses after his showing against Smith last Sunday.

Code and Merle Johnson, by the way, are standing sponsors for a Round Robin tournament with themselves, Collier, Crowell and Smith as contestants. A valuable prize would doubtless fall to the winner and some excellent playing should result. Smith and Johnson are regarded as the contestants in the finals. Last Tuesday Smith took three straight sets from Johnson, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2. However, there may be surprises.

Many moons have passed since Joe Daily has played up to form. When in condition there are few who can cover the courts as can the professor.

He Wears a Worried Look.

The dream of an evening paper anent one great indoor tournament to be held at Mechanics' Pavilion in sweet charity's cause struck the club shortly after the windstorm struck the fence. The entries for said tournament are still a minimum. Now, the "special correspondent" of said evening paper is possessed of a deep bass voice and is a lover of "close harmony." At one time that beautiful ditty, "Dreaming, Dreaming," was his especial favorite. Of late, however, when the beautiful notes of that song float from out the open windows of the clubroom over the calm and peaceful (when Billy isn't there) asphalt courts, the special correspondent "wears a worried look."

There is a crying need of a decent drinking-place in the vicinity of the California courts. Tennis is conducive of thirst. There are several so-called "bars" in the neighborhood, but they are run on the mediæval plan of stale crackers and cheese for the hungry and the poorest of liquor for the thirsty. Here is undoubtedly an opportunity for some enterprising American.

With the ladies the past has been a busy week. Unfortunately rain necessitated a postponement of Wednesday's tournament. Miss Hunter's playing has improved rapidly of late. Miss Bowman and Miss Clarke are also doing well. Miss R. Garland of Santa Barbara is in town at present and it is rumored that she is a player of no small skill. It is not impossible that she will gain local honors during her visit.

George and Robert Whitney have had a composite photograph taken for use in their book soon to be published, "What We Know About Tennis." This work will contain everything regarding the game that need be known and will prove an interesting addition to the literature of the period. The portrait is printed without permission.

Lorimer Stoddard, who dramatized "In the Palace of the King" for Miss Viola Allen, from the original novel of the same name by F. Marion Crawford, is out of the hospital after a severe siege of illness which,at one time, threatened to be very serious. In this connection the Post of Washington, D. C., in which city the play was first formally produced, declares that of the brood of dramatized books this season, the Crawford-Stoddard work is by far the best. "In the Palace of the King" succeeded, not because it was based upon a book, but on its own merits. It is a play entirely apart from the original novel following the plot of the book only when convenient. Moreover it was first written as a play scenario, especially for Miss Allen,then written in novel form by Mr.Crawford, and in play form by Mr. Stoddard. The latter had carte blanche to deviate from the original story,as he deemed best for dramatic effect, and at the same time he had the benefit of Mr. Crawford's wide research in Spanish history to assist in reproducing the atmosphere of the period. The result is a perfectly balanced play, which carries on its own merits, as is proved by the fact that it was an approval success before the book was published. Usually a book play draws its support principally from the readers of the novel, but in the case of "In the Palace of the King" the play evidently advertised the novel, as is proved by the fact that the first edition, 47,000 copies was sold out the first week after its appearance on the market. "In the Palace of the King" has been the success of the season in every city where it has been presented up to date. Miss Allen is now moving rapidly toward New York, where she will open for a run at Hammerstein's new Theatre Republic on December 31.

Marie Corelli writes to an American friend that she has so safe guarded her new novel, "The Master Christian," that its stage representation will be absolutely impossible. She is determined that it shall never be acted, although her "Sorrows of Satan" has proved so successful in dramatic form that Wm. A. Brady has just sent out a second company to play it.

The Editor:—I guess our correspondent must have been alluding to shoes

The Assistant:—Why so?

"He says the St. Louis girls were there in large numbers."

Chicago News.

Mr. Dooley on Thanksgiving.

"But as I told ye, Hinnissy, afther all, th' Turkey bur-rd's th' rale cause iv Thanksgivin'. He's th' naytional air. Abolish th' Turkey an' ye desthroy th' tie that binds us as wan people. We're wan race, hitched together be a gr-reat manny languages, a rellijon apiece, traditions that don't agree with each other, okel opporchunities f'r th' rich an' poor to continue bein' rich an' poor, an' a common barn-yard food. Whin iv'rybody in a nation eats th' same things that all th' others eats, ye can't break thim up. Talk about th' dove iv peace! Th' Turkey makes him look like a game-cock. Can I help ye, Mr. Hinnissy? White or dark? Th' leg, p'raps, or maybe th' part that goes over th'—"

"Some iv us," said Mr. Hennessy, gloomily—"some iv us will be atin' another kind iv bur-rd this fall."

"Ye're wrong there, me la-ad," said Mr. Dooley. "Ye're wrong there. Ye're wrong. They'se no such thing as crow. Thanksginin' day comes too quick afther iliction. We're all r-ready f'r th' blackest crow that ivvir Dimmycrat ate, an' we have our noses in th' air. An' thin we look down, an', lo an' behold! 'tis Thanksgivin' Turkey."—F. P. Dunne, in Harper's Weekly.

He Knew.

They met in front of the Read House. One was fat and black, with a wonderful expanse of mouth and a voice like a couple of foghorns, The other was black and lean and wizened.

Said the fat black to the lean black: "Why doan yer 'gratulate me, Brudder Johnsing?"

"Whut fur I 'gratulate you," said Brudder Johnsing.

"Whut fer you 'gratulate me? Why, man, kase I done mar'd de Widder Jeff's'n."

"You is—you don mar'd de Widder Jeff'son?" squeaked out the lean one.

"I sho' is done mar'd dat lady," said the fat one with an air of great satisfaction.

"Den I does 'gratulate yer, wif my whole heart, I sho' does.

The two separated, when the lean one turned to a knot of white gentlemen who had been interested and amused auditors of the conversation, and remarked:

"Yas, I 'gratulate him! Haw! haw! haw!—he! he! I sho' does. He's de wus en'my I has, an' I certinly 'gratulates. Why, boss," he said confidentially singling out one of the spectators, "I wus mar'd to dat 'oman fer a year myself. Yas, I sho' do 'gratulate dat man," and he moved off toward Market street chuckling and muttering to himself.—Chattanooga News.

A Twilight Friend.

Who is it breathes outside my door,
  Then jars the lock with ghostly click,
And venturing further to explore,
  Glides softly in? Uncanny trick!

I wrapped in shadows scarcely hear
  The bold intruder—quick or dead,
To desolate for hope or fear,
  I lift not my despondent head.

Then in my clasped and rigid palm
  That shuts a muscular despair,
Is thrust a muzzle, soft and warm,
  And presto? goes my every care!

'Tis but a dog! Retriever Dick,
  But loving, human, kindly soul,
How has he learned to choose and pick
  From all the rest, my hour of dole?

—M. L. Rayne.

The Baron's Master Stroke

FROM THE FRENCH OF "BRADA."

Having barely arrived at home after five years spent in Japan, Baron de Tomy was made Counselor of the legation at X. At the ministry they obligingly posted him upon all matters concerning his new chief. Young T., just in from X. on a furlough, even went into details, and endeavored to make his colleague thoroughly understand the position awaiting him.

Monsieur de Tomy learned that his nomination had even brought floods of tears to the loveliest of eyes, for his future chieftaness could see no excuse for any change in a department so perfectly filled already.

As for the ministry, in losing Z. it lost its right arm, and that, too, at the critical moment when the marriage of the crown princess was being negotiated, and when the two suitors, whom it was extremely important that France should make a wise choice, were neither in high favor. It certainly did seem as if the recall of Z., who was so admirably constituted to understand all the little tricks of the game and knew exactly how to circumvent them, was one of those stupidities only possible to an impersonal, uncaring ministry!

But to replace such a diplomat as Z. by a man just out from the wilds of Japan, to whom the least European complications would be a dense mystery, put the cap-sheaf on this absurdity!

In fact, Monsieur de Tomy was made to understand, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that he was anything but welcome, and yet he could but secretly hope that fortune might be less harsh to him than she was represented.

He listened with attention and respect to the verbal instructions of his august superior, was charged with several messages for his colleagues, and on the evening of his departure, received the sacred trust of the private dispatches to his chief

It had been difficult to fix upon the momentous day to begin, as he had gathered up on his several previous missions a number of tender little superstitions which he had sworn always to respect. However, Wednesdays and Sundays were not yet on the prescribed list, so on Saturday evening, just as the half-light was sadly merging into seven o'clock, he entered an English cafe for his last Parisian dinner, and suddenly found himself almost touching noses with the renowned Z., whom he was about to replace.

"Hello!" he cried awkwardly, "are you here?"

"And you have not yet left? How goes the world since your return from Japan?"

"Oh, not badly. And perhaps you will kindly coach me a little, since I have run upon you, as to how I should manage in X.?"

They seated themselves at the same table. Z., who could think of nothing but the grand marriage, set it forth in minutest detail before his colleague, never giving voice to his own regrets that they had taken from him the right to say that this success was his own work; and like a good fellow, he made his usurper understand first whom he should flatter, or fear, deceive, or coax, or work openly against. As for the young princess, he did not mention her.

But Tomy, whom Japan had barbarized, asked to which suitor she gave the preference, at which Z. plainly showed him that the only important things to be considered were the wishes of France, which meant of course those of two or three great heads who watched over her destines. Tomy, who believed that he now thoroughly understood all questions pertaining to the marriage passed on to matters of closer import.

"And his Excellency?" he asked anxiously.

Z. was just then eating fresh pease and he had his mouth full.

"Best of men!" he mumbled.

"And the Countess?" continued Tomy, intently studying his glass

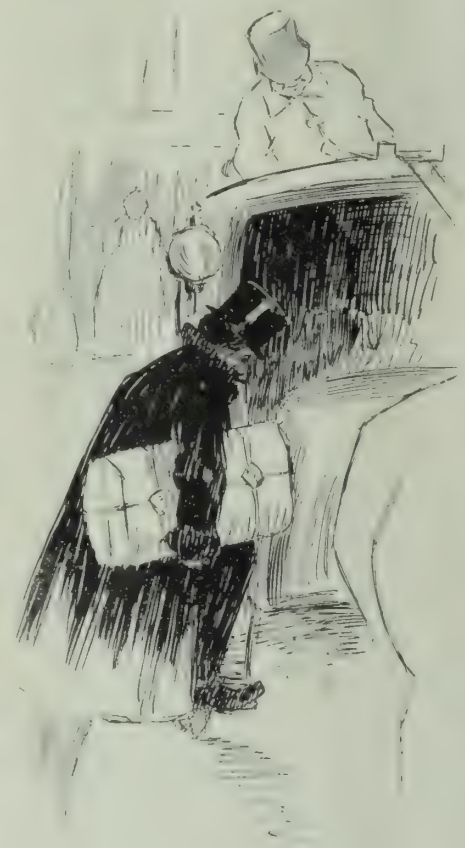
"Charming woman and highly educated," said Z., adding in a livelier tone, "Gad! but she's fond of fresh pease."

Tomy looked up quickly.

"You were saying, my friend——"

"I said the Countess adores fresh pease. You see, they only have the dried things down there and as she's a perfect little gourmand—but pardon me, my dear sir! I wasn't thinking—however, where one has eaten for three years the hard, dry, shrivelled things it is a happy change."

From this moment M. de Tomy was preoccupied,and listened with only one ear while Z. poured out plans and instructions,quite contrary to every point to those with which he was officially made acquainted. At last Z. stopped to rise and wish him a pleasant journey,



He gravely carried his bag to the carriage.

quite devoid of rancour, "And give my best regards to the Countess," he ended.

"Be sure I shall not fail to do so," was returned, while the baron promptly forgot all about the princely marriage and the ponderous instructions, to sit himself gravely down before this unique question:

"Where could I find some perfectly fresh pease,this evening?"

He thought awhile, then strode rapidly homeward, where, finding his servant, he ordered him to hunt him up a bag which should have the most diplomatic appearance. Jean understood perfectly what his master required, but was secretly astonished that the ministry did not furnish the bag with the dispatches; nevertheless, as he was a man of resources, at eleven o'clock M. de Tomy was in possession of the bag. But the stunning blow to Jean came when his master gravely asked:

"How many pecks will that hold?"

"But, my lord——"

"Well, well, never mind! You're sure this cord is good and strong, at least? I don't want the bag to burst open on the way!"

"But, master, it isn't a potato bag! And at this hour I couldn't find another—I had a great time to find this. I hope my lord will not be disappointed in it. As to its solidity——"

Jean caught it up to demonstrate the strength of its fabric.

"See! It is perfect, perfect!"

At which M. de Tomy gave the bag so complacent a look that puzzled Jean flung his last vestige of care to the winds. The baron then ordered the valet to arouse him at four o'clock and have a carriage ready at five, sharp.

"But does my lord know that the train does not leave until half past seven?"

"Jean, I can do very well without your wise counsels, if you please!"

At five o'clock M. de Tomy entered his carriage, the bag wound up in a tight roll in one hand, his necessary luggage in the other.

"To the market!" was his order.

But, good heavens! though he had been to Japan he had never been to market. He was by no means afraid, yet with that great empty bag and in his traveler's dress, he felt that if he did not exactly have the air of a cook, he certainly did look very funny.

Yet, without much trouble, he found the greengrocer he was looking for, and was at the acme of delight when in response to his hesitating question, "Have you fresh pease enough to fill this bag?" as he gingerly handed it out, the stout country woman answered in a resounding voice,

"That and ten more like it, little father! And such pease! Just look at that——" Then with her teeth she opened a shell and made the contents fly with her finger-nail. "Isn't it tender—and fine—and juicy? Taste and see for yourself."

He tasted, she watching him with anxiety.

"Hah! Isn't it of the first quality? And every pod the same! Give me the bag till I fill it,"—and she rapidly emptied the measure into the sack.

"Put in all you possibly can," urged the baron, but was almost scared at the literalness with which she obeyed him. The bag, puffed out to its fullest extent, was enormous! He caught back the measure with a grimace.

"Now, sir, you have all of twelve pecks there—you surely can't say you've been robbed of one pod!"

He felt very certain of it, and questioned,

"But will they keep fresh for three days?"

"Fresh as if just picked, to be sure."

He gravely carried his bag to the carriage, opened his dressng-case, lighted a wax taper, and began to affix at the ends, which were tied up with packthread, most enormous seals.

He saw with perfect satisfaction that it no longer resembled a potato-bag, and broke out in a delighted tone

"Now I can carry the thing anywhere without making a spectacle of myself. So much for diplomacy!"

Jean opened wide eyes when he saw the bag's dimensions, but was nearly fowled over when the baron forbade him to touch it. But in time he recovered sufficiently to decide that one thing was sure—the bag did not contain papers!

During three days and two nights, in carriage, train and steamer, that bag never was out of sight and reach of M. de Tomy. The great seals awakened deep respect in the common herd, while Jean was beginning to believe that they guarded a treasure of

Continued on page 13.

One of the Aristocracy.

HER FATHER WAS HANGED BY THE VIGILANCE COMMITTEE. HER MOTHER SANG IN A DANCE HALL. BEFORE SHE MARRIED, SHE WASHED DISHES AT ANGEL'S CAMP. HER HUSBAND WAS A BUTCHER. NOW HE IS RICH AND SHE IS ONE OF THE FOUR HUNDRED.

BEN HENDRICKS,
in "Ole Olson," at the California
LEW DOCKSTADDER,
who comes soon to the Columbia.

Future at the Theatres

CALIFORNIA—Beginning Sunday, Ben Hendricks in "Ole Olson."

ORPHEUM—Vaudeville, with Al. Shean and Charles Warren in "Quo Vadis Upside Down," Shattuck, Mlle. Christina's dogs and monkeys, etc.

COLUMBIA—Beginning Monday, Frederick Warde in "The Duke's Jester."

TIVOLI—Beginning Monday, "Cinderella," Christmas production, Tivoli Stock Company.

MOROSCO'S GRAND—Beginning Monday, the Oliver Leslie Co. in "A Tale of Two Cities."

ALCAZAR—"Madame Butterfly" and "A Serious Tangle."

ALAHAMBRA—Beginning Monday, The Boston Lyric Opera Co. in repertoire.

He Wouldn't Give it up.

Wm. A. Brady is considered what is called a lucky man, in the theatrical profession, and why such, is inexplicable. Brady started on the lowest rung of the ladder and has attained his position by brains and perseverance and pushing his judgment to the limit. There are many men as smart as Brady, but they lack the nerve to bank on their own convictions. Had he listened to the "Solomons" of the theatrical world " 'Way Down East" would have been shelved after the first week, but not with him, and after several disastrous weeks his keen judgement became apparent. " 'Way Down East" today is one of the greatest pieces of theatrical property spoken in the English tongue.

Such an innocent thing as "San Toy" has caused a challenge for a duel. The trouble started with Sidney Jones, the composer, who refused to permit a production of the comic opera at the Carl Theatre, Vienna, because the management proposed rearranging parts of his score. With the music tucked under his arm, he angrily left the theatre. The director, E. B. Norman, vented his anger on Baron Hammerstein, the prima donna's husband, and ordered him off the stage. Refusing to go, the Baron was forcibly ejected from the theatre, and thereupon sent his seconds to challenge Mr. Norman to a duel, which the Englishman considers absurd.

A lot of Vassar girls went to see how Thackeray was constructed in a stage version of "Vanity Fair." They were so lightly impressed that the leading actress, Minnie Maddern Fiske, asked the manager of the theatre what their indifference meant. He replied evasively that Poughkeepsie audiences seldom applauded much. "But there's a man asleep out there," she is reported in the locol press to have exclaimed, "and he snores, too, I won't go on until he is awakened." The slumberer was roused in time to see what is known as the badger-game scene, in which the siren lures the old libertine to her apartments and he is caught there by her husband. The account does not tell whether the Vassar girls remained chilly through that act.

Francis Wilson expresses the feelings of his every brother and sister in the profession regarding "First nights," in December "Success."

"First nights? Heavens! don't speak of them. It makes me feel bad now to think of the Thursday when we first gave the 'Monks of Malabar.' Really, I felt like taking a train and running away when that evening came around; and if it hadn't been for my wife coming down from New Rochelle with me, I believe I should have tried to swim across the Sound and lose myself on Long Island. First nights! Whew! They're worse than frost bites, mosquitoes and the yellow jaundice all at once. Don't lets talk about 'em. I'm not a bit superstitious, but the man who invented them owes me his life. I have an idea where he is, and I hope he'll stay there till I reach him."—

Famous Henschels to Return.

The return of the distinguished vocalists, Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel, to this city is announced, arrangements having just been completed for a number of recitals, early in the coming year, at Metropolitan Temple. Since the Henschels were here, some three years ago, they have sung in all the large cities of Europe and the East, and have won golden opinions everywhere. It is safe to assume that when the advance sale of seats opens at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s store, there will be a big rush for tickets.

Strauss Orchestra to Come.

The next musical event of great importance to San Francisco will be the appearance of Edward Strauss and his famous orchestra, direct from Vienna, via New York. They come to the California Theatre the last part of the month and will repeat the programmes that have completely captured New York since the twenty-first of October when they opened at the Metropolitan Opera House.

The Western Company representing Wm. A. Brady's production, "Way Down East," is playing to the capacity of theatres everywhere, and in many cases the demand is so great to see this beautiful play that extra matinees to the extent of two and three per week have to be given in order, in a measure, to satisfy the demand.

"Lost River," Joseph Arthur's latest successful play of life and character in southern Indiana, will play its first engagement out of New York in Indianapolis. The booking of the New York company has just begun, and at special request of many Indiana friends of Mr. Arthur, and others interested in a play of Hoosier life Indianapolis was selected as the first stand. It was the original intention to jump the company from New York to Chicago, where "Lost River" goes on for a run; but in deference to these numerous requests, the managers, Messrs. Liebler & Co., decided to let the organization stop by the way and give Indianapolis a a treat.

At the California.

"Ole Olson" with Ben Hendricks in the title role will be the attraction at the California Theater for the week beginning Sunday afternoon, December 16. "Ole Olson" is like an old friend who has been tried and not found wanting. This really superior comedy has probably more admirers than any other American play. Its friends here are legion and they will doubtless prove loyal again. Not only has the play been rewritten for this season's production, but the specialties are all new and numerous, it is said. The singing of the National Swedish Ladies' Quartette will no doubt be a most enjoyable feature of the performance.

"At the White Horse Tavern," the great success at Wallack's Theater, New York, will follow.

At the Orpheum.

The Orpheum's new bill should be popular with all classes of theater goers. The newcomers are all head liners and those retained from the previous bill have been kept on their merits. Al. Shean and Charles Warren are two clever comedians and among the most popular of vaudeville performers. They will present their latest travesty, "Quo Vadis Upside Down." Truly Shattuck, who started her stage career in San Francisco and since leaving her native town has won a high place in the vaudeville world, returns to this city in the full glory of her wonderful success. Mlle. Christina's dogs and monkeys will be a big attraction for the children and should afford amusement for the grown-ups as well. The animals present a regular circus and the act is said to be most entertaining. Among the holdovers will be Hal Davis and Inez McCauley, Harmony Four, Spenser Kelly, Pantzer Trio, Ahern and Patrick and the biograph.

At the Columbia.

The appearance of that grand and sterling actor, Frederick Warde, and the Bruno Company which includes those two well-known stars, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Spencer, in a new comedy, "The Duke's Jester," at the Columbia on Monday night, will undoubtedly prove the theatrical event of the season. Mr. Warde has never been associated with an inferior company and has for several years gone but forward in the general excellence of his entertainment. This season he stars under auspicies and conditions never before attained by him. His production of "The Duke's Jester" is said to be magnificently staged as well as one of the most amusing comedies extant. His support has already won the reputation of being the strongest organization since the famous Booth and Barrett combination.

Betsy Ross, whose hands sewed the first American flag, is to be a central figure in a new romance of the Revolution, by H. A Du Souchet, author of "My Friend from India." It will be produced in Philadelphia before the close of the season by Wm. A. Brady and Jos. R. Grismer, with a special cast including Phoebe Davies and Odell Williams of "Way Down East" fame.

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Every night next week the Remarkable One-Act Play.

Madame Butterfly

A Japanese Tragedy by David Belasco.

Preceded by "A Serious Tangle."

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.

Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

Commencing Sunday Afternoon, December 16th
and for One Week Only.

YOLLY-YENIAL-YOVIAL BEN HENDRICKS in the play that made him famous

"OLE OLSON."

Everything new and up-to-date excepting the title, and the original 1,000 laughs!

POPULAR PRICES.

Next:—The Season's Biggest Success
"AT THE WHITE HORSE TAVERN.'

Orpheum

Al. Shean and Charles Warren; Truly Shattuck; Mlle. Christina's Dogs; Hal Davis and Inez Macauley; The Harmony Four; Spencer Kelly; Pantzner Trio; Ahern and Patrick; Biograph

Reserved Seats 25c.: Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

The Wave's Favorites.

MAUD WILLIAMS.

The poets have sung of the songs of the birds
In all sorts of metrical gush;
The nightingale's trill has been told of u til
We're sick of the maundering slush.
The robin and lark have been praised to the skies,
Boquets have been thrown to the thrush,
But pretty Maud Williams can give them all cards
She beats any two birds in the bush.

Social Happenings.

Mrs. P. N. Lilienthal and her daughter, Miss Elsie Lilienthal, are on a visit to their relativas in the East, and expect to remain about two months, visiting many places of interest before their return to California.

Miss Florence Neustadter will make her bow to society on the afternoon of December 16th, as her parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Neustadter, have issued invitations for an at home at their residence, corner of Van Ness and Sacramento, for that day.

Mr. and Mrs. William Haas will introduce their daughter Florine to society at a ball to be given at the Haas residence on Franklin street, December 22d.

Geo. W. Cavanagh and Miss M. A. Telfer were married in Sacred Heart Church last Tuesday.

Invitations have been sent for the wedding of Miss Maud Getz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Getz, and M. O. Meyer, to take place at the Palace Hotel on the 18th.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin's at home Friday last was largely attended.

Miss Ida Wise and Charles E. Phelps were married last Wednesday evening at the California Hotel.

The engagement is announced of Miss Carrie Patek and Alexander Jacobi. They received last Thursday at the Patek home, 1425 Larkin street.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Levene announce the engagement of their daughter Lizzie to Ralph Levy.

On December 17th the Woman's Press Association will give a reception to Miss Jessie Sekerman.

The engagement is announced of Miss Christina Fasshauer and Charles Wirth.

Miss Grace Kellogg has gone to New York for the winter and will spend a portion of the early summer in Newport.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Fletcher are in Venice.

Mrs. A. P. Whittell and Miss Whittell, who have been abroad for some years, have returned and are at the Palace Hotel.

The wedding of Miss Ida Wise and Charles E. Phillips took place at the California Hotel last Wednesday.

Horace Morgan, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Morgan, announces his engagement to Miss Lilian Beauman, of Alameda.

The 1900 Club gave a domino and fancy dress party at Union Square Hall last Tuesday evening.

Miss Claribel Munsell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Munsell, was married last Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock to Frederick March Colby, a son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Colby of Claremount and a brother of Professor George E. Colby of the State University Rev. John Bakewell, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church officiated.

Captain and Mrs. W. A. Nevills have returned from a month's trip through Mexico and Arizona.

The wedding of Miss Mae Weldon and Dr. Morrow will take place at the Hotel Van Nuys in Los Angeles on Christmas Eve.

Miss Bessie Center gave a tea last Thursday in honor of Miss Elena Robinson.

Mrs. Warren Dearbon Clarke gave a tea last Friday in honor of Miss Hopkins.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Richardson Wells have abandoned their trip to Japan and China, and will leave shortly for their home in the East.

Mr. and Mrs Thomas Magee Jr. have secured apartments at the Palace Hotel for three months. They arrive on the 1st of January.

At Home.

Miss Florence T. Buyer, 1510 Octavia, second Tuesdays.

Mrs. H. Kirschbraun, 1626 Pacific avenue, Alameda, third Tuesdays.

The Misses Loewy, 726 Shotwell, second Sundays.

Mrs. J. A. Noah, Post and Powell, Thursdays.

Mrs. J. Bien, in Mexico. Day discontinued.

Mrs. Edward Weil, 1004 Van Ness, third Mondays.

Miss Bertha Herzog, first and second Fridays December and January.

Mrs. J. Feist and Miss Feist, 2102 Van Ness, first Fridays.

Miss Ray Manasse, 1432 Webster, second Thursdays.

Mrs. Alex Weil, 2017 Broderick, first Wednesdays.

Mrs. Max Bornstein, 805½ Geary, Wednesdays in December.

Mrs. Phil S. Beel, 1451 Leavenworth, second Wednesdays.

Mrs. Otto J. Joel, 1528 Ellis, second Tuesdays.

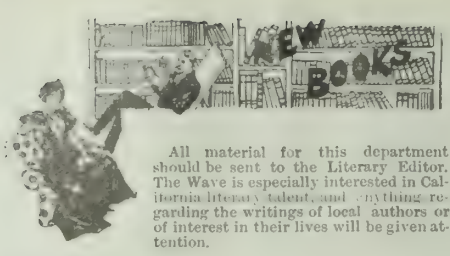
Mrs. J. Levy and Miss Hahn, 2004 Bush, second Tuesdays.

Mrs. I. Strauss, 1441 Hyde, second Wednesdays.

Mrs. J. Nieto, first Tuesdays.

Mrs. S. Laventhal and Miss H. Kaskel, 1527 Octavia, second Wednesdays.

Lulu Glaser has scored a personal hit in her new comic opera, "Sweet Anne Page," at the Manhattan New York. She has a rollicking Tom-boy part, with incidental disguises, that peculiarly fit her romping, roguish personality. The music of the opera, by W. H. Neidlinger, is remarkably tuneful.



All material for this department should be sent to the Literary Editor. The Wave is especially interested in California literary talent, and anything regarding the writings of local authors or of interest in their lives will be given attention.

Books Received.

"A Sequel to a Tragedy;" a Story of the Far West, by Henry C. Dibble. (J. P. Lippincott Co.) $1.50

"Lord Linlithgow," by Morley Roberts, (Harper Bros.) $1.50.

'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam." (Doxey's.)

"Lucid Intervals," by E. S. Martin. (Harper & Bros.) $1.50.

"The Biography of a Baby," by Milicent W. Shinn. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

"In the Hands of the Cave Dwellers," by Geo. A. Henty. (Harper & Bros.) $1.00.

"A Chambermaid's Diary," by Octave Mirbeau. (Benjamin R. Tucker.)

Doxey's "Omar Khayyam."

Doxey, formerly of San Francisco, now of New York, has published the finest "Rubaiyat" yet seen on the book stalls. It is Edward Fitzgerald's beautiful translation, introduced by a poem to Omar Khayyam, by Justin H. McCarthy and "Glose upon a Raba'iy" by Porter Garnett. The decorative illustrations are by Florence Lundborg who has outshone all her previous efforts in this line and has given a wonderfully beautiful setting to this jewel.

"A Chambermaid's Diary,"

By Octave Mirbeau, translated by Benjamin R. Tucker. The modest cover of this clever book probably saved it from the postal authorities; if its contents had been noticed it would have never been allowed to pass through the mails.

Translations from the French for American readers are usually so carefully expurgated that but little of the original wit and humor is left. Mr. Tucker translates with a different object in view, and he has an unusual style of calling a French spade a spade. However, these quaint and philosophical reminiscences of a Parisian chambermaid are not for family reading.

"The Sequel to a Tragedy; a Story of the Far West,"

By Henry C. Dibble.

With no pretense to literary style, H. C. Dibble has told a plain story in a plain way. There are no symptoms about the book that it will run into its twenty millionth edition, and there is no especial reason for its being written. San Franciscans may enjoy its local color and lawyers may appreciate its realistic court scenes, but the average reader can have little interest in the erratic character drawing and the jumbled psychological study.

The "tragedy," of which this book is the "sequel," occurred some time before the book went to press and caused the hero to break his heart, the heroine to lose her mind and the kindly mamma to drown. The working out to happy marriage bells of this sorrowful state of affairs is the Herculean labor the author set himself to do. Then feeling himself fully able to take care of a larger job, he works in a brother of the heroine, arrested and convicted of a crime of which he is innocent, who has to be cleared.

A stage hold-up, assault and battery on the waterfront, a Palace Hotel serenade by the Hawaiian band, are some of the incidents that give the Far West coloring.

That Capt. Slocum's great adventure in "Sailing Alone Around the World" is appreciated in naval circles is shown by the fact that his book has recently been added to the list of works included in the crews' libraries on American men-of-war.

"Deacon Bradbury," Mr. Edwin Asa Dix's recent novel of New England life, touches the Christmas note in the concluding chapters, and may therefore be fairly included in the season's holiday books. Regarding the episode of the Bradbury girls making Christmas wreaths to be sold in the cities, as well as to decorate the house for their brother's home-coming, it is a fact that Vermont furnishes a large proportion of the enormous number of evergreens sold annually during holiday-time.

In a writer of fiction the unpardonable sin is to be uninteresting, and when one is uninteresting for five hundred pages at a stretch, it is adding insult to injury. "Who Goes There," by B. K. Benson, is an account of the doings of a spy during the Civil War, given with deadly detail. It is a veritable treadmill of words. (The Mac millan Company.)

Mr. George A. Henty is a writer of what now are styled "stories for boys." The hero of "In the Hands of the Cave Dwellers" runs away to sea, kills a great many Indians and eventually marries an heiress. In our youth such tales came cheaper and were called by another name. (Harper and Brothers.)

"Marr'd in Making," by Baroness von Hutten, is most aptly named. In spite of many blemishes, the book contains an excellent character study in "Beth," the heroine. In the end, however, the author flinches from the logical evolution of her own conception, and seeks to escape from an artistically impossible situation by a psychologically improved. (J. B. Lippincott Company.)

"A White Guard to Satan" purports to be a narrative written soon after Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia and "recovered" by Alice Maud Ewell. Had she stumbled upon it some years ago, before such tales became a drug, it would have been welcomed more warmly. (Houghton, Mifflin & Company.)

A Chinese work by the Viceroy Chang-Ching-Tung has been translated by Samuel I. Woodbridge and is called "China's Only Hope." Besides giving the opinion of a liberal and polished Chinaman anent the present crisis, it affords an interesting glimpse of ourselves as the Orient sees us. (The Fleming H. Revell Company.)

Lord Roseberry has written a most delightful book in his "Napoleon, the Last Phase." He deals with the life of the Emperor subsequent to the Battle of Waterloo, and he deals with it in a thoroughly satisfactory and scholarly manner. The book is eminently worth reading. (Harper & Brothers.)

"The Life of Henry George," by his son and namesake, is as good a biography as could be hoped for at this time. The style is dignified, and the matter selected, for the most part, interesting. On the other hand, the part of the book devoted to the childhood and youth of Mr. George is overloaded with letters and quotations of no interest to the public, and it seems at least premature to class him with Adam Smith and John Stuart Mill, and to draw comparisons between him and Herbert Spencer to the disparagement of the latter. (Doubleday & McClure Company.)

A wild tale of gambling and crime at Monte Carlo, by William Le Queux, is called "The Sign of the Seven Sins." Were it bound in yellow paper and sold at fifteen cents, it would be dear at the price. (J. P. Lippincott Company.)

A new book of animal pictures, by Harry B. Neilson, "Droll Doings," abounds in fun. The amount of expression this artist condenses in an animal's face is a perpetual surprise. (Blackie & Son, London.)

Sympathy

Is a good thing for the young husband to give the young wife. But sympathy will not abate one jot of her nervousness or lift her to that plane of sound health where alone the wife and mother can find happiness.

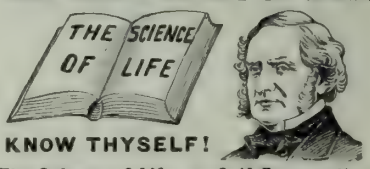
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription meets every womanly want and need. It tranquilizes the nerves, restores the appetite and induces refreshing sleep. Its use previous to maternity makes the baby's advent practically painless and gives the mother abundant nutrition for her child. "Favorite Prescription" is a woman's medicine and has no equal as a cure for womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

Accept no substitute for "Favorite Prescription." No other medicine is "just as good" for weak and sick women.

"It affords me great pleasure to be able to say a few words in regard to the merits of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery,'" writes Mrs. Flora Arn, of Dallas, Jackson Co., Mo. "I was tempted to try these medicines after seeing the effect upon my mother. At an early age of married life I was greatly bothered with painful periods, also a troublesome drain which rendered me weak and unfit for work of any kind. I became so thin there was nothing left of me but skin and bone. My husband became alarmed and got me a bottle of 'Favorite Prescription. After he saw the wonderful effects of that one he got two more, and after I used those up there was no more pain, and I began to gain in flesh very rapidly."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps, to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Strength, Vitality, Manhood, THE CHIEF GLORY OF MAN.



KNOW THYSELF!

The Science of Life, or Self Preservation,

A Great Medical Book for Every Man—The Million Embossed cloth, full gilt, elegant Library edition, ONLY $1.00. In paper covers, ONLY 25c. Get the best. It contains 370 pp., with engravings, 125 prescriptions for Acute and Chronic Diseases, and is the Gold Medal Prize Treatise on Aptitude and Inaptitude for Wedded Happiness, Premature Decline, Nervous and Physical Debility, Exhausted Vitality, Manhood, Varicocele, Atrophy (wasting) and ALL DISEASES and WEAKNESSES OF MEN, from whatever cause arising. The distinguished author and Nervo specialist graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1864 and has been the Chief Consulting Physician to The Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch St. (opposite Revere House) Boston, Mass., during the past thirty years. Know Thyself Manual, a Vade Mecum Pamphlet, Free to every male reader of this paper; 6 cents for postage. Write for these books to-day. They are the keys to health, vigor, manhood and happiness. Address as above. Consultation by letter or in person from 9 to 6. Sundays 10 to 1. Expert treatment and positive cure.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute is a fixed fact in the medical phenomena of this country, and it will remain so.—Boston Journal.

☞ The Peabody Medical Institute has many imitators, but no equals.—Boston Herald

It is one of the strictest rules of the great theatres that no actor or actress shall carry natural flowers on the stage. The rule is based on common sense, for nothing is more likely to make one slip than a flower petal. One time during the Henderson productions there was a large chorus on the stage and clouds above the stage. Angels' heads were to be seen through the openings in the clouds. Suddenly one of the chorus girls slipped and fell full length. The stage manager was furious. When the curtain dropped he found two or three natural rose petals on the stage, showing the cause of the accident.

"Who dared to bring natural flowers on this stage?" he asked. A meek little voice piped up:

"If you please, sir, they fell out of the hole in heaven. One of the angels wore them.'"

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure: Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Teledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Order some

"Club Cocktails"

Sent Home To-day.

You will then have on your own sideboard a better cocktail than can be served over any bar in the world. A cocktail is substantially a blend of different liquors, and all blends improve with age.

The "Club Cocktails" are made of the best of liquors; made by actual weight and measurement. No guesswork about them.

Ask your husband at breakfast which he prefers—a Manhattan, Martini, Whiskey, Holland Gin, Tom Gin, Vermouth or York—and then surprise him with one at his dinner.

For sale by all Fancy Grocers and Dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO.

29 Broadway, N.Y. Hartford, Conn.

Pacific Coast Agents.
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

The Baron's Master Stroke

Concluded from page 8.

golden ingots, at least. Never had the baron lived under the weight of such a responsibility. The way he cared for it and took precaution against its breaking, the almost tender consideration with which he guarded it from dampness, from heat, from dryness, from everything, can scarcely be imagined. He would neither eat, drink nor sleep until the bag was safe from all danger. Jean could only wonder, but he felt certain his master was charged with some great mission which would make him an ambassador at least.

They alighted in X. at five o'clock of a dreary morning just opening into a dubious-looking day. But everything seemed radiant to the young diplomat; he was here and his bag was safe! As he brought along with his other papers personal letters to his chief, he presented himself at the great man's home by ten o'clock. Of course the bag went with him, and though he furtively kicked it under the chair nearest to the entrance, the eagle eye of the minister spied it out.

The Count de T., with a cool, but courteous manner, welcomed his new subordinate. He posed with great dignity before him, seated in his most stately attitude in a large desk chair of leather, his bust only appearing above the great table where his left hand fluttered among the heaped-up papers, while his right joined eyes and ears in an expectant air of dignified attention.

Poor Tomy felt that he had never run up against such an icicle—such an all-over-one—and could only murmur "Perfectly! Just so! to his frigid sentences. At length, this official conversation having come to an end, the Count de T. spoke up brusquely—"Hello, there! What have you got in that great bag you kicked under the chair in that dark corner, eh?"

The unfortunate baron, upon whom that bag now lay with the weight of all those three days and two nights, tried to answer airily, "Oh, that? God! sire, it is nothing at all but a bag of fresh pease—yes, I assure you, fresh pease! And this is how it happened. The night before my departure I met Z. at the English cafe, where he happened to mention that here you could only get dried vegetables, and that Madame the Countess was especially fond of fresh pease. So I just thought I would bring her a few, and here they are!"

M. de Tomy was, after all his expectations, astonished at the effect of this speech. The minister arose, hastened around the great table, and laying his hands paternally on the young man's shoulders, cried out, "My dear boy! That was simply a master stroke."

But without permitting Tomy to answer, he sat down and wrote two notes, each word of which he appeared to weigh profoundly. Then looking up—

"Would you be so kind as to touch the bell?"

Tomy docilely rang, asking himself meanwhile what possible relation could exist between his fresh pease and the correspondence of the ministry. An attendant entered to whom the great man spoke:

"See that these letters are instantly taken to their addresses, and find out from Madam the Countess if she can receive me with Monsieur the Baron de Tomy." Then turning again to the latter, most amicably,—"You will dine with us this evening, my dear friend? I have just written to the Prince de V. and the Counselor de B. We have been under a light frost for some days; the marriage hung fire and I did not know how to break the ice. But your pease are an admirable pretext! The prince is a devil of a gourmand! Then the Countess will be charmed and charming, the marriage will come off—— Tell me all about Paris aud Japan whenever you feel disposed; I see that we shall understand each other perfectly."

The welcome of the Countess set out to be even more reserved and dignified than had been her husband's but the instant the bag was placed before her and the explanation made, Tomy saw the face, which had so severely met him a moment since, suddenly break up into dimpling smiles that made it charming.

"Why, how perfectly delightful! A delicious idea! Give me the scissors quick—Mousieur de Tomy, take care there! These are my

Sunset Limited

For the Season of 1900=1901

Tri=Weekly

Leave SAN FRANCISCO	Leave LOS ANGELES
Mondays	Tuesdays
Wednesdays	Thursdays
Fridays	Saturdays
5:00 P. M.	8:00 A. M.

ARRIVE NEW ORLEANS, 7:20 P. M. MONDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS.

MORE BRILLIANT THAN EVER
NEW EQUIPMENT
IMPROVED SERVICE

Secure Time Tables and any desired information from Any S. P. Co's Agent.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist Sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters "Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

Naber, Alfs & Brune, Agents,

323-325 MARKET STREET. S. F., CAL.

pease—are they still fresh and green?" and she split them between her teeth as the market woman had done.

"Good! And you had the courage to lug that bag clear from Paris? It was admirable—admirable! My dear, you have here a most unusual man; I don't see how he could have found such charming manners in Japan—what is that? You even know how to cool them? I see you are a creature of great talents!"

After much more of the same kind they at last permitted Tomy to depart,recommending him to go straight to bed and sleep soundly in order to be at his best when six o'clock arrived. When he had gone the Countess thought,

"And so this is the poor boy I detested without knowing him? How careful we should be of hasty judgments! Certainly the departure of Z. changed my life, and in this forsaken spot it is none too gay. But, now that he is gone I can't wish him back, for this little baron has the brightest kind of wit there's no doubt of that His idea about those pease was simply luminous! He will have a brilliant career; why should I not have a chance in it? Come, come, I've been a fool to weep so much and make myself look like a fright!"

The minister had a long conference with his wife and the cook, all about the fresh pease, and it was decided that they should be served both in the French and English manner, while the prime minister of the range was solemnly commanded to give his most particular attention to this fortunate vegetable.

At a quarter to six Tomy was in the salon of the ministry where he was welcomed like an old friend.

"You are soon going to taste our pease!" said the Countess archly, after which in a few words she gave him all the enlightenment he needed concerning the new and formable people he was to meet.

Later, M. de Tomy was presented to each by his chief with the most particular solicitude; he evidently was one of the household.

The dinner was exquisite The Prince de V. was in his most jovial mood, the Counselor de B. gallant and assiduous in his attentions to the Countess. All joked Tomy in a fraternal way, and he was the object of general attention as they questioned and exclaimed,

"How's that? In a dispatch-bag, did you say?"

"Yes, yes, and with immense seals! Three days and two nights, and it weighed twelve pecks, my dear prince!"

The Prince de V. looked across at him with the most genial friendliness; the Counselor de B. bent forward and addressed the modest young man several times with marked respect, and upon leaving the table the prince said to his host,

"My dear minister, I must say this M. de Tomy appears to me a remarkable young fellow!"

The Counselor at once added,

"You have there, sir, a boy who will be heard from some day, mark my words!"

To all which the minister answered with absolute seriousness,

"Yes, I asked for him knowing his great merit."

From that day the gentlemen of the legation made it a matter of personal emulation, even to jealously, to secure the advancement of this new colleague who had captured the confidence of the chief and the good will of his Countess.

And, one month later, there was celebrated at X. the marriage of the princess with the suitor best approved of France.

For on just such trifles depend the destinies of men and of princes!

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT. Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Yosemite Engraving Company.

Makers of High Grade Printing Plates.
Half-Tone a Specialty.
24 Montgomery St., S. F. Cal.

The English Emergency Ration.

Every soldier in the British army carries in his haversack what is known as the "emergency ration." This consists of a small tin cylinder, similar to a pocket spirit-flask, divided into two compartments. One of these is filled with four ounces of cocoa paste, and the other contains a similar quantity of concentrated beef—pemmican. As its title implies, the ration is not to be used, except in the cases of direst necessity, and if consumed in small quantities it will maintain strength for thirty-six hours The tin has to be produced at parades and daily inspections, and the soldier who does not display his ration is severely dealt with. The tin must not be opened on any account, except by order of an officer. The ingredients may be either spread upon a biscuit like butter, or boiled up as cocoa or soup. Each tin contains sufficient quantities of the foodstuffs to make four pints of each.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For Victoria, Vancouver, B. C. Port Townsend, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Anacortes and New Whatcom, Wash., 11 a. m. Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27. Jan. 1, and every fifth day thereafter. Change at Seattle for this company's steamers for Alaska and G. N. Ry.; at Seattle or Tacoma to N. P. Ry.; at Vancouver to C. P Ry.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Dec. 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Jan. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles)—Steamer Queen, Wed. 9a. m. steamer Santa Rosa, Sun. 9 a.m.

For Santa Cruz, Monteyey, San Simeon Cayucos, Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Gaviota, Santa Barbarba, Ventura, Hueneme, San Pedro (Los Angeles) and Newport—Steamea Corona, Fripays, 9 a. m. steamer Bonita, Tuesdays, 9 a. m.

For Ensenada, Magdalena Bay, San Sose del Cabo, Mazatlin, Altata, La Paz, Santa Rosalia and Guaymas, Mexico, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S.S. Zealandia for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, Dec. 26, 2. p. m.

S. S. Sierra for Honolulu Samoa, Au kland, and Sydney, Wed. Jan. 2, 9 p. m.

S. S. Australia, for Tahiti, Sunday .Jan 6, 4 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET
J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

The Old Government the perfection of Whisky.
BOTTLED AT THE DISTILLERY
PURE-AGED-WHOLESOME.
Used in the Medical Departments of the U.S. ARMY & NAVY SERVICE
WILLIAM WOLFF & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO. DISTRIBUTORS.
Beware of Imitations or refilled Bottles

BRAUNSCHWEIGER & CO.
5 & 7 DRUMM STREET,
San Francisco, Cal.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS
AT CROCKER'S

ARTISTIC CALENDARS
HIGH GRADE UMBRELLAS, VIENNA NOVELTIES, STYLISH CORRESPONDENCE PAPER FINE LEATHER GOODS

CROCKER'S
227-229 POST ST. 215-219 BUSH ST.

REFRESHING SLEEP.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Taken just before retiring quiets the nerves, nourishes the tired and confused brain and induces refreshing sleep.

Genuine bears name HORSFORD'S on wrapper.

Going to San Jose?

"The Stanford"

is one of the most centrally located rooming houses in San Jose. It is especially desirable for traveling men and tourists. Everything clean and first class and rates are reasonable.

MRS. McCUNE, Prop.

192 South 1st St., San Jose, Cal

MRS. SAHCT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

DIRECTIONS.—Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:
Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt
708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.
Telephone Polk 1321
Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.
J. Isaacson, Pharmacist, cor. Geary and Octavia sts.
Phone E. 280

A TOILET NECESSITY

Wakelee's

Cold Cream of Roses

—MADE WITH—

Pure Almond Oil and Distilled Water of Roses

Holiday Notes.

Give Presents that are useful and will be appreciated

Opera Glasses, Race and Field Glasses. Binoculars, Lorgnettes, Gold Spectacles and Eyeglasses, Graphoscopes, Thermometers.

Prices Within Reach of Everyone

Geo. H. Kahn.

OPTICIAN.

201 KEARNY ST., CORNER OF SUTTER

Kodaks and Cameras, Photo Supplies.

KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . .
Centrally Located . .

San Francisco, California

WM. B. HOOPER, - - MANAGER.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts., New York. . . . .

American and European Plan.

WILLIAM T. BANG, Pro.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM For a Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave. Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager.

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., - - San Francisco

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000
Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S.F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO. General Agents.

Cotton Sail Ducks

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks. Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.

Murphy, Grant & Co.

Sutter Street Hammam

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
[Phone Main 5178]

TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS

Open Day and ght for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE

Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne Los Angeles — Blake, McFall Co. Portland, Or.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt. 37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital $2,000,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits, Oct. 1, 1900 $3,511,068.82

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Pentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary

New York, Messrs. Laidlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies; Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China Australia and New Zealand. The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900.....28,938,395.02

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary.....George Tourney
Assistant Secretary.....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier: R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.
Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 305.

LIKE A MAGIC TOUCH

So quickly and easily is the brilliancy restored to tarnished Silver by

Electro-Silicon

SILVER POLISH

If in doubt what's best, why not make the test. Simply send address on a postal.

At grocers and druggists everywhere, and postpaid 15 cents in stamps.

"SILICON,"
30 Cliff St., New York City.

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Byron Mauzy Pianos

308-312 POST STREET

SOHMER Satisfactory to the Eye and Ear. PIANO AGENCY

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

This brand of Wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St.

A. REPSOLD & CO.

FIGPRUNE CEREAL

A Perfect Food Beverage

54% Fruit
46% Grains
100 -
and nothing else

A Substitute for Coffee. Nourishing and Invigorating. YOUR GROCER SELLS IT.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses billiard tables brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.,

TEL. 5610 609 Sacramento St.

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."
There is but one Hotel del Monte.
Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

The WAVE

TEN CENTS

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

This Paper not to be taken from the Library

VOL 22 NO 40 DECEMBER 22 1900

Fire Proof

FUNDS OVER $53,000.000.oo

SURPLUS $15,000,000.oo

INVESTED IN UNITED STATES
$7,000,000.oo

ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Pacific Department

Royal Insurance Building,

PINE and SANSOME STS.,

SAN FRANCISCOe

ROLLA V. WATT, Manager

Jno. R. Hillman, City Manaagr

American Steel & Wire Company

Wire Ropes for

Hoisting Haulage
Power and Transmission
Bridge Work, Etc, Etc.

We make the wires from exceptionally high grade Steel and Iron of our own production, and we offer special features in

STRENGTH DURABILITY FLEXIBILITY

Trolley Wires, Feeder Wires Crown Rail Wires

American Steel & Wire Co.,

8 and 10 Pine Street San Francisco

GEORGE H. ISMON Pacific Coast Sales Agent

TUBBS CORDAGE CO.

Established 1856

MANUFACTURERS OF

Cordage and Binder Twine

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION

Office, 607-613 Front Street

Factory Kentucky St., bet. 22d and 23d

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Meese PRINT, 419 SACRAMENTO ST., S. F.

Homes Built by

The Continental Building and Loan Association

A HOME NOT BUILT BY THE CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

ARE ARTISTIC

UP-TO-DATE

and Within the Reach of any Man on Salary or Regular Income

W. M. CORBIN,

Secretary and Treasurer

Home Office, 222 Sansome St., San Francisco

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey, California

The Wave

Published every Saturday

Published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Entered at the Post Office second class matter.

Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE COMPANY, PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—December 22, 1900

A Christmas Greeting.

Once in the days of old, when the earth was far younger and nearer to the heart of Nature, there was born in the little town of Bethlehem one whose life, be it of God or man, had greater results for the betterment of the world than any before or since. The anniversary of that birthday has become the great holiday of every English speaking race. Wherever the Anglo-Saxon language is known there is a warming at the heart and a casting aside of thoughts of worldly things when the church bells ring out the opening paeons of their Christmas chants.

As a result of this feeling, born of a lofty sentiment and fostered by generations of custom, the Christmas time is one of rejoicing and celebration. To the children who are waifs and gamins of the streets of the city, it means a remembrance of their existence by those more fortunate; to the poor and suffering, it brings the comfort of happier recollections; to the hard-working sons and daughters of toil, it is the time of short reprieve and momentary respite; to the well-to-do, a re-uniting of family ties and the thanksgiving of peace and plenty; to the rich, it means the full knowledge of the power of wealth in the happiness of the ability to give.

Then let the glorious Christmas time, warm with the fires of love and good will, be so firmly welded in the hearts of everyone, regardless of nationality or religious belief, that the time may never come when it shall be regarded as a childish custom, outgrown in the advance of science. Let the spirit of Santa Claus reign as of yore in every childish mind, and the gentle superstition of reindeer and sleigh remain until driven out by the cruel whip of knowledge.

At this the time of holly and mistletoe, of happiness, comfort, friendliness and love, the Wave presents its greetings in the shape of its holiday number. With it go to you, warm from the heart, the best wishes of the season. To you who have been its friends; to you who have never before seen it; to all and to everyone, a merry Christmas and "God rest ye."

A Timely Word to Mayor Phelan.

With the advent of Christmas time, the kindly feeling of good will towards all men arises from the heart, causing the words of severe censure to be tempered with friendliness. To you, Mayor Phelan, the Wave will express itself, candidly, confidentially and publicly. What it has to say to you is meant honestly and fairly, in a friendly spirit, in a kindly way. Do not believe that it is from your friends alone that you hear the pleasant things, or that from your friends you should hear pleasant things alone. Sometimes it becomes the duty of a friend to to say the things which hurt the most, which bite the sharpest and which sting the fiercest.

A man born and reared as you have been is at a disadvantage in one respect: he has no opportunity to make a correct estimate of himself. And it is vital to success in a career such as you have laid out for yourself that one's judgment of oneself should be unerring. In that you fail.

Surrounded as you are, you know but two classes of men, your flatterers and your enemies. Those who fatten upon your bounty, or hope to , and those who seek revenge. You have no friends. No man comes to you honestly and candidly and tells you what is for your own interest, simply for your sake and yours alone. Every one of the sycophant crowd that surrounds meditates you but one thing—advancement at your expense. Your court is like that of Richelieu or Wolsey—ready to desert at the first shock.

Now, you can benefit them and they flatter you. They speak to you with soft words and entertain you with charming pictures of yourself. And they make you ridiculous. You pose as a social leader, and behind your back they laugh at you and mock your birth. You pose as a patron of art. It is your purse alone which wins you faint respect. And what they say when you have bought some high-priced treasure even a friend may be spared the pain of repeating to you. You think you are a reformer, and you have innocently, blindly and stupidly made the name of reform a stink in the nostrils of San Francisco. Your adulators have told you that you are a politician and they and your own conceit have shaped a course that has disrupted your party and driven those who truly desired its success away from you, scampering like rats from a sinking ship.

A year ago you were the most popular young man whom California had introduced to political life. Today you have lost that proud prestige. Your name has become a byword, your acts a target for abuse. The powers regard you as a demagogue, your party as a traitor, and the people as a false alarm.

You are at a crucial moment of your career. You have gone as near to the brink of destruction as any man may dare to approach. It is time to cease sunning yourself in the glories of self-contemplation, to listen for once to words not greased with flattery, to lay aside the vanity that enshrouds you like a pall, and cease pursuing the fatuous shadows of social and political ambition that are dancing you headlong to your ruin.

Be honest. Give the people what belongs to them —their government. It is theirs; they have a right to it. It is not yours to trade in little bits for social recognition; nor may you barter it to purchase silence or reward your enemies. It is a trust reposed in you to be by you administered for them. They believe you recreant to that trust, and only await the opportunity to say so. Unless you turn, unless you change your course, the blow will fall. And when it does, there will go down to political destruction not only you yourself, but those who, by association with you, have shared the odium of your name.

You have one chance more, on January first. Seize it.

A New Law Needed.

The fount of sympathy in the breast of every male member of the human race has been touched during the past week by the newspaper tales of the Smith divorce case. A husband, cross-examined by his wife, is not an unusual spectacle in domestic life and must needs be met with fortitude and resignation. But the husband on the witness stand, the wife as attorney and an audience of interested and grinning sensation-lovers is another matter.

There are laws on the books against cruelty to animals. Should there not be a law against permitting a wife to browbeat her husband with searching questions into his private affairs in the very Hall of Justice?

The Holiday Trade.

San Francisco may jubilate over the holiday trade of the present year. It has never been better, in many lines; in others, it has held well up to the average. The heavy days of the Christmas purchasing are still to come and promise to bring the balance well on the right side of the ledger.

If San Francisco may be taken as an indication, the business of the coast is remarkably encouraging. Money is freely spent and the sale of fancy articles and Christmas toys and notions is a sign of that prosperity which means playthings for the children of the rich and the poor.

Good resolutions begun now will be a little better than if postponed until January first.

The Christmas ratio is about 16 wishes to 1 present

Mr. Gabber is Impressed.

"Mrs. McAddie called today," observed Mrs. Gabber.

"Did, eh?" responded Mr. Gabber from the depths of his evening paper.

"Yes, and she came to see if we wouldn't join their golf club."

"Well," said he, "I'm waiting to hear what you told her."

"Oh, I said it was too late in the season to join now, but we were just as much obliged, and all that."

Gabber rolled his eyes in despair.

"How distinctly a woman's answer!" he mused, aloud. "Weak, polite and non-committal."

"Well, I never did!" exclaimed Mrs. Gabber, indignantly. "I'd just like to know, John Gabber, what more or less I could have said?"

"Ah yes, my dear, 'what less?' indeed," said Mr. Gabber, patronizingly. "But, instead of refusing because of the lateness of the season, you would have shown a little moral stamina, as well as deal a straight blow at a modern form of insanity, by replying, for instance, 'Mr. Gabber and myself happily have not reached that state of mind where pleasure consists in hitting a little ball before us as we tramp over nineteen miles of stubble.'"

"Just imagine my saying that!"

"Impossible, my dear, impossible! I cannot imagine any woman making so straightforward and comprehensive a statement, under any circumstances."

"You know very well you're talking like an idiot!" cried the usually calm Mrs. Gabber, losing her self-possession and trembling on the verge of tears. "You'd give anything to play, but you couldn't master the rules in a thousand years, let alone become a player!"

"Perhaps," said Gabber, "your phenomenal intellect has grasped enough of the subject for you to teach me. Did the lovely Mrs. McAddie attempt to lead your mind through imaginary cow-lots in pursuit of the winsome golf-ball?"

"Mrs. McAddie explained the entire game to me, and, whether you believe me or not, I understand the game perfectly."

"Now see here," exclaimed Mr. Gabber, laying a ten-dollar bill upon the table between them, "I know something about this improved shinny myself. I've been reading newspaper accounts of golf matches all the year, aud if you explain the main points of the game correctly, the ten is yours."

Mrs. Gabber carefully put the bill under a book on her side of the table, and Mr. Gabber lighted a fresh cigar and settled back comfortably, prepared to be sarcastic.

"In the first place," began his wife confidently, "the ground they play on is called a minx."

"Hold up!" interrupted Mr. Gabber. "Did you say minx? Great Scott, woman, links, links!"

"Mrs. McAddie said minx—and I wish you'd keep still till I'm through. The first player makes a little mud-pie, with a point on top, called a mashie, and balances her ball on it. Then she takes her stimy and hits the ball into the first scruff. She walks over and digs it out with an iron-stance, and hits it towards the niblick. For this shot she uses a teeing-cup. Now, if the ball is stopped by a bunko, she runs over and whacks it with her baff-gobble, or perhaps it has fallen into a cleik-spoon, and she gives it a little putter-hole with her toe-loft. When she's sand-ironed all the drives and stolen a strike-off from the last fore, she gives her iron-caddie a rub-o'-the-green, and the foozle is hers."

Mr. Gabber weakly wiped his forehead.

"I'm going out for a few minutes to get the—er—air," he remarked, in what he intended to be a careless tone. "You've acquired a very fair idea of the game, for a beginner, though, of course, some of your statements I might dispute, if I had time. Keep the money, however, Mrs Gabber, just as an encouragement, you know."

When he got outside, Gabber was heard to murmur:

"It doesn't do to let women think they know it all, but that wife of mine certainly has golf down to a fine point. Why, without a glance or so at the rules, I don't believe I could give a better explanation myself."

—The Criterion.

An Exploded Myth.

Once Santa Claus was caught by Phyllis bright
He'd stopped too long a moment to admire.
She slipping down the stairway, treading light,
Found him before the fire.

"What Santa Claus? I've caught you now," she cried
With joyous accents. Then she shook her head.
"Why, you're not Santa? No, don't try to hide.
Who are you, sir?" she said.

"Where is your tangled beard, your hair, so white
Your cheeks of cherry red and twinkling eyes?
You're an imposter! Come here to the light
And tell me, please, no lies."

"Santa Claus? No. There is no Santa Claus;
He's but a myth, exploded long ago,
A childhood's bubble. I'm not he, because I'm Love, you know."

His Poem, History; His Name, Forgotten.

Many poets have written many poems; some to live through the future years like the stars in the heavens, never diminished in radiance or beauty; some to die, with the first breath of reading. A few poets there are whose remembrance is insured by one effort that has risen so far above its fellows that the world selects it as the gem of all and the rest are lost forever.

This was the case with the author of that dearest poem of the childrens' hearts, "The Night Before Christmas." There is probably not one in a hundred men, women and children, who does not know almost by rote this stirring epic of old St. Nick. There is probably not one in a hundred who does know the name of the poet who inscribed the famous lines. Dr. Clement Clark Moore is his name and he was born in 1779, the son of Rev. Dr. Benjamin Moore, second Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York.

It is three quarters of a century since "The Night Before Christmas" was written, and all these years it has lived to gladden the hearts of the little ones, but the soul of the writer passed to the great beyond thirty-six years ago. The verses were composed as a Christmas present to the Moore children, the poem being purely a domestic production and not intended to be seen outside of the household. A relation saw the verses and copied them in her album. Then a friend of this relative from Troy, N. Y., read the poem and sent a copy to the Troy Sentinel, and it appeared in print for the first time December 23, 1823.

Dr. Moore was not pleased at the publication of his poem, considering it unworthy of notice. Twenty years later he included it in a volume, containing other poems. The appreciation of thousands of children made him glad that it had, after all, been issued to the public, for he dearly loved little children. His house was the gathering place for all the girls and boys in the vicinity and he would play by the hour to them upon his violin.

In fact after it became known in the neighborhood that Dr Moore was the author of this beautiful Christmas poem, his house was the Mecca of all the children in the country 'round and he was the most sought after man by childrens' fairs and festivals and holiday parties of all that peaceful neighborhood.

In 1862 Dr. Moore made an autograph copy of the poem for the New York Historical Society. A year later, at the age of eighty-three he passed away. Dr. Moore's remains were laid to rest in old Trinity Cemetery. A tablet has since been placed in St. Peters Episcopal Church, New York, to his memory; but the most lasting and enduring monument to the poet is the love of the children, old and young, who on Christmas eve will sit at their mother's knee around the open fireplace and listen with deep drawn breaths and sparkling eyes to the old, yet ever new tale of the holiday times of the holly wreath and mistletoe, " 'Twas the Night Before Christmas."

Ella A. Burges.

John A. Benson.

John A. Benson was born in Jefferson county, New York, and received his earlier education in the public schools, where, by his indefatigable energy, he won the praise of his teachers and gave promise of making his mark in the world, which promise has been amply fulfilled. From his very youth he showed his natural bent for mathematical problems and scientific subjects, and when, after graduating with distinguished honors from Warren Collegiate Institute of Illinois, he adopted civil engineering as a profession, all who knew him predicted a brilliant and profitable future for him. How true those predictions were, his successful professional career on this coast has shown. At the early age of twenty-one, when most young men are still looking for a profession, he was elected surveyor of Keokuk county, Iowa, which position he held for five years, when, much to the regret of a host of prominent friends, to whom he had, by his agreeable personality and talents, endeared himself, he announced his intention of going to this state. On his arrival in this city he opened an office and was soon in possession of a lucrative business, to which his practical and thorough knowledge of civil engineering entitled him. His offices are situated at 507 Montgomery street, and are probably the best equipped in the state in the way of land plats, maps and books relating to engineering and surveys, outside of the General Land Office. They are the result of many years of hard toil and show every transaction connected with the state lands. The records are corrected daily by reports received direct from various land offices, so that with a complete set of indexes and plat books, Mr. Benson is enabled at any moment to accurately show the condition of any piece of land in California. In addition to locating government lands in this state, Mr. Benson is prepared to secure title to any vacant unappropriated public lands anywhere in the United States, surveyed or unsurveyed, by means of forest reserve rights and other scrips.

Hon. E. B. Edson.

Hon. E. B. Edson, the present Railroad Commissioner for the Northern District of California, is one of the best poised men that has ever been placed in a pasition of prominence in this state. He has established a reputation for equitable dealing between the people and the railroad companies and would, in the opinion of his many friends and supporters, make an admirable state officer on a much larger scale. Although not a native of this state, having been born in Dixon, Ill., in 1836, for thirty-seven years he has been one of its most prominent men. During almost that entire time he has been one of the leading cattle dealers and ranchers, owning large interesrs in Siskiyou County and elsewhere. For more than twenty years he has been known as one of the leaders. He is a man of very simple habits and tastes, with an established reputation for straightforward dealing and a high code of honesty and manliness.

Because of You.

Brown tints upon the hillsides lie,
The Brook's voice brings a solemn tone:
Because of you I dream and sigh —
Because of you, I dream alone.

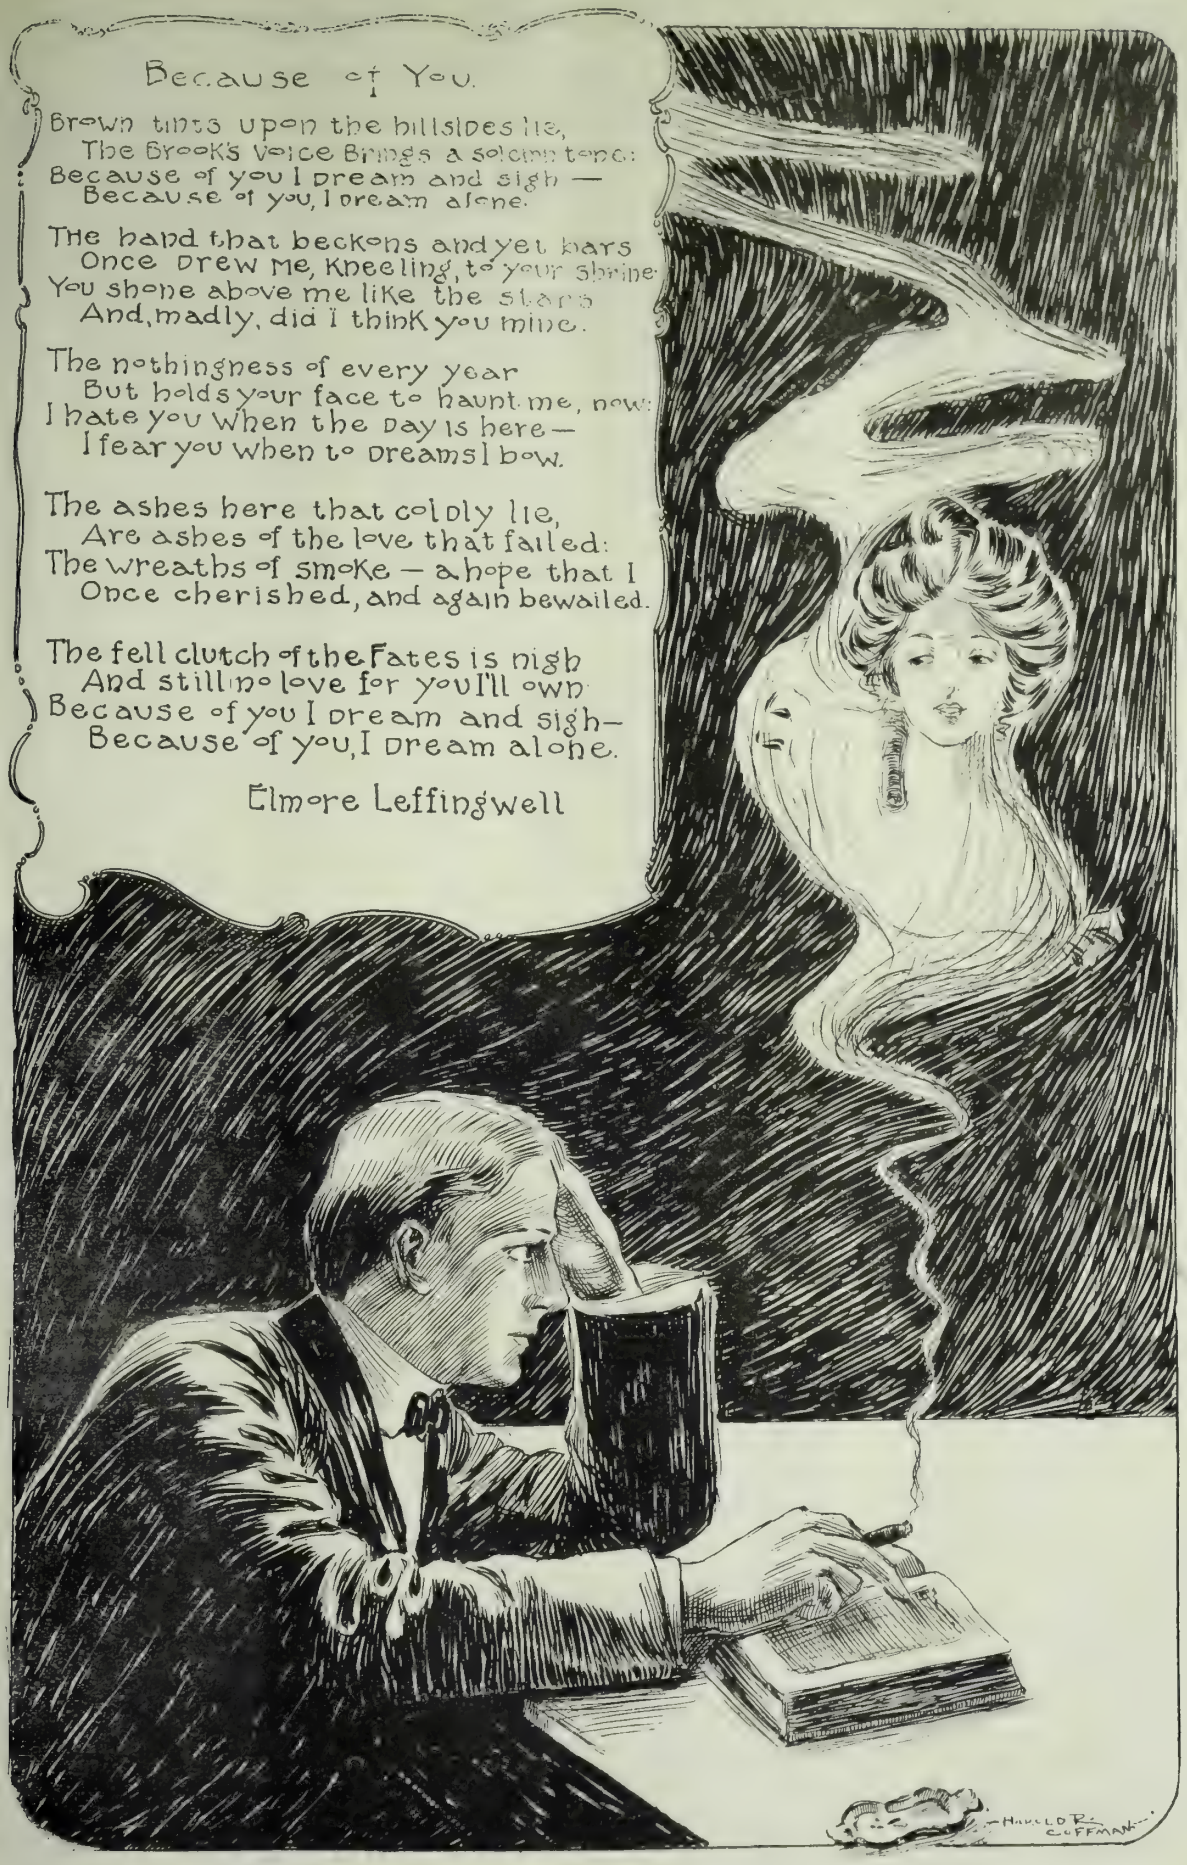
The hand that beckons and yet bars
Once drew me, kneeling, to your shrine.
You shone above me like the stars
And, madly, did I think you mine.

The nothingness of every year
But holds your face to haunt me, now:
I hate you when the day is here —
I fear you when to dreams I bow.

The ashes here that coldly lie,
Are ashes of the love that failed:
The wreaths of smoke — a hope that I
Once cherished, and again bewailed.

The fell clutch of the Fates is nigh
And still no love for you I'll own:
Because of you I dream and sigh —
Because of you, I dream alone.

Elmore Leffingwell



Over the Demi-Tasse

Regardless of the outcome, the Von Schroeder libel suit will leave a trail of black pitch behind, and an odor. It is a remarkably dirty affair throughout, and the principals, named and nameless, will never be made whole in reputation again.

The legal question has but little interest to the public at large. Whether a newspaper has the right to publish articles reflecting upon the character of a man, be the article true or false, is not of live import except to Von Schroeder and the Call. Spreckels can pay if he loses without becoming bankrupt, and Von Schroeder will not go hungry if he does not win. The matter at issue with the people is, do such things as are charged transpire at alleged respectable hotels? If so, is it safe to send one's wife or danghter into the country, to seaside or mountain resort?

There are, of course, some hotels in this state which are so well known as conservative and respectable in their management that the issue cannot be raised. But there are many others which are looking only for the present dollar, regardless of reputation in the future. These hotels are frequently the habitations of men of the Baron Von Schroeder type, who use them as opportunites for chance acquaintances and passing friendships with the summer outing woman whose husband is at the business grind in the city.

The whole truth in the charges made by the Call against Von Schroeder should be presented to the court where the people are the jury, even if not allowed as evidence before Judge Angellotti. If this baron has been guilty of the offenses against decency and against honesty and virtue that are named in the answer to his complaint for libel, the fact that these offenses are not admissible as evidence in the superior court should not withhold the truth from being made known. Let this evidence that is being ruled out be placed in the form of affidavits and let it be published. There is something higher than the courts, and that is popular opinion. The people want to know just how black Baron Von Schroeder is, how guilty or how innocent are the alleged partners to his corruption, and how clean a place is the average summer hotel.

Another Libel Suit Imminent.

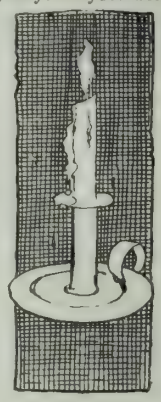
Henri De Rougemont is threatening the Chronicle with a heavy libel suit for intimating that he is the Baron Munchausen of the present era. De Rougemont, who is now in San Francisco figuring on doing some lectures, is probably looking for free advertising. He has been called worse names before by papers just as weighty and just as rich as the Chronicle and there are no records of any big judgments piled up against them.

When Henri De Rougemont's travels were published in the Wide World Magazine of London, they created a stir. They were wildly realistic. His adventures made Stanley look like a weak child. Paul du Chaillu, who was not a bit modest himself, could not begin to reel them off with De Rougemont. Then a London daily went after the explorer and explained to a British public that De Rougemont was a joke; that he should not be taken seriously. The Wide World came out with an explanation at the head of the next installment of the tales of fiction, which was the most farcical thing of the whole affair. They admitted that they had regarded the impossible stories as facts but begged their readers to regard them in future as cleverly told fiction.

De Rougemont, who is a prepossessing enough Frenchman, is here with the idea that San Francisco will enjoy listening to his own tales of his alleged adventures. He had better secure an engagement at the Chutes in Adgie's lion cage. He is a curiosity, not a lecturer.

Surprised His Democratic Friends.

There was a supper one night last week in honor of Mayor-elect M. P. Snyder of Los Angeles. Many of San Francisco's Democrats were there and it was an occasion of great good cheer, Mayor Snyder being one of the few bright spots in a cloudy Republican sky, the result of the fall campaign.



With the wine came free speech— some say a little too free. Isador Dockweiler announced the candidacy of Mayor Snyder for the Governorship, causing the Mayor to blush, look at his feet and deny the announcement as premature. But there were other statements of a confidential nature made at the supper that caused even greater surprise, notably that of L. A. Redman who admitted, much to the surprise of his Democratic friends, that he had voted the straight Republican ticket Nov. 6th.

The Anti-Fussing Association.

Berkeley is to have a new club. The tendency of a number of the male students to devote a large part of their leisure hours to visiting the other sex has bothered the majority of the young men desirous of enhancing the interest in athletics even at the expense of pink teas, dances and receptions. The organization will be called the "Anti-Fussing Association."

It must be explained that in Berkeley "Fusser" is a student prone to spend much of his time in the society of women. It must not be inferred from this that the Berkeley student as a whole is not as susceptible to the charms of the fair sex as any other young men, but the "Fusser" is one who carries his devotion to the extreme.

The by-laws of the organization will be drawn up with much care by some of the most athletic students in the university and to these is given the power of enforcement. Rejected suitors will not be eligible for membership—this in order to show that the association is not formed for purposes of revenge.

Any member of the association who desires to do any "fussing" must first receive permission from the President. He is then in line to be fined for his pleasure. The schedule of fines will be as follows:

For one call, not more than an hour in length, $1.

Duty calls, half rate.

No member may call on the same girl or married female more than once in any month.

For one tea, $3.

A dinner and dance cost $5 each.

For theatres and athletic games, when the member is accompanied by "any girl or married female" the fine is equal to the price of both tickets, chaperons being free.

Evening lectures and concerts cost $1 each.

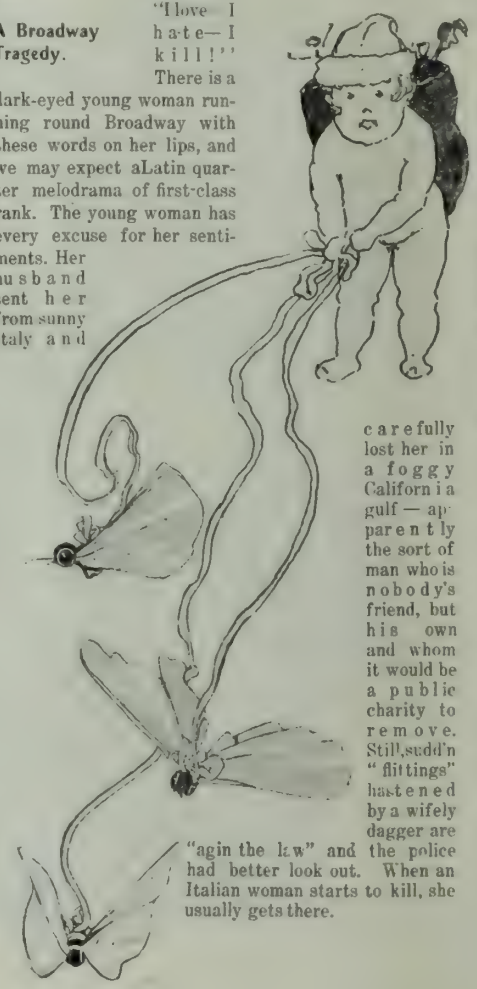
Should one of the members of the association so far forget his obligations as to promise to marry, the members will go into mourning for three days. They are required to wear black bands around their sleeves and participate in funeral orgies at which the offender is treated with the utmost contumely.

A Poetic Outrage on the Dead.

Our warrior dead are threatened with a new horror, their names bid fair to be turned into ridicule by the gasping efforts of a spurious muse. But a few days back, brave Colonel Lascum was borne home with military honors and every sign of national grief. America is not backward in honoring her dead who have fallen on the field. But lo, after the climax of lying in state and military funeral, comes the anti-climax in the columns of the blessed Examiner—a so-called poem by an "American woman" lately returned from China. It is just as well that this American woman does not give her name, to be forever coupled with the word twaddle. Rhythm, grammar and sense are alike lacking to her beautiful effusion, and we are expected to feel pathetic over the information that "When the day had scarcely broken which saw him leave the world, Gorman, his color-bearer, fell clutching the flag still furled"—the sort of jangle we all wrote about the mature age of twelve. Baby muses of ten or twelve may be allowed to write and burn; it is good practice but they should not be allowed to publish in representative papers; above all they should not be allowed to turn the dead into ridicule and harass the feelings of living mourners.

A Broadway Tragedy.

"I love I hate—I kill!" There is a dark-eyed young woman running round Broadway with these words on her lips, and we may expect a Latin quarter melodrama of first-class rank. The young woman has every excuse for her sentiments. Her husband sent her from sunny Italy and carefully lost her in a foggy California gulf — apparently the sort of man who is nobody's friend, but his own and whom it would be a public charity to remove. Still, sudd'n "flittings" hastened by a wifely dagger are "agin the law" and the police had better look out. When an Italian woman starts to kill, she usually gets there.



At the Theatres

LOUISE DRESSER AND PICKANINNIES, ORPHEUM

Cinderella at the Tivoli.

It is not a very novel theme to choose for a Christmas extravaganza, but then one looks for fun and frolic, glitter and display, rather than novelty at this festive season. The good old fairy tale, which delighted us all in our youth, has formed the excuse for more spectacular productions than any other legend, though, as a general rule. especially in the case of more pretentious efforts, most of the story is crowded out to make room for processions, ballets, and other spectacular extras.

But the Tivoli management, wisely enough, has followed very closely the lines of the original Cinderella. We have all the old familiar characters, with a few extras thrown in. We have the good fairy and the demon, the ballroom and the glass slipper, Prince Charming and the two ugly sisters, and oh, the daintiest, sweetest little Cinderella! Even in her soiled, torn kitchen frock she is a thing of pure delight, whilst in her white satin ball dress she is simply rarissante Very few actresses can look innocent and coquettish, demure and piquante, all at once, but pretty Mae Hill somehow manages to accomplish this feat. She is heard at her best in her duet, "I Was a Dainty Little Girl," which she delivers with just that air of maidenly shyness requisite to give it point. The success of the song is immense, and the audience evinces a desire to go on encoring until the next century begins. To give Felix Hartman a chance to display his low comedy talent a new part, that of Buttons, has been written in. The role of a stupid, blundering servant boy just suits this popular actor. It is needless to say that he is in one continuous scream throughout the whole piece. He is brimming over with wag and witticism and his topical songs make the hit of the evening. The most effective of these up-to-date ditties is the conundrum duet, sung with Edward Webb as Baron Boozmont. The two clever actors ask each other all sorts of amusing riddles, such as, "Why does an old maid wear cotton gloves?" If any of our readers want to know the answer to this proposition, they can easily find out by going to the Tivoli.

As Prince Peerless, Miss Maud Williams has every opportunity to display her shapely figure, though the part does not give much scope for acting; and the same may be said of her constant companion and valet, Daudini, a saucy little youth, who is vivaciously pictured by Annie Myers. The two elder daughters, broad, farcical characters, apt to become coarse if not delicately treated, were very amusingly handled by Tom Greene and Fred Kavanagh. Female impersonation, at its best, is not a pretty thing on the stage, but we suppose we must accept it here, since tradition has made it inseparable from Cinderella.

Of course no Tivoli notice is complete without mention of its beauteous chorus. It is superfluous to say that the girls wore the most radiant of costumes, that their many colored tights fitted without a crease, and that Miss Ida Wyatt had drilled them in their dances until they reached a state of mechanical perfection. These things happen at every Tivoli play, so they may be taken for granted. Also, Mr. Fest's scenery, especially the transformation, was a dream of color painting, and altogether it is hard to find fault with the production, which is in every way creditable to this old established house.

HOWARD HALL, AT THE CENTRAL THEATRE.

At the Orpheum.

The Orpheum's Christmas bill, commencing on Sunday, will be entirely new from start to finish. It will be contributed by the Orpheum Road Show, a combination which the Orpheum management considers without its equal the world over. It took over two years to get together, cost an enormous amount of money and includes every type of first-class vaudeville. Every artist on the bill has occupied the headline position in every show they have previously appeared in, and none of them have played other than the best houses in the East and Europe. A list of the attractions will be sufficient to satisfy the most exacting of the justice in the Orpheum's claim to having a "perfect" bill.

Severus Shaffer is the greatest equilibrist in the world. He is the king of all jugglers and will be remembered by many as the sensation of Kiralfy's America at the World's Fair in Chicago. Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne require no introduction to anybody. Cressy is the most successful writer of short plays in the world and will present one of his latest. Johnson, Davenport and Lorello, comedians and acrobats, will present their novel specialty, "The Farmer and the Football Players." Louise Dresser and her pickaninnies are known in San Francisco, as is Jack Norworth the monologist. Bertie Fowler once gave San Francisco a brief glimpse of her wonderful mimicry, but New York likes her too well to let her go very often or for long. The new moving picture machine, the comeograph, will be shown for the first time, and Truly Shattuck will continue for one week. There will be special matinees Christmas and New Year's days.

At the California.

"At the White Horse Tavern," which comes to the California Theatre for the week beginning Sunday afternoon, Dec. 23d, with matinees Christmas and Saturday, was an immense success at Wallack's Theatre, New York, and the piece was praised universally by both press and public.

This comedy from the German, which has been well received by American theatre-goers in all the cities visited, comes with the endorsement of a high character. Unlike most German comedies, it is said that it possesses none of the farcical elements. It depends on logical and natural developments for its laughs—developments, however, that are described as surprising as they are amusing. The scene is in the Austrian Alps, in the little mountain inn, where lovesick tourists and the red-cheeked hostess take part in no less than four heart affairs. Besides, a law-suit figures in the story, so that where laughter ends, intense interest is said to begin, a somewhat unusual sequence in present day comedies.

Eduard Strauss and his orchestra direct from Vienna will follow.

PRIMROSE AND DOCKSTADER'S MINSTRELS; AT THE COLUMBIA.

"Old Recluse"

By W. H. Irwin

On all three sides of the outlook lies a wilderness of back stairs, clotheslines, and high, blank sidewalls. The whole view is painted with the worn sea-gray, in which the breeze off the Japan current tints all exposed things in San Francisco. Just opposite my window is a highbound back yard, bounded like a court by the back porches of a house of three flats, the sidewall of another house, and the rear of a back-court dwelling which fronts on no street, but occupies a little unnamed niche in the space between street and alley. How they ever designate its inhabitants in the directory I can not see. The lord of the top flat in this house is the most interesting inhabitant of the neighborhood. I take him to be an Italian. although he may be French; certainly he is of some Latin blood. How he lives or what is his source of income no one around seems to know; but he must have independent means of some sort, because he never stirs from his house, except on Sunday morning—of which, more anon. He is well past his working days, very grave, very dignified and very fat.

The abrupt height of the narrow stairs, which are the only approach to his door, combined with his own bulk, dignity and circumstance, may explain why he never ventures afield. Every day the grocer comes to the court-yard below and fills a basket hanging to a cord and attached at the other end to the rail of the back landing, with the day's provisions. Twice a week he adds a jug of wine, and the householder returns the empty jug by another cord. Generally, he stops for a long distance conversation.

So far as I can see, this is his only communication with the outside world, on week days at least. But on Sundays, a trifle after ten o'clock, he issues forth, dressed and decent. He wears a black frock coat, bound with braid an inch thick, a broad felt hat, bright blue trousers, and an immactlate white tie. He goes down carefully, but disdaining to lower his dignity by holding on the rail, and so away to church.

The ascent an hour and a half later is made with more difficulty, and he is fain to stop and pretend to study the landscape two or three times on the way. I can imagine that he drops down with a sigh of relief when he is once safe inside.

No one ever comes to see him, except a collector once in a while, and no one else lives in his third story flat. What he does all day, outside of his domestic labors, which he must perform for himself, no one in the neighborhood knows. Once in a great while he sits by his back door in the little box of a landing and smokes while he watches the children play below. Bold as they are with all other things in their small corner of the world, they do not venture to presume upon his notice, and he makes no advance. I fancy that if the ice were ever broken, he would have much to say to them.

Once each day, generally late in the afternoon when he stands the least chance of disturbing the neighbors, he begins to play the cornet. The neighborhood stops to listen. Untrained in music as I am, I fail to recognize the tunes. They are not classics; they certainly are not the popular airs of our own making; I rather imagine that they are the folk-songs of his own land. And how he plays! Not like us stolid Northmen, with the blare of the Norse bugles still in our blood, but tenderly, gently, with little pats and caresses, as a Spaniard makes love or a Flemish woman worships God. He closes always with the same tune, a peasant love song I take it to be. The neighbors, who have stopped their homely trafficking on the back stairs, return to their washing, their gossip and their play. A moment later he is bustling round getting supper

I believe that he is happy with the quiet happiness belonging to the monk and the recluse. But there is something in his face, in his demeanor, in his whole way of life that tells of burnt-out passions and old, dead desires. The true story of his struggle and final submission, of his course into this little cove of the world—what a tale it would make!

The Back Yard Cats

The possession of numerous cats and dogs is a mark and brand of the poor. In the tenement of three flats backing up the dwelling of my old recluse there are about a score of cats and three philosophical dogs past that puppy age when all cats are marked for legitimate prey. On floor number one lives a striped tabby and five variegated kittens half-grown. The next floor above has three grown cats of peaceable disposition, and on the very top floor dwells a big battered, gray tomcat, the patriarch of the region and terrible in battle. He is at once the tyrant and protector of the whole colony. Being equal to the task of thrashing any dog on earth, he makes the three who dwell in his court preserve a dignified distance. The Murphys' setter, which, like all his kind, is of a polite and affable nature, has approached him once or twice, to my knowledge, with an offer of friendship, and has gone away with a bloody nose and a drooping tail.

The chief care of Tom's life, however, lies in the other cats of his own sex which venture in to visit his harem. This casus belli furnishes him about two fights a day on the average. He has such a reputation in the neighborhood that no other cat will face him to do battle openly. So he resorts to strategem. Whenever he discerns a Lothario from without peeping over the roofs or sneaking around the fence-corners, he goes into hiding behind an ash-barrel or a washtub. The intruder glides in, stops, takes a survey, sees a clear coast and approaches the nearest tabby with a honeyed air. The guardian of his fireside waits with lashing, expectant tail until Lothario is committed beyond hope of escape. Then he breaks cover with a "yowl" of joy and rage, hurdles through the air like a ten-inch shell, and takes his opponent full to the front. The fight lasts usually about five strenuous seconds; then Lothario streaks over the wall, and the home guard walks back to his nest with a tough swagger.

A fence divides his home court from our back yard, which lies twenty feet below my second story window. This morning I saw him on our side of the fence lying on a pile of lumber and apparently asleep. When a cat seems to be asleep in any place except his own home, he is concealing some dark, deep purpose. Knowing this, I watched him. Presently a young, black tomcat came from under our house, reconnoitered, and shambled across the yard on noiseless feet toward a hole near the bottom of the fence. The neighbor's gray opened one of his big eyes and watched. The black took another survey, saw the head of his enemy peering above the lumber, and broke for the boundary. Like a flash the gray was on him, and the fight resolved itself into a race for the hole. The black reached it first, got his head and shoulders through and stuck there momentarily while he squeezed in his lithe body. That instant's delay gave the gray time to reach him. He delivered three quick scratches, rapid as the vibrations of a watch-spring, and the black ran like a streak down the court with his tail as bare as a rat's, leaving the victor to snarl over a bunch of black hair tangled in his redoubtable left paw.

And yet this Ulysses has been vanquished by the Powers of Darkness; has turned tail before an imagined terror. It happened a week ago when the Murphy baby, who plays in our premises when it is washday in his own, left one of those stuffed cotton cats in our yard. I had discovered it and was wondering whether I should return it to Mrs. Murphy, thus placing little Ignatius in danger of a whipping for carelessness, or whether it would be better to hand it over to Ignatius himself, when the warrior hove in sight returning from an expedition, with some new wounds on his gray skin. Just for an experiment I put the cotton cat directly in his path. He stopped; his tail quivered and lashed; and he crawled sidewise towards this new enemy with an offer of a fight. The cotton cat looked straight forward and never moved.

Tom gave the low snarl which means in cat language, "You dassn't knock the chip off my shoulder." The cotton cat sat on its cotton tail and smiled pleasantly, gazing meanwhile directly into Tom's eyes. The warrior stopped to study the new phenomenon; the eyes remained fixed on him. He shifted his own gaze from side to side, but each time that he looked back those terrible eyes were still fixed. Tom's tail began to rise, stiffen and swell, and he moved stealthily backward, the picture of fear. It was at this point that a terrible, blood-freezing development took place. I reached out with a broomstick, unnoticed by the concentrated Tom, and shoved the cotton cat forward on his face, directly toward the mortal cat. That settled it. With a caterwaul and a rush, Tom went over the fence, up a shed, over its roof and away into the world. It was a whole day before he summoned up the courage to come home, and two more before he ventured into our yard. I am not sure he would be over his scare even now, had not the fights caused by his absence given him occupation and turned his mind into other channels.

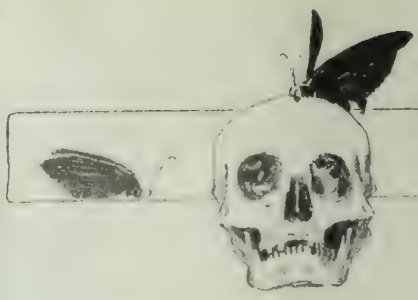
Mrs. Fiske has won a signal victory over the Theatrical Trust in the Denver litigation. It will be remembered that Frank E. Carstarphen, a lawyer of Denver, entered into a contract with the managers of the Denver Theatre last June for the use of that house during the week of January 7, and subsequently contracted with the manager of Mrs. Fiske for her appearance there during that week. The Denver Theatre was then a non-Trust house. It subsequently was brought under Trust auspices, with the evident purpose of excluding Mrs. Fiske from Denver, and the agent of the Trust informed Mr. Carstarphen that Mrs. Fiske's engagement had been canceled by the new management of the theatre. Mr. Carstarphen applied in the District Court of Colorado for a temporary injunction to prevent interference with his contract, and it was issued. The agents of the Trust contested the case, but last Friday Judge Butlar decided it finally, making the temporary injunction permanent, and thus rebuking a high-handed attempt to interfere with a legal contract and to shut Mrs. Fiske out of Denver.

"When a thing is ended, it's ended," said I, "and that's all there is to it!"

My friend smiled.

"You forget," said he, "the revolution in the Philippines!"

A CHINESE JULIETTE.



Malice Aforethought.

The questionable sweets of Juan Real's revenge; as told by Ana the wife of Antonio

Nita use live in this lil valle; Nita and her madre, an' after pobre Santiago. You have hear of Nita mia? No? Not hear of Nita an' her maridage triste?

You like me tell you? Ay! Sit here, Senora; here is sof' moss by la Zanja. Up here so high, it go tinkl', tinkl', all year roun', give Nita water plenty, grass for cow, wood for she cut it.

Now pobra my Nita lie in holy groun'; but la Zanja tinkl', tinkl', just the same.

Por Dios, it is hot, Senora! You tek you hat for fan, no? To t'ink in winter snow is here so deep; all down in the chaparral, when Nita die. So col; so col; la montana! but no for long.

Padre Julian an' young Enrico climb the trail—where you came now; they no have seen Nita for one week, nor I; they fin' them so, hand clasp in hand—Santiago on the bed, she sit beside; the door is open, snow blow on the floor, she does not know. We t'ink he die, then she no live alone; her heart is break.

The story? Ay, thou hast no patience; even as Nita herself, before el Montereno come. Then listen:

La madre, Carmen, is the sister of my husban'; but Nita is a big girl when I marry. She laugh, an' dance an' snap her lil' fingers at my weddin'. "I no go marry!" she say, mockin', "we have plenty clo'es, plenty eat! What do with a husban'?"

Ol' Carmen sigh, an' shake the white hair down. "Foolish girl," she answer, "thy madre no go to be with thee always!"

"Then I go to Ana!" she say, an' put lil' coaxing han's on my arm so I say come; but she never come.

Juan Real is so handsome then; so tall, so straight, like the blue gum; the bes'-shot, the bes' shearer, in all San Bernardino country. The girls peek at him under the rebosas; it is say that for him ol' Don Enrico sen' la Sensrita Bella to the sisters at Los Angeles; an' he love Nita. Ay, Madre de Dios! the love shine from his eyes as the stars from heaven! He dance only with her at la fiesta, he kneel by her at holy sacrament, but Nita will none of him.

Bent ol' Marta Real hobble up the trail groanin", the sweat upon her forehead, to ask the joy for her son, but Nita say again as at my weddin', "I no go to marry—not now—all!"

"Let be as she say," la madre mutter so sadly to her friend. "If one drive her she be like the ugly burro, turn the tail another way."

Then that ol' witch call after my laughin' lil' minx: "The saints deal with her as she with my Juanito, Carmen Vegao!" an' Carmen bow her head, like make "Amen," but Nita only cry out so saucily, "Adios, adios, my mother-in-law," an' turn away.

Have she other lovers? Dios he me almo, she have a score, but for no one have she any eyes at all till Santiago come.

Don Enrico bring him here from Monterey; he is a vacquero of renown; his eye is black, his mustachio curl.

Ay de mi, but girls will love a stranger always! Why, t'ink you? He saw Nita first with net baskets at Los Olivos; he follow, see her home; after that the trail grow deep from the hoofs of his horse, where no horse been before.

Juan hear, we know; he no spik of it ever; but ol' lame Marta cry, cry, all day, when he no at home.

He grow thin an' black; an' we all are sorry that his long time love be thrown away by this silly chit, for the beck of the bow-leg Montereno; for, you see, the vacqueros, the herders my husban', every man an' woman have jealousy for the stranger. The girls be glad for comfort him; but no! he dance no more, he come no more to the mass; he live in the hills, hunt, say—bring not much game, that's all.

One day Nita come to me, her eyes red, her face white. It is the day of her betrothal. "Santiago Sanchez an' Juan Real meet in the chaparral," she say. "Juan have his gun, Santiago only the riata."

"Call 'Tonio!" she cry. "Tell him to bring his gun!" an' she stan' trem'lin'; but 'Tonio is gone to la ranchita—For me, I can jus' wring the han's an' sob.

"Come thou, then!" she scream in my ear, like the wil'cat; she pull me by the arm an' drag me with her, cryin'. We run, run, pant, sob, up the trail till we hear voices; not high like men who knife an' shoot, but deep, and hard, and col'—like the steel.

"You lie! She promise me this very day!" It is Santiago.

"Sh-h-!" Nita whisper to me fiercely; "what has Juan say? I promise him! Ah-h!" Then we hear Juan, the words hiss like the snake:

"Si, you go to marry Nita, you no live to be the husban'! I, Juan Real, say it. She is mine."

I feel the girl shake, for my arm aroun' her. "Never!" she mutter in her teeth; "I hate him!" but before she no hate Juan, she only care not a bit.

We listen like the deer. Nita has the gun of my Tonio point at Juan, for we see them now, but I hol' her han'—I no will let her shoot if I can help. It is one lil' minute—it seem an hour while we stan'.

Santiago have the riata hung on the saddle; his eye like the coal—he have no fear. "Caramba! Peon dog," he shout, "Take that!"

Across Juan's face it go—the riata. It start the blood; it make him reel; ay, how he scream! but he see Nita an' he never lif' the gun; he turn his face aroun' an' walk away.

Ay, I am wil'. I never look to see Juan Real play the coward, swallow the insult. "You stranger beas'!" I shriek. "The Saints of Heaven strike——" but Nita hol' her han' over my mout, I no can say the rest. Then pobra my Nita is happy no more. It is the curse of ol' Marta. No? She live in fear all time for Santiago. She grow like the shadow woman; she is all eyes, so large, so scare,—look for Juan hid in the chaparral, watch for the can'l her lover set in his window to please her: for he is very tender, this Santiago, while he laugh all the time at her warning, an' he hurry up his cabin by her garden over there. See? For he say if they be not marry soon she melt all away.

But she—she change the day for their weddin', ay, twice she put it off; have not Juan say he no shall live to be husban'?—only it is no good to change the day of marriage; it is—you say—on-luck-y. But then I no scold her at all. I t'ink if it is my 'Tonio in danger, an' I sorrow for my lil' one; for Santiago, he so good to her I forget he is el Montereno.

Of Juan I no hear much; he is away, he is at work, he have a scar—he talk not at all; but the face of ol' Marta Real is as the face of the dead.

They marry in May, with the roses, for Santiago will no more be put off. Ay yi, that is so big a weddin'!

The ladies come from Los Olivos, and young Don Enrico: Ah, the beautiful dress for Nita mia! an' from the brother a fan of feathers! No girl in the village has the like.

From the village, from the rancheria, from the hills, the people come. Is Nita no la favorita? Ay, yi, so big a weddin'! and Nita is like the white lily in the garden of roses, like a spirit from the holy paradise! the voice of Padre Julian trem'le when he bless her.

But, look you! the day before I go to Carmen Vegao: "What of Juan?" I say, "Thou hast fear, my sister, No?"

The ol' brown cheek go grey like ashes; she spik up so, ver' quick. "No speak that name to our Nita! He is gone; Santiago himself tol' me—he is gone a week!"

Nita is in the new cabin; I go to her. "So you no care to live with me now, Senorita!" I cry gaily; I like mek' come to her lips the saucy look I miss; "Por Dios! thou say no longer: 'I no go to marry!'"

She go trem'le, trem'le, where she stan', hol' out her lil' hands to me like I strike her: "Ana mia, Ana mia, I am punished by the Saints!" She sway like she fall, so I run to her; something black fly past her head,—I pray she has not see; trem'le too, I tek her in my arms like I can save her. Ay de mi!

You know the sign, Senora, No? the big black mariposa—butterfly? Madre de Dios, pray you see it never!

I no tell a soul what happen; but those two days I slip the beads like never in my life before.

In the chapel I no see one face from another—only the yellow skin of ol' Marta by the door, her col' eyes on the lily of my soul; but the eyes of Nita are two star—I t'ink she is no more scare; I pray to the holy Maria. At the fiesta she show me the dagger in her bosom; "If Santiago die, I die!" say she.

It is over; the girls, the men are gone; the night is come; the bridegroom has no hurt. I bless the Saints an' go.

It is Antonio shek me in the early day an' cry: "Come." I no say, "Where?" I t'ink of the black mariposa, an' I shiver like I am col'.

Look you, Senora? Is not the mother curse enough?

"The Saints deal with her as she with my Juanito!" witch Marta say: an' Nita no is glad in her betrothal—not one single day. But the soul of Juan Real is black—the black mariposa? Who can know?

He no stan' to fight his rival when he may, he no shoot him down before the whole worl'—but the Saints too slow for him—he strike at her with Santiago; so is his impious t'reat fail.

What he do? Have they no harm?

Ay yi! the fine new cabin by the zanja! the bed, the chairs—Santiago bring all from la ciudad—the gif's, the beautiful gif's of the weddin'. All gone, all burn!

It is days that Nita no can tell me; she is like a girl craze. Dead? her husban' dead? No, no, Senora! Am I no tell you el renegado fail of his t'reat he mek?

Pobre Santiago! Pobre my Nita! She is asleep, he tell me by'm-by; som'at brush across the face an' ek her—again the black mariposa; she see gret ht like the moon—by her win'ow the fierce eyes ze, an' mek her shudder; she go to scream, but no n' come.

is the eye of Juan Real at her win'ow; she know a o can scream. Soon the smoke roll in an' choke he, he see the gret flame jump, an' Juan is gone; she can move—an' Santiago sleepin'.

I row so hot her head like burs', she struggle in her ul; then she t'ink they die toget'er, an' she pray.

Wh come nex' she never know; she wek in my arm, t cabin all is gone, but her husban' ben' over and wh er, "Is she hurt?" She see he live.

When e can see his face she faint once more; the brigh lack eyes all scar an' burn; his strong swift han ll seam an' stiff.

He ride more the wil' mustang, he t'row no more the riata; t save her he is cripple all his life, an' Nita mus' sti mek the baskets, still work in the lil' garden, like t girl who no go to marry, in the years before el Monte no come!

La madre die, a' Nita mus' work harder; her babies no live long; an' s she grieve; her husban' never be quite well again, but they are happy. Are they no toget'er all the years—eight, nine?

An' when he die, she die her heart is brek' an' so we come an' fin' them in th snow.

Por Dios it is hot! What come of Juan? Who know? One day they fin' a body in the chaparral; it be a long time dead. Some say the man is Juan, but some say no, that Juan is gone away.

—Gertrude B. Millard.

Closeness Personified.

There's a good story told on a young fellow here noted for his closeness. He went to spend the night with a friend. During the entire night he betrayed much restlessness, which kept the host wide awake, and finally the slumberer betrayed signs of violent emotion. "He's going to have a nightmare," said the friend, "but he always grumbles so when you wake him up that I hate to disturb him." He waited awhile longer, sitting up in bed staring on the miserable sleeper, and finally, becoming alarmed, he aroused him. He sprang up in bed, glared wildly round and said: "Where am I? I don't see the storm?"

"Why, here in my room," said the host, soothingly. "Don't you remember you stayed all night with me? I beg your pardon for waking you up, but you carried on so I had to."

"Beg my pardon," gasped the guest. "I shall never be grateful enough to you. I dreamed I was out with Miss Bud and a terrible storm came up, and my shoes were new, and I was just ordering a coupe for two when you roused. Old boy, you have saved me a dollar."

And the host says his friend was actually afraid to go to sleep again that night, for fear the coupe would come.—Louisville Times.

Not Extremely Binding.

One morning Pound Officer Tait had occasion to rope in a fine Jersey cow which had escaped from her owner's lot and was roaming the streets at will.

This action evoked the following letter from the owner:

"Chief Richards, Old Friend: The pound man hauled my cow into court this morning for prowling. As it was her first offense, please let her off with as light a fine as possible G. W. DAVIS."

And underneath the letter the chief scribbled the following instructions to the pound man:

"Release the old cow referred to on her own recognizance."

The Business Instinct.

Poverty-stricken suitor—Sir I have come to ask you for your daughter's hand.

The merchant prince—I am quite willing to believe you love my daughter, but I am anxious to know why you have brought your kodak at such an inopportune time?

Suitor—I am so passionately fond of photography besides, I am entered in an amateur photographer's competion, and I wished to take a shot at your astonished face when you heard my proposal. It will sesure me a prize. Thus I shall profit either way.

The merchant prince—My son, come to my arms! I shall make you a partner in my house.—Collier's Weekly.

Her Distinct Advance.

[A. J. Hare's "Story of my Life."]

"British Museum" Newton, the archaeologist, was a capital story teller, and Mr. Hare has preserved two or three of his tales. One is a spiritualistic seance, where an old cockney was informed that the spirit manifested was his deceased wife, whereupon the following dialogue took place:

"Is that you, 'Arriet?"

"Yes, it is me."

"Are you 'appy, 'Arriet?"

"Yes, very 'appy."

"'Appier than you was with me, 'Arriet?"

"Yes, much 'appier."

"Where are you, 'Arriet?"

"In 'ell.

Optional, but Usual.

Tommy—When a member of parliament first goes into office does he have to swear?

Papa—Yes, my boy.

Tommy—When he goes out does he have to swear then?

Papa—Well, he is not compelled to.—The King.

An Unjust Charge.

"Penelope is so abominably mannish."

"Mannish! I wish you could see her carve."—Denver Times.

When morning's rosy fingers
Unbar the gates of day,
And through the open portals
The sun god takes his way;
When choirs of sylvan warblers
Loud hail the budding morn,
And myriad tinted beauties
Fair Nature's dress adorn;

When June, with countless blossoms,
Has decked the emerald sod,
Nursed by the pearly dewdrops,
Warmed by the smiles of God,
Look out upon old Neptune,
The monarch of the deep,
In whose broad swaying kingdom
So many mortals sleep.

They lie in coral caverns,
The sea flowers deck their bed,
And never an earthly whisper
Disturbs their slumbering dead.
Their mounds the shell-strewn hillocks,
Their shrouds green ocean's strands,
Their requiem a silence
God only understands.

Across the sandy beaches
The breakers come and go
With ever ceaseless measure
A wond'rous ebb and flow;
Yet 'neath this smiling ocean,
This restless, quivering sea,
A myriad hearts lie waiting
Till Dawn's eternity!

Lucy Callisch

THE REDWOODS

Clasping cool hands, fair Shade and Silence move
In majesty serene throughout the place;
Queens of the realm of leaf-fringed solitude,
Envelope they with soft and quiet dreams.
Their lovers—kings—the mighty Redwood trees,
Who tower majestic—glorious over all.
All nature looketh upward to the king—
The forest king, and lowly homage pays.
The greening ferns up-thrust their dainty heads,
And wild Aeolus moves among the boughs
And sends an answering message back again;
Pale violets peep from tiny nests of green,
Adding their perfume to the quiet air,
While on the swaying bough the robin's nest
Rocks gently, and the mother-bird croons low,
And trills a lullabye of peace and rest.
Beneath the perfumed tapestry of pine
We lie and dream throughout one golden day.
Slim sunbeams slant between the thick-wove boughs,
But scarce are bold enough to venture in
The home of Shade and Silence, and the realm
Of good king Redwood—sovereign of the place.
Cool leaves and trembling petals drop within
The tinkling silver brooklet, scarce espied,
And soft Olympian breezes waft a kiss,
While the vast redwoods murmur in the wind.
The forest Dryads here are soothed to sleep
Upon a bed of dreamy quietness;
While swaying flowers lean o'er the water's brim,
And gaze in vanity upon their grace.
Where woven boughs shut out the dazzling day,
The spirit of the Shade her scepter wields;
Smiling upon the flowers and the birds,
And gazing ever at the forest king,
Whose massive arms protectingly reach down
To draw cool Shade and Silence to his breast.
But now the merry birds their warblings hush,
And Dusk, with noiseless footsteps, cometh near;
The salt breeze blows from off the dark'ning sea,
And brings with it the moan of restless waves.
Day closes all the flowers, ere she goes,
While Shade and Silence clasp seductive arms
Around the Redwoods—and dark night falls.

—Jessie Juliet Knox.

"In Terrorem."

By G. Canninge.

Extract from Mrs. Kenworthy's Private Diary.

Even in my private Diary, which, after all, is but Self speaking to Self, how is it possible I can bring myself to write down the words? Yet it is better I should commit them to paper, that the record, in plain black and white, may make me feel more assured that what I have passed through to-day was not a mere dream, but an actual passage in my life.

All seemed going well. Four years married—the very happiest years of my life—and I was beginning to feel so safe, and to value my happiness and my safety every day more and more. Why, who was there could destroy my happiness? Not a soul knew of "it." No one except—no, I cannot bring myself to write the name—and he had vanished, gone I knew not where. I had never seen him and he had never troubled me since—that time. It seemed as though arranged by a Higher Power that a husband should come, in order that I might be given another chance. And, God knows, I availed myself of it to the full, thanking Him, the Great Deliverer, on my knees night and day for the chance that had been given me.

All was going on well then, till to-day.

Robert had given me a special permit to visit the Infirmary along with the Chaplain. I was walking down the ward, and the Chaplain was just a little in advance of me and was bending over one of the convicts, speaking to him when, turning my eyes a little to the left, I saw him, and at the same moment—he saw me.

How I forced myself to keep still and not utter a sound is even now incomprehensible to me. Hitherto, human powers of self-command must have been altogether underrated. In fiction, I should have screamed out, and started back in abject terror. In reality I only opened my eyes wider, and a strong shock vibrated through me, as if my heart were beating up against my brain and shaking my whole frame with the impact. Then I stood still for a moment and looked at him.

He was a good deal changed since the time when he was an officer quartered at York, and as I stood gazing at him, a train of memories clustered and crowded themselves round me, and rushed past me again. Perhaps they occupied only the hundredth part of a second in their transit. But during that infinitesimally small moment I had absolutely clean forgotten that this great horror had presented itself in living flesh before me. It was the past only that was present with me. The next instant, I was recalled to to-day, for the man raised his finger scarcely an inch above the bed-clothes and beckoned me. Then at once I knew I was in his power, and that he was exercising his whole sway over me.

A step or two took me to his bedside. A little latitude is allowed to the Governor's wife; or rather, the warders, thinking it well perhaps to keep on good terms with "Colonel Kenworthy's Lady," ignored the latitude I took, though one of them, very soon after I had approached the bed, made for the same spot; but not before the man in the bed had found time to hurriedly whisper—

"You must get me out of this—you can guess the consequences if you don't. Pass the quarry when I'm at work next, and I'll drop a scrap of a note;" then aloud, "Yes, madam, the pain is great at times, but I trust I shall soon be well."

"No talking, No. 413!"

"I fear it was my fault," I said. "I asked the man how he was."

"Beg pardon, M'm; but of course the rules must be kept to."

"Of course! Is the man seriously ill?"

"No, M'm; only attack of rheumatism. Doctor says he'll be fit for work in a week."

A MONTH LATER.

Extract from the "Havenmouth Gazette."

"The escape must have been singularly well planned and arranged, and doubtless material aid has been afforded the man by friends outside the prison. Money and clothes must by some means have been supplied him—how, or by whom, it is as yet impossible to say. . . . At a late hour last night the police had no clue whatever to the whereabouts of the convict. The all-important point lies in the answer to the questions: Will the runaway's money hold out? and will he be furnished with a fresh store when present funds run short? Should the reply to these queries prove to be in the affirmative, the task which Justice has set herself to perform will, we fear, be an extremely difficult one. It should be added that Colonel Kenworthy, the Governor of the prison, deserves all possible credit for the prompt yet, unfortunately, up to the present, unavailing measures he has taken to lay the escaped prisoner by the heels."

THREE WEEKS LATER.

A Room in a London Lodging-House.

A Man: All I can say is, "it's gone!"

A Lady: I can not help you. I can not let you have any more. I have no more.

A Man: You'll have to get it, Maudie.

A Lady: Impossible! I can not forge checks.

A Man: That is a mauvaise plaisanterie, unworthy of you. Painful allusions do not make good repartee.

A Lady (in a tone of despair). How is it possible I can raise it?

A Man: It is for you to discover the way, Maudie. I can not even suggest one.

A Lady (with sudden vehemence): And supposing I stop the supplies?

A Man: If you do, I tell your husband!

A Lady: If you discover yourself, he sends you back to prison!

A Man: And risks the fact of his wife's "indiscretion" coming out. No, I don't think he'd do that. He'd buy me off sooner and shut my mouth that way. Mind, I don't want him to know of it. I don't want to ruin your married happiness—of the two, I'd sooner not. But I must live—I mean I think I must. But (decisively), understand this clearly, Maudie, that unless the money is here by Tuesday next, I go straight to Colonel Kenworthy. [Pause.

A Lady: I'll—see—what—if it is poossible—I——

A Man: Don't faint, Maudie, Maude—Maude! The people will wonder what's happening. Come, Maude! Ah, that's better!

A YEAR LATER.

Extract from a Letter.

. . . . I'm dreadfully sorry, Mandie; but I shall have to trouble you again. I've been ill—very ill. The doctor said it was heart, though you'd probably disagree with him there. I've been near death's door. I dare say you wish the door had opened. But it didn't. Not this time. However, one thing is certain; I'm broke—stoney! You will have to help me once more, Maudie. Only this once. For there's a probability of my marrying a widow—a widow "with means," who used to come to the hospital and read to the patients. She was very kind to me, and, I think, took a strong fancy to me. But I must rig myself out and look like a gentleman before I can, with any face, pay court to her. Besides, I've got to live all the time the courtship is proceeding, haven't I? So, Maudie, send me some money. As much as you can. And, remember, it will be for the last time. If you don't—but, there, I can't bear to threaten. Only, you know the consequences.

Answer to Above.

I can help you no more. It is impossible—do you hear? impossible. This is final If you seek my husband you will not find him. By the time this reaches you we shall be far away.

ANOTHER YEAR LATER.

A Small Foreign Watering-Place: Colonel Kenworthy and his wife are seated on a bench in a sequestered walk overlooking the sea. Time: Evening.

Colonel Kenworthy: Absolutely still, is it not, dear?

Maude: Yes, except for the tiny sounds made by the falling pine-needles and the far-off "plash-plash" of the water—and they only accentuate the stillness. It almost seems out of place to disturb the hush by speaking above a whisper—resting Nature might resent it. Sighing, dear?

Colonel Kenworthy: No, Maude; or, if I was, it was only a sigh of content—"a sigh that mocks a smile." Doesn't Shakespeare say that, or something like it? I think this is the very pleasantest holiday we've had. Certainly pleasanter than last year's, when you were so ill.

Maude (a slight shudder passing over her): Yes, yes! That was a dreadful time. Don't let us speak of it. (Short pause.) I'm glad we didn't dine at table d'hote, but left the visitors to it; they have given us this quietude in exchange. A good bargain, was it not?

Colonel Kenworthy: For us, dear, yes.

Maude (dreamily): And now we have nothing but our two selves, the sea, and the pines for company.

Colonel Kenworthy: We couldn't have better.

Maude (half to herself): If it could only last!

Colonel Kenworthy: I'm afraid it can't. In half an hour table d'hote will be over and the visitors will come out afresh.

Maude: If they were only some of them interesting, one would not resent their presence so much.

Colonel Kenworthy (smiling): I confess Batignolles and Clapham hold strong sway here. I've met only one single creature that has excited my interest in the very smallest degree.

Maude: Oh? A man or a woman?

Colonel Kenworthy: A man. Saw him last evening on the beach, and again this morning.

Maude (taking out a little roll of work): What was there interesting about him? French or English?

Colonel Kenworthy: French, I should say, by the cut of his beard, but I didn't hear him speak. Still, I couldn't help thinking I'd seen the fellow somewhere before, in England—London, I fancy. He was rather of the shabby-genteel sort—(Maude stops working) but looked as if he was, or had been at one time, a gentleman. Yes, I'm nearly sure I've seen him before, but for the life of me I can't say where.

[Maude's work slips through her fingers and on to her lap.]

Maude: What was he like, dear.

Colonel Kenworthy: Well, he had a pointed beard and a turned-up mustache, a perfectly yellow, parchment-like face, and looked awfully ill, poor devil! But the most remarkable thing about him was his eyes. I had often read in books of a man with "glittering" or "glowing" eyes, but had never in my life before seen them exhibited in anyone. Let me put your wrap round you, dear; you're shivering. No? Now, this fellow's eyes did actually shine out like a great cat's—shone out positively bright topaz against the twilight last evening.

Maude (repeating the words mechanically): "Bright topaz against the—twilight— last evening."

Colonel Kenworthy: Fact! I daresay the man is a most highly respectable member of society, though just now, may be, a bit down on his luck. Very likely brought down on his luck by an illness; who knows? But certainly his face reminded me of one I had once seen in a picture in a gallery in Paris, where a man is supposed to be persecuting a woman. He has the poor woman in a corner, and is just—I'm certain you feel cold, dear; these autumn evenings are apt to be confoundedly chilly. Would you prefer that we went indoors?

Maude (who has turned away from her husband so that he may not see the look in her face): No, Robert, No!

Colonel Kenworthy: As you please, dear; only mind you say when you would like to go in. Yes (knocking the ash off his cigar), that was the only interesting person I've seen. Most of the other persons appear to me to be—— What was that?

Maude: What, dear?

Colonel Kenworthy: Thought I heard a footstep.

Maude: Where?

Colonel Kenworthy: Over yonder—up that little by-path to the left. (Turns his head.) By Jove, there is the very man I was speaking about! Look, dear! Up the winding path. No, you can't see him now; he's hidden by the shrubs. Yes, there he is again. Why, he's coming this way! (Maude tries to speak, but is unable.) Here he comes. Look at his eyes! Did you ever see anything so like——? H'sh! Don't say a word; he's close to us. (Short pause. The man stops for an instant, then goes on.) Thought he was going to say something, but he's gone on instead.

[Maude again tries to speak, but is able only to mutter incoherently under her breath.]

Colonel Kenworthy: Expect he's going on to the beach. (Maude breathes freely for an instant.) No; I m hanged if he's not returning! Looks as if he wanted to speak to me. What can he possibly have to say?

[By this time the man has come up to the bench on which Colonel Kenworthy and his wife are sitting.]

The Man: May I speak with you a moment, sir?

Colonel Kenworthy (rather surprised): By all means! What is it?

The Man (commencing slowly, and speaking with difficulty): Well, sir—— (Stops Maude throws at him a look of agonized supplication, without avail.)

Colonel Kenworthy: Go on. I'm listening.

The Man: Well, sir, it's—it's a somewhat delicate matter. I—have something to communicate to you—something for which I am sure you must be entirely unprepared.

Colonel Kenworthy: Something that concerns me?

The Man: It does, sir—very closely. I think it right you should know of it. Nothing but the strictest sense of duty would induce me——

Colonel Kenworthy: Yes yes!

The Man: Would induce me to make this avowal—this painful avowal. (Short pause.) You may remember, sir, when you were Governor of Northfort Prison——

Colonel Kenworthy: Take time! You are agitated—you are ill. Come to the hotel. Tell me there. It will——

The Man (speaking with still greater difficulty): I'd rather tell you here. You may recollect you—had a prisoner under your charge—named—named——

Colonel Kenworthy (rising abruptly): Hullo! Hold hard—hold hard! What's the matter? Pull yourself together, man! What's happened? Maude, unfasten his collar and necktie—I'll hold his hands! Poor chap, a fit—or is it aneurism? Stand clear of him—the convulsion will be over in a moment; or—I'll run to the hotel—it's close by—I shan't be a moment! I'll get some brandy and—See, he's quiet now—I'll be back before——

[Exit Kenworthy hurriedly. Maude is left alone with The Man. He opens his eyes. They meet hers.]

The Man (faintly): What the doctor said was true I'm dying. I was going to tell your husband—I came here on purpose. Maude—can you forgive me?

Maude (breathing hard): I can not!

The man (in weaker tones): You—will not?

Maude: I can not.

The Man (almost inaudibly): Think, Maude—it's the last thing—I'll ever ask—Think!—I'm dying. Will you forgive—will you for——

[Maude is shaken by a strong mental conflict. Re-enter Kenworthy.]

Colonel Kenworthy: How is he?

Maude: Quiet.

Colonel Kenworthy: Is he breathing?

Maude: I do not know. See!

[Kenworthy kneels, places his hand over The Man's heart, feels pulse. Starts.]

Colonel Kenworthy: I'm too late! The man's dead! Who was he? And what could it have been he wanted to tell me? —London Sketch.

The Music-hall Tenor.

Your male singer is a bird of the same fine feather. If you wish to see the ideal of dressiness as exemplified by the gentlemen of the road, see these individuals arrive at the office of the publishers. The radiance of halfhose and neckties is not outdone by the sprightliness of the suit pattern or the glint of the stone in the shirt front. Fresh from Chicago or Buffalo they arrive, rich in self-opinion, fostered by rural praise, perhaps possessed of a new droll story, always loaded with the details of the hit they made.

"Well, well, you should have seen how that song went in Baltimore. I never saw anything like it. Why, it's the hit of the season."

New songs are forthcoming, a new batch delivered for his service next year.

Is he absolutely sure of the estimation in which the house holds his services? You will hear a sequel to this. Not this day, perhaps, but a week or a month later, during his idle summer in New York.

"You haven't twenty-five handy you could let me have, have you?"

Into the publisher's eye steals the light of wisdom and decision. Is this individual worth it? Will he do the songs of the house twenty-five dollars' worth of good next season? Blessed be fate if there's a partner to consult. He will have time to reflect.

"Well, George, I haven't it right here in the drawer but I can find out. I always like to consult my partner about these things, you know. Can you wait until this afternoon?"

Of course the applicant can wait, and betweenwhiles are conferences and decisions. All things considered, it may be advisable to do it.

"We will get twenty-five out of him, any way. He's got a fine tenor voice. You never can tell what he might do."

So a pleasant smile and the money may be waiting when he returns.—THEODORE DREISER, in Harper's Weekly.

What he was Thinking About.

Soon after Singleton's first baby was born Mrs. Singleton went up stairs one evening and entered the room where her darling lay asleep. There she found her husband standing by the side of the crib and gazing earnestly at the child. As she stood still for a moment, touched by the sight, the tears filled her eyes, and she thought:

"Oh, how dearly Charles loves that boy!"

Her arms stole softly around his neck, as she rubbed her cheek caressingly against his shoulder. Singleton started slightly at the touch.

"Darling," he said, dreamily, voicing his thoughts, "it is incomprehensible to me how they can get up such a crib as that for half a guinea."—London Tid Bits.

In a face that I saw
The Master had given,
The glimpse of an angel
Just waking in heaven;
Whose beauty sublime,
So subtle the while,
The stars were transfixed
By her ravishing smile

Yet love seemed a dream,
And Fate stood apart,
For none had e'er shared
The wealth of her heart—
So I paused and wondered,
As I gazed at the skies,
If the truth could be read
In her pretty brown eyes.

—William Lyons Metcalfe.

MT. HAMILTON BY MOONLIGHT.

THE KILL——DEER HUNTING IN CALIFORNIA.

Literary Chat

Henry Sandham, writing of his illustrations for the new Monterey edition of "Ramona," (Little, Brown & Co.) says: "I had thus sufficient knowledge of the spirit of the text to work with keener zest upon the sketches for the illustrations; sketches which, it may be of interest to know, were always made on the spot, with Mrs. Jackson close at hand suggesting emphasis to this object or prominence to that, as it was to have special mention in the book. But let me add that the restorations of late years have materially altered the appearance of many places referred to in the story."

Raffles, the hero of E. W. Hornung's stories of the "Amateur Cracksman," will reappear in the January number of Scribner's with a most remarkable adventure in crime. It has been suggested that Sherlock Holmes is the only man who could catch Raffles. Conan Doyle, the creator of Sherlock Holmes, is brother-in-law to Mr. Hornung.

Among children's books that have a good literary quality, may be mentioned Miss Helen Leah Reed's "Brenda, Her School and Her Club." It is a careful stuty of school-girl life in a large city, and is somewhat unique in its way, as it bears nearly the same relation to the life of half-grown boys and girls that the novel of manners bears to older social life. Miss Reed has caught many subtle phases of the youthful mind, besides telling an interesting story.

In "Shadowings," Lafcadio Hearn asserts of the moral training of the Japanese that it "produced perhaps the very sweetest type of woman that this world has ever known."

A curious story is being told concerning the facts which caused the publication of one of the most popular novels of the day. Some months ago a New York publisher heard that Mr. John Uri Lloyd, a prominent chemist in Cincinnati had written a rather remarkable story. He had no idea, however, of committing it to print. It had been written purely as a solace and an amusement, and the manuscript was being bound to tuck away in his library, where it was to remain until his death. The publisher, of course, begged permission to see it. On reading it he immediately recognized it as a novel of great force, individuality and interest.

The author was unknown, and the risk may at first have seemed hazardous. The story was called "Stringtown on the Pike," and "serialized" in a literary paper. So deep was its effect, and so instant, that before the date of its publication in book form 10,000 copies had been sold—a remarkable feat for an author then almost unknown.

A second edition was put on the press and sold within two weeks of the date of publication; a third edition was sold in the next week; while a fourth edition is now selling and a fifth is in preparation (all within one month from the date of publication).

And why is all this? Why, amid the mass and ruck of current fiction, does the public suddenly affect interest in this tale of Northern Kentucky? Because the characters are absolutely alive, absolutely American and truthful to the last degree. In tragic interest the story has not been found wanting. In perfect portrayal of some of those types of character that make up the South and West—the parson, the colonel. the slave, the soldier, the negro—victims, nearly all of them, of feud, pride, war, superstition and adventure—the book is quite alone in its class.

In certain Western cities it immediately leaped into the position of "the best selling book" of the day, and its vogue is working steadily Eastward. Of the hundred or more notices, public and private, which the publishers have received, but three are adverse, and these three amounted virtually to praise.

Reminded.

The queen having departed, after having deposited with her royal consort a piece of her mind, the court jester remarked:

"Sire, you remind me of King Henry VIII."

"Too much wife?" asked the monarch, in haste to get a horse on the jester.

"That ain't bad for an amateur," replied the court jester, "but I was alluding to the fact that he was called the bluff king. Gimme a cigar, will you?—Indianapolis Press.

Vice Versa.

Tigg—There's one good thing about these college yells.

Wigg—What is it?

Tigg—They can't sing those glee songs while they are yelling.—Baltimore American.

Pleasant Evening.

Mrs. Wiggles—Did you have a good time at the Watsons playing whist last evening?

Mrs. Waggles—We had a perfectly lovely time.

Mrs. Wiggles—Which beat?

Mrs. Waggles—Well, we didn't either of us beat. The fact is, we spent the whole evening talking about our children.—Somerville Journal.

TO BE HELD TILL CALLED FOR

FROM THE FRENCH OF SERGE BASSET

Apropos of a celebrated affair upon which public opinion ran high, we had come together, a certain evening, to sip laxatives a bit, while discussing that mysterious and forceful fetter to the tongue, known as the "professional diplomatic governmental secret."

Little Breaute had for some time been looking dreamy and langurous, as if lost in old memories, and now suddenly flung away his cigar and opened up amid a general outcry, for Breaute was a silent old chap.

"I don't know," said he, "why you are so critical of this matter. To my thinking the professional secret is worth just as much as the conscience of the individual—no more, no less!" Amid general exclamations he continued, while stiring the decoction before him with impressive strokes of his spoon, "Listen then! You know that ten years ago I was simply a post office clerk at Sancerre. It would be saying far too much to pretend that I had many outside pleasures to distract my attention from the work of the office. The discharge of an employee at the receiving station obliged me to be almost constantly on hand, and my very meager salary of twelve hundred francs did not offer a wide horizon of pleasure. In fact, the only really agreeable occupation that fell to me was that of disturbing those letters marked, 'to be held till called for.'

What lovers' comedies I found in these! How they unrolled before me with their alternating themes of passion; where joy, hope, sadness, or voluptuous desire, were eternally ringing their changes in my heart!

Upon the faces of the young women, who come to inquire for these expected missives; I could read all hoped to find within, and my own eagerness outran theirs as I handed out white love-favors. Oh! that shadowed, half-secluded corner of the office where, with palpitating hearts and swelling throats, they love open those precious things!

If you will, for an instant, just remember that Sancerre had then scarcely two thousand inhabitants and a garrison, that the only great events in the place were the arrivals or departures of some official, you can better understand how, as those lovers drifted by my little window oblivious of everything but their own passions, I soon found myself in close touch with all their happy intrigues, from the mildest flirtation to the most mysteriously passionate affair.

One day, I noted an approaching figure, closely veiled but evidently trembling and uncertain in its movements, though I felt instantly certain from the slender form, erect height, and lovely voice, that it must be young and pretty.

'S. G. 888—to be kept till called for,' said she.

I ran through my packet of letters and, between two inclosures for travelling-men and one for a grisette, I found an envelope which was carefully sealed and bore an appearance of grandeur. Its blue wax and baronial seal seemed to give it a haughty reserve, which set it apart from the others. The unknown snatched it from me with an intensely eager movement, then hastily departed, seemingly almost strangled with emotion.

She came again two days later, and still again two days from that, then after three successive days, all with singular regularity.

My twenty-year-old imagination was kept busy, I can tell you! I fully believed this correspondence to be of an amorous nature, and by turns I laid it at the door of every woman seen about the place who in age, elegance, and carriage, could possibly be compared with the veiled figure of the unknown woman.

But one day, either because she had grown bolder or was more impatient, she flung back her thick veil with a brusque gesture and disclosed the ravishing face of Madame Davavin!

This Mme. Davavin, the only one whom I had never even suspected, was the wife of a retired colonel [illegible] creature, and had married her almost in spite of herself, for she was appalled at the great gulf of thirty [illegible] ill-assorted couple a wretched life, filled with shocking scenes. He was absolutely idiotic with his unreasonable jealousies and perpetual suspicions, which ended, five years later, in the officer's requiring her to withdraw entirely from [illegible] and kept her in a seclusion that was positively barbarous.

This then was She!

My heart—that of an overgrown boy—till now untouched, began to beat a parley. I fell in love with the beautiful Mme. Duvavin! When she came into the office I forgot everything else, and flung all other duties aside that I might wait upon her. My cheeks would redden with bashfulness, my heart would be pierced with sweet pain, as I handed out the letters she so impatiently awaited.

Wholly wrapped up in her own passionate dream she did not once notice how my head was turned. The smile she gave me in gentle thanks was such as she might have bestowed upon her maid, or coachman.

Yet through it all I was [illegible] trying to penetrate the mystery surrounding this lovers' correspondence [illegible] me as an abominable sacrilege; my very life hung upon the result of the intrigue. With absolute devotion, with ardor and emotion enough to bring on aneurism of the heart, I waited through the three long days till Mme. Duravin should come smiling in to claim her letter. Then my paradise began and lasted for five minutes! I could not prolong it, though I searched slowly and carefully for that which all the time stared me in the face. But in that five minutes I was devoted only to her, and she hung upon my every motion.

When at last she turned away, exultant, radiant, it seemed to me that the office, just now luminous with her presence, settled into deepest gloom—a gloom that shadowed even its remotest corners!

One morning, at the hour I was looking for her, the door suddenly burst open with brutal haste, and Col. Duvavin rushed in. He was crimson with rage, and his eyes seemed starting from their sockets, as he strode across the floor, dragging his wife by the arm.

In pitiful contrast she was white to the lips, and seemed about to faint from weakness and terror.

I felt as if I too should faint! What could have happened?

Continued on page 23.

At Tanforan Park.

Possibly of all the outdoor amusements or sports the one that attracts the most attention the world over is that which is called "the sport of kings"—horseracing, and in no place in the world are the facilities for the enjoyment of such sport greater than at Tanforan Park, already famous throughout the West for its meets. To those who have watched the park from the day of its opening to the present, the most remarkable feature is the rapidity of development which it has undergone, particularly exemplified in those improvements which are directly for the accomodation of patrons and guests. The horseman first of all takes notice of the track, which is perfect. In only two seasons many records have been made and many others sent wavering, things which can only take place where the highest perfections of track in touch and reach are attained.

The modern methods of track-building have been adopted at this popular race course, the course being one mile with turns and a quarter-mile stretch, the turns sloped to just the right angle for speed. Its drainage system is one of the most noticeable of modern methods, as within a few hours after the heaviest of rainfalls the track is fast. While the weather has always been one of the features to watch in racing, it is really as small a factor at Tanforan as it is possible for it to be in any other place in America. The steeple chase course inside the oval is one of the improvements that appeal to the followers of this form of racing.

In the matter of stable accommodations Tanforan has almost set a model, as the quarters are not only roomy, comfortable and well built, but are located immediately to the right of the grand stand and nearly opposite the first turn. Here several hundred horses may be provided for without crowding. The saddling paddock, scale-room and jockey-room are connected with the stand by a covered passage way and are fitted in approved style. The grand stand itself is, next to the track, worthy of special mention. It is a handsome structure capable of seating over three thousand people without crowding, and has a

Continued on page 25.

COMING UNDER THE WIRE.

Racing at Oakland California Jockey Club.

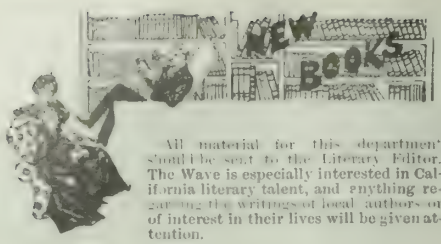
One of the best known race courses in the world as well as a track on which almost as many world's records have been broken at one time and another as on any speed ring in the world is that owned by the California Jockey Club in Oakland. To almost all of those on the coast who attend races the track is familiar, but to the visitor who is sight seeing,or the man with "a day off" the Oakland course is a natural pilgrimage. The facilities for reaching this popular course are of the very best, as by ferry and train it can be reached every half hour during the racing season.

On arriving at the park, roofed board walks shelter

Continued on page 24.

SAILING.

A GROUP OF JOCKEYS.



All material for this department should be sent to the Literary Editor. The Wave is especially interested in California literary talent, and anything regarding the writings of local authors or of interest in their lives will be given attention.

Books Received.

The Story of Nineteenth Century Science, by Henry Smith Williams, (Harper & Bros.) $2.00.

Ye Wisdom of Confuscius by Lord Gilhooly, (Frederick A. Stokes Co.) $1.00.

Literary Friends and Acquaintance, by William Dean Howells, (Harper & Bros.) $2.00.

The Slaves of Society, by the Man Who Heard Something, (Harper & Bros.) $1.25.

Vesty of the Basins, by Sarah P. M'c. L. Green, (Harper & Bros.)

The Roggie and Reggie Stories, by Gertrude Smith, (Harper & Bros.) $1.50.

"The Roggie and Reggie Stories;" by Gertrude Smith, Illustrated by E. Moss and M.H. Squires, (Harper & Bros.)

It is not easy of understanding why books for the little ones should be so absolutely inane as Gertrude Smith's contributions in this line. Even Mother Goose's nonsense has some point, and the old-fashioned tales of "Jack and the Bean Stalk," "Cinderella" and the like, are marvels of wisdom compared with "Roggie and Reggie." Does this variety of mush have to be fed to the youngsters of to-day?

"And Roggie sat in a little high chair on one side of his Papa at the breakfast table, and Reggie sat in a little high chair on the other side of his Papa at the breakfast table.

"And Roggie whispered something to his Papa, and then Reggie whispered something to his Papa.

"And Arabella sat across the table by her Mamma.

"And Arabella said, 'What are you whispering to Papa, little Roggie?'

"And Araminta sat on the other side of her Mamma.

"And Araminta said, 'What are you whispering to Papa, little Reggie!'

"And Roggie laughed and clapped his hands and said, 'We won't tell, it's a secret; we won't tell!'

"And Reggie laughed and clapped his hands and said, 'We won't tell, it's a secret; we won't tell!' "

The illustrations for this book are as far beyond the childhood pictures of the years ago, as the stories are behind. They are works of art.

In "The House Behind the Cedars" Mr. Charles W. Chesnutt gives a still further earnest of the future predicted for him by those who have read his former books, "The Conjure Woman" and "The Wife of his Youth." In this, Mr. Chesnutt's first sustained work of fiction, is revealed a growing breadth of conception and firmness of touch which were confidently expected. Mr. Chesnutt's first book dealt with the old-time negro of the plantations, with quaint beliefs and superstitions, set in a very convincing background. It was the easy-going life of the old regime, with its upper crust of wealth and culture in the great house, and the pathetic and humorous background of cabin and field. Old Julius McAdoo has well been called a brother to Uncle Remus, with a decided originality of his own. In "The Wife of His Youth" Mr. Chesnutt went a step farther, and sought to give an insight into the life of the emancipated people in their attempts at adjustment to freedom and competition with the white race. The one was poetry, the other a dramatic and forceful study of present day conditions. In Mr. Chesnutt's novel, "The House Behind the Cedars," he has very skillfully and successfully combined the old life and the new. Located in North and South Carolina, just before and after the civil war, it has the richness of local color which marked "The Conjure Woman," and contains a careful study of the picturesque old Southern town where the author spent his youth and studied the types which he has faithfully and sympathetically reproduced. The action of the story, which is of thrilling interest, concerns the efforts of a beautiful girl to escape the disabilities which the sins of others and the customs of the country and the time imposed upon her. The book is something more than a clever combination of a romantic novel and a social study of conditions which one instinctively recognizes were not only of the past, but are likely to become questions of the future. It will not only interest the reader, but furnish food for thought upon certain phases of one of the greatest problems that concern the future of our country.

Jack London, the author of the collection of Yukon stories known as "The Son of the Wolf," has now come forward as an economic essayist, his essay having won a prize of $200 offered by the Cosmopolitan Magazine for the best paper on "The Advantages of Co-operation." Mr. London is a brilliant writer of short stories, Mr. Geo. Hamlin Fitch, the literary critic of the San Francisco Chronicle, having said of him, "I would rather have written 'The White Silence' than anything that has appeared in fiction in the last ten years;" and he now comes forward with a display of versatility which has for its basis his sociological studies and his experiences "on the road," following the example of Josiah Flint.

"It is somewhat remarkable," says the Enquirer, of Oakland, where the author has his home, "that although several articles from the pen of Mr. London upon economic topics submitted since that above referred to was written, have been accepted by leading magazines, including the Review of Reviews and McClure's, the paper which wins this prize was his first effort in the form of an essay."

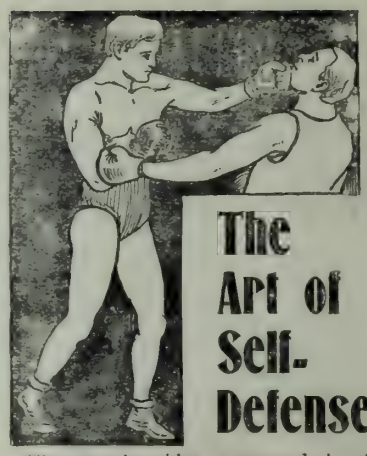
"Old Ironsides" is to be rebuilt and refitted, at an expense of nearly $400,000 by the Daughters of 1812, of Massachusetts. The historic old vessel is now lying at the Charlestown Navy Yard. The efforts—in which Congress will assist by an appropriation—to save the conqueror of Guerriere, Java, Levant and Cyane are coincidental with the publication, by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of "The Constitution: The Central Figure of the Navy Under Sail," by Ira N. Hollis, sometime Commander in the United States Navy and now Professor of Engineering in Harvard University. The vessel serves as the typical ship of the old wooden navy, which is studied from its beginnings in the Constitution to its end in the Monitor.

The December issue of the International Monthly completes another volume of this able Magazine. In the two volumes published this year appear most valuable contributions to popular knowledge of a wide and varied range of topics, and written especially for the American reader. A glance over the contents of the volume in hand reveals authoritative essays upon International and Domestic Politics, Commerce, Literature, Art, Drama, History, Economics, Trade Unionism, Agriculture, Geology, Psychology, Sociology, Religion, Schools.

Probably the most noteworthy essay published during the year was by Alfred Rambaud, the great historian of Russia and a Senator of France, who wrote on "The Expansion of Russia," and whose account is practically a brief history of that empire by the one best qualified to write on the subject.

The December issue contains: "The International Position of Spain," by Arthur E. Houghton, Madrid; "The Evolutionary Trend of German Literary Criticisms," by Prof. Kuno Francke of Harvard; "The School and the Home," by Prof. Paul H. Hanus of Harvard; "The American Negro and His Economic Value," by Booker T. Washington; "Archaeological Progress and the Schools at Rome and Athens," by Prof. Frothingham of Princeton.

"Rulers of the South," Mr. F Marion Crawford's romantic historical work on Sicily Calabria and Malta has just run into its second edition. These two volumes are companions to "Ave Roma Immortalis" which was published last year. The illustrations are by Henry Brockman; many of them are in photogravure.



The Art of Self-Defense.

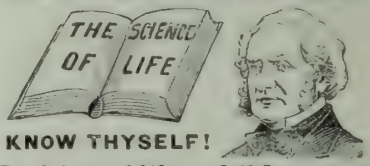
The popular idea expressed in the phrase, "the art of self-defense," shows the opinion that the chief enemies a man has to defend himself from are visible and external. But the real danger of every man is from minute and often invisible foes. In the air we breathe and the water we drink are countless minute organisms leagued against the health of the body.

The one defense against these enemies is to keep the blood pure. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery thoroughly purifies the blood, removing poisonous substances and accretions. When the blood is pure there is no harborage for the germs of disease which find a lodging only when the blood is impure and corrupt.

"I consider your 'Golden Medical Discovery' one of the best medicines on the face of the earth," writes Mr. Wm. Flocter, of Redoak, Montgomery Co., Iowa. "While in the southwest three years ago, I got poisoned with poison ivy. The poison settled in my blood and the horrors I suffered cannot be told in words. I thought I would go crazy. I tried different kinds of medicine, tried different doctors, but all the relief they could give me was to make my pocket-book lighter. I then began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Took four bottles without relief. Kept taking it. I took in all ten bottles and got entirely cured."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation.

Strength, Vitality, Manhood, THE CHIEF GLORY OF MAN



KNOW THYSELF!

The Science of Life, or Self Preservation,

A Great Medical Book for Every Man—The Million Embossed cloth, full gilt, elegant Library edition, ONLY $1.00. In paper covers, ONLY 25c. Get the best. It contains 350 pp. with engravings, 125 prescriptions for Acute and Chronic Diseases, and is the Gold Medal Prize Treatise on Aptitude and Inaptitude for Wedded Happiness, Premature Decline, Nervous and Physical Debility, Exhausted Vitality, Manhood, Varicocele, Atrophy (wasting) and ALL DISEASES and WEAKNESSES OF MEN, from whatever cause arising. The distinguished author and Nervo specialist graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1864 and has been the Chief Consulting Physician to The Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch St. (opposite Revere House) Boston, Mass, during the past thirty years. Know Thyself Manual, a Vade Mecum Pamphlet, Free to every male reader of this paper; 6 cents for postage. Write for these books to-day. They are the keys to health, vigor, manhood and happiness. Address as above. Consultation by letter or in person from 9 to 6. Sundays 10 to 1. Expert treatment and positive cure.

The Peabody Medical Institute is a fixed fact in the medical phenomena of this country, and it will remain so.—Boston Journal.

The Peabody Medical Institute has many imitators, but no [illegible].—Boston Herald

PALACE AND GRAND HOTELS

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

The regularity with which tourists, business men and prominent citizens generally make these hotels their head-quarters is significant, as it illustrates the preference of those who are competent to form a correct estimate of a hotel.

This continued patronage indicates an appreciation of those things that have so much to do with the comfort of guests—conveniences, luxuries, and a service that have made them famous.

The Grill Rooms for ladies and gentlemen have for years been the mecca of all good livers—the only places in San Francisco where the preparation of delicate and substantial dishes has attained a degree of perfection that has won universal recognition.

These hotels are connected by a covered passageway; conveniently located, and are operated jointly under one management on the American and European plan.

To Be Held Till Called For.

Continued from page 19.

Probably a cruel anonymous letter had accused Mme. Duvavin till all the colonel's old jealousy had broken out with redoubled fury. I turned pale as ashes when the man, pushing his wife viciously close to the little window, cried out in a voice hoarse with anger,

'Ask for your letter now—ask, I tell you!'

Mme. Duvavin advanced, ready to sink in her anguish.

I felt as if a hand of iron had gripped my heart when, obeying this brutal order, while her eyes grew big with fear, her whole being instinct with supplication and her very life seemed hanging upon the utterance of her lips, she finally asked me between two gasps,

'Monsieur, is there—a letter—S. G. 888?'

A great trembling seized upon me. Most assuredly there was a letter! I had seen it plainly enough that morning, when the post-boy had brought it in. Instinctively I glanced at the colonel. Apoplexy had her paw upon him! A very fever of rage empurpled his face; an idiotic trembling had set his teeth to clicketing like castinets. Instantly, as in a breath, I saw what would happen. As the letter was handed out it would be torn from Mme. Duvavin, opened with one thumb-stroke, read at a glance and the muzzle of a revolver would be pressed against the heart of the adorable beauty.

This vision shot across my brain like lightning, and every drop of blood seemed congealing in my veins.

Ah, heaven! Was I thus to lose this lovely creature, my idol! my life!

I had taken the package of letters marked, 'To be held till called for,' and now I slowly ran them through. The office clock ticked mournfully in a silence in which lurked a desolating Fear. I ran through all the letters, passing hers by unnoted, and raising my head, observed in a voice I tried manfully to make indifferent,

'There's nothing here, Madame.'

'You must have deceived yourself, sir!' roared the colonel. 'I am sure there is a letter addressed to those initials. Look again and be careful!'

A sigh of anguish welled from the tortured breast of Mme. Duvavin. It inspired me with a sudden fury, in my turn. I seized the package again and feverishly ran through the letters. Passing over the desired missive, I ended the feigned examination, and then flung out this brusque reply at the colonel's head, making it doubly insolent by my tone as well as words: 'Monsieur, you are wrong, yourself, in saying I was deceived. There is nothing of the kind here—nothing! Do you understand?'

The colonel drew back, baffled. With an air of bewilderment he began rapidly buttoning his redingote, then glanced at his now sobbing wife, and said in a greatly softened voice in which a hint of shame was perceptible, 'I'm glad to hear it, sir. Come, Juliette, let us be going.'

Alliance Assurance Company.

of London, England.

Subscribed Capital	$25,000,000.00
Total Cash Assets	25,172,537.00
Cash Surplus to Policy Holders	5,504,074.00
U. S. Assets	863,912.00

Commercial Union Assurance Co., Ltd.

of London, Eng. Established 1824

Subscribed Capital	$12,500,000.00
Total Cash Assets	25,859,505.71
Cash Surplus to Policy Holders	7,499,622.61
U. S. Assets	23,808,156.00
Losses Paid by the Company	95,000,000.00

C. F. MULLINS, Manager

E. T. NIEBLING, Assistant Manager

416 California Street, - - - San Francisco, Cal.

REFRESHING SLEEP.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Taken just before retiring quiets the nerves, nourishes the tired and confused brain and induces refreshing sleep.

Genuine bears name HORSFORD'S on wrapper.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, bootblacks, bath houses billiard tables brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.,

TEL. 5610 600 Sacramento St

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief for Chapped Hands, Chafing, and all afflictions of the skin. "A little higher in price, perhaps than some other substitutes, but a reason for it." Delightful after shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Name file free.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Going to San Jose?

"The Stanford"

is one of the most centrally located rooming houses in San Jose. It is especially desirable for traveling men and tourists. Everything clean and first class and rates are reasonable.

MRS. McCUNE, Prop.

192 South 1st St., San Jose, Cal.

Orpheum

THE ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW

Direction of Martin Beck

Severus Schaffer; Will, Cressy and Blanche. Dayne; Johnson; Davenport and Lorello; Louise Dresser; Jack Norworth; Bertie Fowler; Truly Shattuck; Comeograph

Reserved Seats 25c., Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

Commencing Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 23rd. and for One Week Only.

Matinees Christmas and Saturday.

By special arrangements with Dan'l and Charles Frohman KING & NORCROSS present the brilliant and extremely funny comedy

At the White Horse Tavern

And pronounced a distinct success for 3 months in New York at Wallack's

Headed by the comedians, Minerva Dorr and Frank M. Norcross.

Dec. 30 Edward Strauss and his Vienna Orchestra

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of December 23

Matinees Christmas and New Years Day.

David Belasco's Farcical Comedy

Naughty Anthony

New York and London endorse it.

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.
Prices, 15, 25, 35 and 50c.

They left, and none too soon. I was at the very end of my strength and felt myself tottering. I had only time to snatch up a water pitcher, drain off its contents——"

And little Breaute, red in the face, caught up his glass, emptying it at a swallow.

"It was very pretty in you," declared the sculptor, Brancas, with some irony. "And did you go on with your dream after this heroic rescue?"

"Yes," answered Breaute, readily, though his voice was not quite steady. "Two hours later, towards half past one that afternoon, just as the mail from Monetreal was due, I heard a little tap at the office window. Almost suffocated with my rapid heart-beats, I hastened to open it.

'It is I, sir,' said she, in a shaking voice. 'I have come for the letter which you so generously kept back this morning.'

Everything seemed spinning around me. In a half stupor I fumbled through the packet and gave her the letter.

'Thank you, kind sir; O, with all my grateful heart, I thank you! Never, never can I forget you!' and she impulsively held our her hand, over which I bent low, adoringly, my breast heavy with sobs. I think she understood, for she, too, was seized with a tremor. Her hand fluttered in mine. Drawing it gently away, she turned with a quick motion and disappeared.

I passed that night in tears. I was in a state of glorious exaltation, yet so violently shaken in every nerve that I could never tell whether I had wept for joy, or whether I had been stifled with the sobs of utter despair. I wept, but why, I leave it for you to say."

"The devil!" burst out Brancas. "I wouldn't have believed that a postoffice employe could be so sensitive. Waiter! Another bottle for Monsieur Breante.!"

At Tanforan Park.

Continued fram page 20.

southwest exposure, which is the desirable one for this climate. At the back of the grand stand extends a promenade, which is a glass enclosed arcade over two hundred feet in length. It is completely filled for its purpose with potted plants and palms. and to those who visit from the eastern and more rigorous climates is like a garden of beauty and warmth. Outside stately trees and green fields lend a fitting view and setting for the stand and promenade. Like the promenade, the betting ring is enclosed with glass and is reached by broad, easy steps. It is so situated that those within its enclosure may have a view of every point of the track from the "gate to the wire," without stirring from its boundaries. This is a point which is particularly appreciated by patrons of the betting ring, as although betting is the life of the modern race course, many tracks are not arranged with special advantages for this portion of spectators.

The Tanforan trip is an ideal one for the pleasure seeker, as the railway accommodations are perfect and the ride through the suburbs worth taking in itself. From the time one boards the train to the seat in the grand stand, there is never a chance for discomfort, as covered passage ways are everywhere for protection against inclement weather. The gentlemen having the course in charge have not only done every thing for the comfort and protection of guests, but are conducting the meetings with such a high standard of order and form that none of the obnoxious features sometimes found at racing resorts are to be met with, and a high-class patronage results.

Racing at Oakland. California Jockey Club.

Continued from page 21.

the patron to the commodious grand stand or the spacious betting ring. The former is a large towering structure with an Oriental roof suggesting a pagoda to the god of speed and judgment, arranged in every way for the comfort of patrons. Its framework and the slender iron pillars which support it are so placed that the view is unobstructed. The view of the hard track, the green infield, the lawn, with its shifting crowd watching the finishes and the Berkeley hills beyond is worth the trip, were the houses left out. Just below is the betting ring, large, well-lighted, and easily accessible from the stand. To the right is the club-house, where the fortunate may watch the events with more style and less of a view than the common herd. To the left are the paddock, the jockey-rooms, the scale-room and the general offices.

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, price 75c.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The Old Government the perfection of Whisky.

BOTTLED AT THE DISTILLERY

PURE-AGED-WHOLESOME.

Used in the Medical Departments of the U.S. ARMY & NAVY SERVICE

WILLIAM WOLFF & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO, DISTRIBUTORS.

Beware of Imitations or refilled Bottles

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

THE SAN FRANCISCO JOCKEY CLUB

TANFORAN PARK

Second Meeting, Monday, December 17th, to Saturday, December 29th, Inclusive.

SIX OR MORE RACES EACH WEEK DAY.

Six Stake Events, One Hurdle Race and Two Steeplechases First Two Weeks

First Race of the Day at 2:10 P. M.

Trains leave Third and Townsend streets for Tanforan Park at 7, 10:40, 11:30 a. m., 1, 1:30 and 2 p. m., following after the last race at intervals of a few minutes by several specials. Rear cars reserved for ladies and their escorts.

Admission to the course, including railroad fare $1.25

D. LYNCH PRINGLE, Secretary.
RALPH H. TOZER, Racing Secretary.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—San Francisco Savings Union, 532 California Street, corner Webb. For the half year ending with the 31st day of December, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate per annum of three and six tenths (3,6/10) per cent. On term deposits and three (3) per cent. on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1901.

LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE.—The German Savings and Loan Society, 526 California Street. For the half year ending with December 31, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one quarter (3¼) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1901

GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

FIGPRUNE CEREAL

A Perfect Food Beverage

54% Fruit
46% Grains
100 - and nothing else

A Substitute for Coffee. Nourishing and Invigorating. YOUR GROCER SELLS IT.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

MRS. SACHT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

DIRECTIONS.—Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT
Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:
Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt
708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.
Telephone Polk 1321
Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.
J. Isaacson, Pharmacist, cor. Geary and Octavia sts.
Phone E. 280

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters

"Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

Naber, Alfs & Brune, Agents,
323-325 MARKET STREET. S. F., CAL

Holiday Notes.

Give Presents that are useful and will be appreciated

Opera Glasses, Race and Field Glasses, Binoculars, Lorgnettes, Gold Spectacles and Eyeglasses, Graphoscopes, Thermometers.

Prices Within Reach of Everyone

Kodaks and Cameras, Photo Supplies.

Geo. H. Kahn.
OPTICIAN.
201 KEARNY ST.,
CORNER OF SUTTER
KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate
Comfort and Attention
A Quiet Home . . . .
Centrally Located . .
San Francisco, California

WM. B. HOOPER, - - MANAGER.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts.,
New York. . . . .
American and European Plan.
WILLIAM T. BANG, Pro.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM

For a Perfect Complexion

Made from the pure fruit juice at

GREENBAUM'S,

200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave. Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

---

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the

CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.

WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., - - San Francisco

Thuringia Insurance Co.

OF ERFURT, GERMANY

Capital, $2,250,000
Assets, $10,984,248

PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S.F.

VOSS, CONRAD & CO. General Agents.

Cotton Sail Ducks

Twenty-two-inch, in all numbers; Medium, Soft and Hard; also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.

Murphy, Grant & Co.

Sutter Street Hammam

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
[Phone Main 5178]
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
Open Day and Night for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE

Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne, Los Angeles
Blake, McFall Co., Portland, Or.

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD, (N. Y. C. & St. L. R. R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt. 37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital $[illegible]
Surplus and Undivided Profits, Oct. 1, 1900 $[illegible]

William Alvord, President; Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Prentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Henry E. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

New York, Messrs. Lazard & Co. The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank. Boston, The Tremont National Bank. Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank. First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft. China, Japan and East Indies, Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China. Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900.....28,938,395.02

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President.....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary.....George Tourney
Assistant Secretary.....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Contingent Fund..... [illegible]

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Fremery, Vice Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.
Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU. Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042.

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty; Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 306.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For Victoria, Vancouver, B. C. Port Townsend, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Anacortes and New Whatcom, Wash., 11 a. m. Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, and every fifth day thereafter. Change at Seattle for this company's steamers for Alaska and G. N. Ry.; at Seattle or Tacoma to N. P. Ry.; at Vancouver to C. P. Ry.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Dec. 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Jan. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles). Steamer Queen, Wed. 9 a. m.; steamer Santa Rosa, Sun. 9 a. m.

For Santa Cruz, Monterey, San Simeon, Cayucos, Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Gaviota, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Hueneme, San Pedro (Los Angeles) and Newport—Steamer Corona, Fridays, 9 a. m. steamer Bonita, Tuesdays, 9 a. m.

For Ensenada, Magdalena Bay, San Jose del Cabo, Mazatlan, Altata, La Paz, Santa Rosalia and Guaymas, Mexico, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

Toyo Kisen Kaisha

(Oriental Steamship Company)

Imperial Japanese and U. S. Mail Line

From San Francisco, via Honolulu, calling at Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, via Inland Sea of Japan, Shanghai and Hongkong, connecting at Hongkong with steamers for Philippine Islands, Siam, Burmah, Java, Ceylon, and Persian Ports, etc.

Operating the new, fast, palatial twin-screw Tourist Steamships.

Sailing from San Francisco, from wharf corner First and Brannan Streets, at 1 p. m.

AMERICA MARU	Saturday, Dec. 29, 1900.
HONG KONG MARU	Thursday, Jan. 24, 1901
NIPPON MARU	Tuesday, Feb. 19, 1901

No cargo received on board on day of sailing.

For freight and passage apply at Company's Office, 121 Market street, corner First.

W. H. AVERY, General Agent.

·WE·CALL·YOVR·ATTENTION·TO· OVR·HOLIDAY·DISPLAY·
OF·VIENNA·LEATHER·GOODS·BRONZES·
TRAVELING·BAGS·AND·OPERA·GLASSES·
NOVELTIES·IN·WRITING·DESKS·MANICVRE·
SETS·IN·VARIETY·PHOTOGRAPH·ALBVMS·
CARD·CASES·AND·PVRSES·CHRISTMAS·
CARDS·AND·BOOKLETS·ELEGANT·STA·
TIONERY·AND·LIGHT·ART·NOVELTIES·
·H·S·CROCKER·&·CO·215·BVSH·ST·S·F·

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Byron Mauzy Pianos

308-312 POST STREET

SOHMER — Satisfactory to the Eye and Ear. PIANO AGENCY

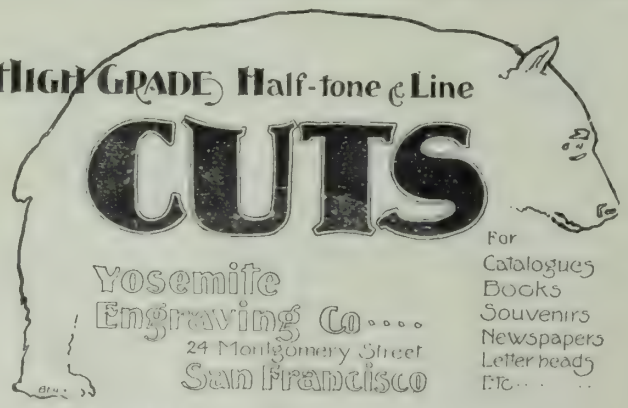
Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

REPSOLD — REGISTERED BRAND — SELECT VINTAGE

This brand of Wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. — A. REPSOLD & CO.



WE MAKE THE CUTS IN THIS PAPER

F. R. NEVILLE, - - - Proprietor

Sunset Limited

For the Season of 1900=1901

Tri=Weekly

Leave SAN FRANCISCO	Leave LOS ANGELES
Mondays	Tuesdays
Wednesdays	Thursdays
Fridays	Saturdays
5:00 P. M.	8:00 A. M.

ARRIVE NEW ORLEANS, 7:20 P. M. MONDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS.

MORE BRILLIANT THAN EVER
NEW EQUIPMENT
IMPROVED SERVICE

Secure Time Tables and any desired information from Any S. P. Co's Agent.

Santa Fe Trains

GO TO

Antioch	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Bakersfield	9 a m		8 p m
Chicago	9 a m
Denver	9 a m
Fresno	9 a m		8 p m
Hanford	9 a m		8 p m
Joliet	9 a m
Kansas City	9 a m
Leavenworth	9 a m
Merced	9 a m		8 p m
Newton	9 a m
Phoenix	9 a m
Stockton	9 a m	4:10 p m	8 p m
Tulare	9 a m		8 p m
Visalia	9 a m		8 p m
Williams	9 a m

Personally conducted Excursions to Kansas City, Chicago and Boston every MONDAY, THURSDAY AND SATURDAY in Pullman's Best Tourist sleeping Cars. Try this NEW ROUTE.

Get full information and handsome folder at

641 MARKET STREET

or at Santa Fe Ticket Office

Ferry Building, Foot of Market Street

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S.S. Zealandia for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, Dec. 26, 2 p. m.

S. S. Sierra for Honolulu, Samoa, Auckland, and Sydney Wed. Jan. 2, 9 p. m.

S. S. Australia for Tahiti, Sunday, Jan 6, 4 p.m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE, 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE, 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

ISAIAS W. HELLMAN, President
JOHN F. BIGELOW, Vice-President
I. W. HELLMAN, Jr. Second Vice-President

GEORGE GRANT, Cashier
W. McGAVIN, Assistant Cashier

THE

Nevada National Bank of San Francisco

Capital Paid Up $3,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits 1,029,298.78

NEW YORK CORRESPONDENTS: AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK
IMPORTER'S AND TRADERS' NATIONAL BANK

LONDON BANKERS: . . . UNION BANK OF LONDON, LIMITED

PARIS BANKERS: . . . CREDIT LYONNAIS

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED, AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

DIRECTORS.

JOHN W. MACKAY, ROBERT WATT, JAMES L. FLOOD, LEVI STRAUSS, LEWIS GERSTLE, I. W. HELLMAN, JR., ISAIAS W. HELLMAN, H. L. DODGE, HENRY F. ALLEN, JOHN F. BIGELOW, C. DeGUIGNE

Wells Fargo & Co., Bank

ESTABLISHED 1852

San Francisco, California

JOHN J. VALENTINE, President
HOMER S. KING, Manager
H. WADSWORTH, Cashier
F. L. LIPMAN, Assistant Cashier
H. L. MILLER, Second Assistant Cashier

BRANCHES: New York, Salt Lake, Portland. LONDON BANKERS: Messrs. Glyn, Mills Currie & Co.

Statement of Condition at the Close of Business, July 31, 1900

ASSETS

Loans	$9,446,888.10
Bonds, Stocks and Warrants	1,261,290.47
Real Estate	1,231,914.57
Miscellaneous Assets	9,205.53
Due from Banks and Bankers	1,111,501.91
Cash	4,030,413.55
	$17,091,214.18

LIABILITIES

Capital, paid up	$ 500,000.00
Surplus	5,750,000.00
Undivided Profits	1,926,895.63
Deposits, Banks and Bankers	1,084,015.95
Deposits, Individual	7,830,302.60
	$17,091,214.18

A General Banking Business Transacted. Domestic and Foreign Exchange Bought and Sold. Travelers' and Commercial Credits Issued, available in all parts of the world. Correspondence Invited.

The Hibernia Savings and Loan Society

INCORPORATED 12th OF APRIL, 1859

Office: Corner of McAllister and Jones Streets, San Francisco

The objects for which this Association is formed are that by its operations the depositor thereof may be able to find a

Secure and Profitable Investment for Small Savings and that borrowers may have an opportunity of obtaining from it the use of a moderate capital on giving good and sufficient security for the use of the same

President JAMES R KELLY Secretary and Treasurer, ROBERT J. TOBIN Attorney, ALFRED J. TOBIN

Any person can become a depositor of this Society on subscribing to the By-Laws. Deposits can be made from One Dollar upwards. Loans made on security of Real Estate within the City and County.

California Safe Deposit and Trust Company

Cor. California and Montgomery Sts.

Paid up Capital	-	$1,000,000
Surplus	- -	159,000

Authorized by law to act as executor, Administrator and Trustee under wills, as guardian of estates of incompetent persons and minors, as Assignee or Receiver, or in any other trust capacity, and is a legal depository for court and trust funds.

Attends to the collections of interest, dividends, rents, etc., for residents or others.

Acts as trustee of mortgages of corporations and individuals, and accepts the tranfer agency and registry of stocks.

Receives deposits subject to check, and allows interest on daily balances. Issues Certificates of deposit bearing fixed rates of interest. Receives deposits in its savings department.

Wills drawn and taken care of without charge.

Information and advice regarding trust matters cheerfully given.

Safe Deposit Boxes

To rent at prices from $5 per annum upwards, according to size, and valuables of all kinds are stored at low rates.

DIRECTORS

J. D. FRY JAMES TREADWELL R. D. FRY H. A. HEDGER F. W. LOUGEE
T. J. HAY F. A. WICKERSHAM A. D. SHARON
HENRY F. FORTMANN J. DALZELL BROWN W. J. BARTNETT

OFFICERS

J. D. FRY, President; R. D. FRY, Vice-President; J. DALZELL BROWN, Second Vice-President and Manager; E. E. SHOTWELL, Secretary; JAMES CONNING, Assistant Secretary; GUNNISON, BOOTH & BARTNETT, Attorneys.

FIRE, MARINE AND INLAND INSURANCE

CAPITAL, $1,000,000 ASSETS, $3,950,000.00

FIREMEN'S FUND INS. CO.

SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNIA

The Firemen's FUND is the LARGEST FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY ORGANIZED WEST OF NEW YORK.

HOME OFFICE
401 TO 407 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A STRONG AND RELIABLE COMPANY

The Anglo Californian Bank

LIMITED

Capital Authorized	-	$6,000,000	Paid up	-	$1,500,000
Subscribed	-	- 3,000,000	Reserve Fund		700,000

Northeast Corner Pine and Sansome Streets

Head Office: 18 Austin Friars, London, E. C.

Agents at New York: J. & W. Seligman & Co., 21 Broad Street

The Bank transacts a General Banking business, sells drafts, makes telegraphic transfers and issues letters of credit available throughout the world Sends bills for collection, loans money, buys and sells exchange and bullion.

MANAGERS

Ign. Steinhart P. N. Lilienthal

Vol. 22. No. 41. December 29, 1900

The Wave

Price Ten Cents.

THE WAVE

Published every Saturday at The Wave Building, 24 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal., Entered at the Post Office second-class matter.
Subscription: Per year, $3.00; six months, $1.75; three months, $1.00. Foreign subscription (countries in postal union) $1 per year additional. Sample copies free.

THE WAVE COMPANY, PROPRIETORS

San Francisco—December 29, 1900

The Social Evil.

There is an industry, a business, an occupation, however, you may choose to term it, which recently suggested measures has brought into the public notice. It is an industry which has existed in all times, in all countries, and in all races of people. An industry which is discredited, repulsive, abhorrent, but necessary. An occupation which shuns the light of day, and lurks in the hidden corners of the city. We term it euphemistically the social evil.

No one will accuse the Wave of undue admiration for Mayor Phelan, and what it has to say in his behalf on this occasion will not be attributed to any adulatory motives. It is merely that this time Mayor Phelan is as nearly in the right as he ever can get with his present managerial staff. And as a result of cause he now has added to the army militant, the good and holy people, whose far-sightedness never went a Sabbath-day's journey ahead of them in all the days of their existence.

But this time Mayor Phelan is in the right, and this time it is the duty of the conscientious and unbigoted to support him.

There are certain people who do not believe in temporizing with the devil. To these people belong the prohibitionist, who opposes high license, for example, and the people who oppose regulation of the "social evil."

Any man whose opinions are formed by contact with the world and not by nocturnal lucubrations in his cloistered cell, knows one thing if he knows anything and that is that the "social evil" is a necessity. A necessity, whose existence he regrets, even as he regrets the existence of the prison, the jail or the insane asylum, but nevertheless a necessity. So it is recognized in every city, town and village almost in the land but more than anywhere in cosmopolitan seaports like San Francisco.

It exists and it persists. Let us recognize these two things and seek a remedy. "Stamp it out altogether," says one. Ah, but how? We have tried one way, and we are not pioneers in the trial of that method, namely, by closing up every place where we could find it openly plied. And with the same result which attended our predecessors, that we have driven the disease from one sore spot where it gathered and festered, out into the whole body where it has poisoned and corrupted every part. That was New York's experience, under the intelligent direction of the misguided author of the series of articles begun in the Ladies' Home Journal under the subsequently suppressed titie of "Andromaniacs." And it has been the experience of every other place where the same experiment has been tried.

Some time ago some philanthropists erected in San Francisco a place called the Nymphia. This was a place were "these women" could go and be found by those who sought them. It was in a quarter of the town where it could do the least harm, and had many things to recommend it, but best of all was the fact that it was to be a place whose character was certain and open, and yet which was not on the main thoroughfares, flaunting itself under the eyes of everyone. No sooner had it started than the holy fathers of the church were on it. Aided by the oratory of ambitious young lawyers they pounced upon the politicians, who constituted the Board of Supervisors, and those gentlemen promptly took up the good work and closed the place.

Now what was accomplished? Was any good done? Nothing was accomplished except to drive the women into hotels and lodging-houses to ply their trade as before and entrap the young as well as the initiate.

It is folly in dealing with this question to be too theoretical. The business exists. You cannot stamp it out. You must deal with it in that way which will accomplish the most good for all. That way is not to abolish it by law. That is a mere "Golden Bull." The way to do is to recognize the evil and then regulate it.

There are two sets of people to be considered: those in the business and the general public. Both of these are benefited by regulation of the traffic—the public by the partial abatement of a crying evil, and by the diminution of disease in many of its worst forms—the women by a general amelioration of their condition, and above all by their liberation from the petty system of toranny and pillage to which they are subjected by the police and others.

And who doubts the existence of such oppression has only to pass a morning in the Police Court and watch the miserable women convicted and sentenced one after another upon the uncorroborated testimony of police officers. They stand no show against the officers. An arrest is equivalent to a conviction. If extortion does not flourish under such a state of affairs, there is at least no reason why it should not. And as the police are not all angels, it does.

Such things would be impossible under a rationally regulated and licensed system. The money which now is paid for protection against the law would go into the city treasury as license fees and be employed for sanitary inspection and the general betterment of the condition of this unfortunate class.

Of course such a bold plan would be impracticable in the present state of the local mind, and it is necessary to accomplish by indirections what would bring, if done directly, a storm of minitterial abuse upon the promoters of the plan. This is to be done by means of a system of bail forfeitures, the details of which are immaterial.

Suffice it to say that this time the little Mayor is right, but the organ of filth, frenzy and folly, the Examiner, is again once more on the same side as usual—the wrong side.

A Worthy Charity.

There is a charity in San Francisco, conducted upon business principles and worthy of general support. Its value cannot be over estimated! It is only at times like the present holiday season that it is before the public eye, but it it is working three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. It is the Children's Hospital.

In 1875 when a few benevolent-minded, large-souled women started a free dispensary for women and children at 509 Taylor street, no vision of the present immense institution came to them. They sought to do their little to prevent suffering and misery where they believed the need was greatest. They worked against great odds and with little support from the general public. In 1882 Tyler Gray presented to Mrs. Harrington, his daughter, fifty veras of land where the present hospital now stands. She accepted it for the institution, of which she was one of the prime movers, and the deed was made out in the name of the Children's Hospital. This was the beginning of the present institution.

About nine years ago Mrs. C B. Alexander of New York built and furnished the maternity cottage and endowed it with $1000 a year. This was followed by W. R. Hearst's generous addition of the Little Jim cottage, the story of which is well known.

The society young ladies of San Francisco have always taken a generous interest in the Children's Hospital and have done much for it. Its operating expenses are in the neighborhood of $3500 a month, and its income from pay patients probably $400. The deficit has to be met by the subscriptions of those who can afford.

Recently, among the generation who have grown up realizing the great work for good done by this hospital, there has been a disposition to remember it by bequests which will, in time, perhaps, make it self-supporting. This method of securing a lasting and ever increasing work of the widest benevolence can not go too far and should be considered by every man who can afford, in the drawing of his will.

They are singing one song in Seattle; singing it in a harmonious, continuous strain. It is called "The Progress of Seattle," and the words change to suit the occasion of the music; but it is always ringing out, steady, clamorous, insistent, like the marching song to victory.

You may hear the strain in every Seattle paper that you take up. "Is in the World's Highway; Latitude Gives Seattle Advantage over San Francisco; Rapidly Overtaking Its Only Rival on the Coast; Commerce Transacted on the Shorter Routes," are the headlines on a late article in the Seattle Times. In it is set forth plausible reasoning that will appeal to many a reader.

How different is this to our local inactivity in the musical line. San Francisco's papers deplore the condition of the city, politically and otherwise. The tune they softly hum is not of suecess, but of adversity. The tune must change or there will be cause for pæons of rejoicing in the active city on the sound.

A New York woman wants $10,000 damages because a heartless man jilted her, after waiting twenty-one years for him to make the necessary arrangements. Had they been married some years ago, the chances are that she would now be suing for $20,000 alimony.

There is an epidemic of confessions going the rounds. If a man is not able to acknowledge at least one murder, several train robberies and numerous petty crimes, he need not expect newspaper recognition. He is of no use to the profession.

These stories of horrible confessions come at intervals and have their week or so in the papers. The reason is difficult to explain. It is possible that the first story of the kind sets an example that other criminals follow, and it may be that the newspaper correspondents discover from the first story a new line to work for space.

The case of H. Green, who has admitted the murder of Bill Feeney in Michigan in 1875, the shooting of Selby in Dakota shortly after, several robberies, and desertion from the army, is the latest confession story. It bears all the usual earmarks. Green walks into the police station and gives himself up. Then he confesses to crimes dating so far back into antiquity that his absolute confession could never convict him of them. He will be held a few days and an investigation made which will prove neither the truth nor the falsity of his tales. In the meantime he will be forgotten by newspapers and readers alike, and drift out into obscurity as an ordinary hobo. The next confession story from Siskiyou, San Diego or intermediate points will head a column in the dailies in a short time.

No condemnation is too severe for the newspapers that have, without other than a suspicion, cast discredit upon the good name of Miss Mary Hoffman. There was not an iota of evidence for their flaming head-line stories of her elopement and they are now seeking to cover up the mistake they made.

Miss Hoffman's whole life has been such that scandal has no excuse for a pointing finger. She has been an angel of mercy to the sick and the suffering. She has lived an honest, straight-forward, work-a-day life and there should be absolute evidence before a word of censure is spoken of her.

There is too strong a desire in newspaper offices to make mountains out of mole-hills, sensations from the occurences of every day. This is proven in every issue of any yellow journal but the hasty, hurried, glance-and-forget reading public do not notice the many corrections and frequent lapses on what, in the first telling, promises a striking story. These are the mistakes made. If no one takes them up with threats of libel they are ignored in future issues and the stray reader who remembers the first story—the mistake—wonders how it all ended. If corrections are demanded in terms that may not be passed over, they appear, carefully framed and modestly headed.

The present case offers a striking example of one of these errors. Miss Mary Hoffman is too well known here for the stories told to be ignored and the people who knew her will await the final explanation of her mysterious disappearance before believing ought but good of her.

In Chicago, the other day, Mrs. Warren E. Closen, for six years the wife of the mister of the same name, announced to her spouse that she was going to be married the next day to Ernest W. Hall. She showed him the license, the wedding invitation, and a list of the guests. He wasn't invited.

This was the gentle way in which she announced the fact that she had secured a divorce without his knowledge some months before. It is a whole sermon upon the subject of easy divorces and it is all true. During the time of her application for, and securing of, a divorce from him, she was living with him, and his wages, which she banked in her name, paid the expenses of the suit.

Isn't it time to call a halt?

The Bulletin has achieved the greatest success on a Christmas edition of any of the dailies. It has presented matter of general interest, on new lines, entertainingly and brightly. It has given a finely printed half-tone supplement without sensational features but with the progress of California in art, in music and in literature, illustrated. The only indication of paid write-up to mar the symmetry of its artistic handling are the articles for and by Mayor James D. Phelan. Mr. Phelan's views on "Our Intellectual Growth," conspicuously placed between the deep thoughts of David Starr Jordan and Benjamin Ide Wheeler on similar topics, are like the contents of a lettuce sandwich—poor fodder between slices of good bread. The leader on "New San Francisco," written in praise of Mayor Phelan's administration, bears the unmistakable symptoms of the checkbook. In the ordinary Christmas number in San Francisco, whose contents are dominated by the dollar, this would be expected and understood, but the Bulletin has achieved so creditable a publication otherwise, so free from the objectionable features named, that it is a grave pity they should have lowered their standard in this palpably absurd way.

Baron Von Schroeder's libel suit stripped the last rag of respectability from his back and left him a naked, shivering thing to shun and scorn. Never again may he be seen in the company of respectable women or of honest, self-respecting men. He has been proven at his own instance, upon his own challenge, to be far worse than any newspaper dared to hint.

For the others, the females who have been associated with him in his debauchery, the Wave has no pity. Their names have been held back by the newspapers out of a mistaken idea of chivalry. They should be branded with a red-hot iron on the cheek with the scarlet letter H, and kept from ever again mingling with other than their own class of degenerates.

By The Clock; By Puul West

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

This is going to be an eventful evening. I feel it n every wheel and spring in my works.

She feels it, too. See how ill at ease she is! How she listens to every sound without! How nervously she looks at me every two minutes!

Ah, pretty one, I know your secret!

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

They are coming to night, and you feel, you know, that before midnight you will have given your heart and hand to one of them. But to which one?

I think I know. I am sure I know, even better than you, the one you prefer in your inmost heart.

He is poor; but the other night, when I had run down, he wound me and set me right.

The other one is rich; but last week, as he waited for you to dress for the theatre he looked at me and swore, because you were late. A man who will swear at a clock!

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

There goes the bell!

Which do you suppose it is?

Oh, my dear, we are excited, you and I! Take one more glance at your lovely self in the mirror, though goodness knows you are always beautiful.

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

Your novel, girl! Your novel! That's it. Don't let him know you are nervous. Now, rise to meet him.

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

It's the poor one! But how handsome! Such a man!

And flowers! Well, well! This does look well. Bride's roses, too. Here, don't——

Whew! I thought she was going to leave them right before me on the mantel! Then I couldn't have seen a thing.

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

That's it. Two of the largest roses in your belt. That will encourage him.

Oh, I would not give a Waterbury for the rich one's chances now, if all goes right!

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

Still the weather, and the theatre, and the war, and the war, and the theatre, and the weather.

This will never do! Half an hour gone, thirty of the most precious minutes in your lives, and you are no nearer——

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

Shades of Galileo! For what hour did the other, the rich one, make to-night's engagement? Wasn't it half past eight? It was!

Ah, no wonder, pretty one, you start as you reca that, and look at me!

I cannot lie for you. It is eight-fifteen. And you have led him on not one single whit!

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

Can you not perceive how bashful he is? Can you not divine, by the glances he casts at you, by his sighs, his awkwardness, how the land lies?

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

You have only thirteen minutes, and then the other one will be here, and this one will have to go. And he will go broken-hearted.

Then the other one? Ah, he is business-like and cold-blooded. And he will ask you and you will say yes.

Twelve minutes!

He is looking at you, and clearing his throat, to speak.

Now help him. Look down at your roses, and if you can bring a little blush

Oh, admirable! Admirable! You have given him courage, for you have shown him that you know.

Nine minutes!

Oh, my precious pair, you must hurry.

Tick—tock! Ti-i-ick—to-o-o-ock! I will try to run slowly, even at the cost of my reputation.

Ti-i-i-ick!

He speaks! He says your name!

Look up! But not at him; that will frighten him.

Say "Yes?" and incline yourself a little toward him, as though to show your interest.

Ti-i-i-ick! To-o-o-o-ock!

Oh, you blundering man, do not look at me. I am doing my best for you, can't you see?

"How strange that clock sounds! As though—"

Ah, my girl, that was good.

He will finish the sentence!

"As though it wished to speak, almost. Ah, Elsa, I am like that clock, that would speak, but cannot! Elsa! Elsa!"

Tick-tock! Tick-tock! Ticka-ticka-tocka-ticka-tock!

Hooray!

It is done!

But I must not look! I must cover my face with my hands!

Ticka-ticka-tock!

One minute!

Tick-tock!

The bell!

The other man!

"I love you!"

"My own!"

Ticka-ticka-ticka-tocka-tocka-tock! B-r-r-r-r-r Heavens! there goes my mainspring! But—I—I—did it. I—I—I'm running down!

Harper's Bazar.

Christmas Vignettes of San Francisco

Christmas is defined by a cynic as the time when you give what you can not afford and receive what you do not want. Let the cynic alone; he has nothing to do with Christmas. His brutal honesty has no place in Santa Claus, Kris Kringle stories. He did not celebrate the day, I'll wager, by any more than dining at his married sister's, to save himself the restaurant price.

Christmas was celebrated by those who could afford; by those who could not afford but didn't care; by those who wanted what they got, and by those who wanted what they got whether they wanted it or not. This is the class of people who made December 25th the greatest, most joyous holiday of the year, and there was not a cynic about.

In every window facing the street in the big stone-house near the summit of Knob Hill, were holly wreaths. The drawing room, library, parlors and halls were festooned in green, red berries and white ribbon. The chandeliers were hidden in masses of evergreen and misseltoe. It was a bower of Christmas beauty.

The servants were garbed in their holiday attire and hurried hither and thither with holiday smiles on their faces. All was prepared for the great event of the Christmas tree and uncles, aunts, cousins, grandmas, grandpas and parents had assembled in the drawing room where the towering pine, reaching nearly to the ceiling, bore gaily its burden of multitudinous toys, bon bons, fruit and flowers. There was only one item missing; Baby had not been brought in.

"It is far superior to last year's tree," remarked Aunty to Grandma. "Baby will be pleased."

"Yes. It was so different when I was a girl. Then . . . . "

Everyone jumped to their feet and stood aside as Baby came in led by her smiling nurse. There must be no obstruction to the view of the little Ruler of Holiday Time. Her eyes were big and round and took in the scene with baby wonder.

"Aint it boo'ful!" she cried at last, clasping her plump hands together; "It's so boo'ful! An' it's all for Baby."

The grate, in which two bricks set endwise prevented the consumption of more than one lump of coal at a time, did not heat the big bare studio. Drawn close to the fire was a young girl, a hand shielding her face from the flames. She looked often at the door, expectantly.

A man entered and the girl went to his side as he threw himself heavily in a chair.

"Something's the matter, Ted?" she asked.

"Yes, Bess, matter enough. I couldn't raise a dollar—not a blame red cent. I went to all the papers that I have been working for. They all said to come after Christmas; had to wait for collections. Why, Bess, I fairly begged old Skinflint to give me a dollar, and he owes me forty!"

"It's too bad, Ted——"

"Too bad? Do you realize, Bess, we are cold, stony broke? We can't eat dinner to-night, let alone Christmas dinner to-morrow. Do you understand, girlie, that we are going hungry till Wednesday at the very best?"

"But can't you borrow something, Ted?"

"Who from? I can't, Bess. I don,t know a soul to go to." Bess snuggled up to Ted's side and they both looked into the fire. "I wouldn't mind it so much, myself, but—it aint right—it aint right at all. I've earned the money. I've done their dirty pot-boilers for money and now I can't get it. The fat, sleek hounds! They go home to their heavy tables and their Christmas trees and leave us to starve!"

"Don't, Ted! Don't you care. I won't be very hungry."

"You don't know what it means, girlie. You have never been a day without food; I have and I know. And you shan't go through it—not if I have to use a lead pipe to-night."

"Is there anything we can pawn?"

Ted looked about the studio with hope in his eyes, then laughed harshly. "The last one of the books went yesterday," he said. "My paints and brushes are about all that is left. They wouldn't raise a nickel. If I knew where to go we might get a dollar on the old bed and these chairs—and we'll do it to morrow. The landlord will think we are dodging the rent, but we'll dodge him. We'll fool him all right. And we'll eat to-morrow, Bess, my girl; we'll have a Christmas after all.—I'm hungry. Let's go to bed."

One hundred and thirty-five children made happy in a single day is the record of the Young Ladies' Auxiliary for Christmas. One hundred and thirty-five pairs of shining eyes, black, brown, blue, and gray; one hundred and thirty-five pairs of arms filled with toys and flowers and picture books. As little Tommy Tucker remarked when it was all over: "Gee! Wasn't it a w'opper of a Ch'ismus!"

And Tommy Brown ate too much. Tommy, who will probably never see another Christmas, saved up his appetite for the occasion. "I didn't have no Thanksgivin' dinner," he explained, "an' I never knew nothin' about Santa Claus before I came here. So I didn't eat no supper and I didn't eat no breakfast and I am just goin' to have all I can stuff of Christmas." He ate four plates of turkey and "fixings" and five dishes of ice-cream, and it would have killed most boys; but Tommy can't injure his health. He doesn't have to regard the future because he is dying from an incurable disease, and his days are few this side of the River.

It was at the Children's Hospital that Santa Claus made this gladsome visit. The ancient saint was represented by Mr. Percy King, a pair of false whiskers, a wig and a garb of furs. Ranged round the walls of the sun-room, so closely that it was just possible for Santa to pull his cumbersome pack between were the cots of the little patients. Many were strapped down to their beds to prevent the excitement from disarranging the surgical devices which were doing their healing work. The young ladies whose generous kindness had brightened the lives of these small sufferers were present to help in every way.

It was one of the prettiest acts of holiday good will of the holiday season. The young ladies who planned and executed—society girls whose time is supposed to be devoted to the frivolities of life, had learned the especial desires of each of the tiny patients and there were no disappointments. "See what Santa brought me!" cried one little girl holding up a big doll. "I prayed for it," she added in reverent tones.

Paul Orrington, pale and suffering from a recent injury, was one of the happiest of the children. He had found in Santa's bag what he had long wished for, never hoping to get, and he did not know that he had lost a foot, amputated but a few days before. The sad fact had been kept from him so that there would be no great misery to mar his Christmas joys.

Here, on this Christmas day, was Christ's work done in His own way. The "least" of His children were provided for and made as happy as suffering may be. Quietly, as unostentatiously as possible in these days of the modern newspaper and the "human interest" story, kindly hearts with full purses had given up time and pleasures to the alleviation of the misery of the world.

"Almost over, thank the good Lord," said the Santa Claus of the Kearny and Market streets corner, late Monday night. He spoke with no irreverence. His work for charity was nearly finished. He was the Santa Claus of the Salvation Army Christmas.

"I have done my part of the work and helped as best I could to provide for the very poor of San Francisco on the Lord's birthday. It is nearly over now, and I can say that I am almost worn out.

"For over a week, every day, I have stood here with my coin box and my sign, dressed in this uncomfortable garb of fur and whiskers. It is not a fitting raiment for San Francisco climate, no matter how well it is adapted to Santa Claus' home in the Klondyke. Why, some days I have nearly sweltered!

"But San Francisco has been generous. It is all classes and conditions of people who place money in my till, from the very poor to the very rich. My experiences while standing here, if told, would make a story. I have received contributions from those I would expect more likely to be at our dinner tomorrow, looking for free turkey, than giving to help others to eat.

"We have all worked hard and I am only a small unit in the laborers who will make this Christmas dinner to the poor a success; but I am honestly glad it is nearly over."

He was only a peddler living in dingy quarters on Fourth street, but he had known Christmas days in his youth and he remembered that for some reason or other he must celebrate. There was only one method in his limited experience and he began with poor whiskey and cheap beer to make the day less miserable.

He died at the Receiving Hospital before the midnight hour closed the Christmas day. A fractured skull from a drunken fall was the cause. He regained consciousness for a moment before he passed away.

"Hell of a day, wasn't it?" he said to the surgeon.

Her Sealskin Sacque.

On some far-off Pacific rock
'Mid wind and wave 'twas born,
And grew to meet the billow's shock
With free and careless scorn;
Until it left, at Fate's command,
A gentler realm to seek,
And hastened over sea and land
To rest against her cheek.

How false to call those hands unkind
That reach across the seas,
And levy tribute where they find
The swarming rookeries!
They bring but change from isles all bare
From swirling surge and storm,
Unto a heavenly haven where
They keep my lady warm.

And hence, oh, pity not the seals,
That, dying, learn to live;
For doubtless Death to them reveals
The boon it has to give!
And I a thousand times would die,
A thousand torments taste,
At last against her cheek to lie
Or clasp her slender waist!

—Edwin L. Sabin, in the Smart Set.

Christmas Flowers.

Interesting Habits and Personalities Korean Customs Strange People of A Strange Land.

Recent events in the far East have given to Korea an interest which it has never held before, in the eyes of the American people, especially those of the Pacific Coast. The Korean peninsula will shortly become a trade center in close touch with San Francisco and a few words regarding the people and their characteristics will not be amiss.

The Coreans are strikingly dissimilar from both their nearest neighbors, the Chinese and Japanese and there is a remarkable variety of physiognomy among them, all the more noticeable because of the uniformity of costume. The difficulty of identifying people which besets and worries the stranger in Japan and China does not exist in Korea. It is true that the obliquity of the Mongolian eye is always present, as well as a trace of bronze in the skin but the complexion varies from a swarthy olive to a very light brunette.

There are straight and aquiline noses, as well as broad and snub noses with distended nostrils and though the hair is dark, much of it is so distinctly a russet brown as to require the frequent application of lampblack and oil to bring it to a fashionable black, while in texture it varies from wiriness to silkiness. Some men have full moustaches and large goatees, on the faces of others a few carefully attended hairs, as in China, do duty for both, while many have full, strong beards. The mouth is either the wide, full-lipped, gaping cavity constantly seen among the lower orders, or a small though full feature, or thin-lipped and refined, as is seen continually among particians.

The eyes, though dark, vary from dark brown to hazel; the cheek bones are high; the brow, so far as fashion allows it to be seen, is frequently lofty and intellectual; and the ears are small and well set on. The usual expression is cheerful, with a dash of puzzlement. The physiognomy indicates, in its best aspect, quick intelligence, rather than force of strength of will. The Koreans are certainly a handsome race.

The physique is good. The average heighth of the men is five feet four and a half inches, that of the women cannot be ascertained, and is disproportionately less, while their figureless figures, the faults of which are exaggerated by the ugliest dress on earth, are squat and broad. The hands and feet of both sexes and all classes are very small, white and exquisitely formed, and the tapering, almond-shaped finger-nails are carefully attended to. The men are very strong, and as porters carry heavy weights, a load of 100 pounds being regarded as a moderate one. They walk remarkably well, whether it be the studied swing of the patrician or the short, firm stride of the plebeian when on business. The families are large and healthy. If the government estimate of the number of houses is correct, the population, taking a fair average, is from twelve to thirteen millions, females being in the minority.

Mentally the Koreans are liberally endowed, specially with that gift known in Scotland as "gleg at the uptak." The foreign teachers bear willing testimony to their talent for the rapid acquisition of languages, which they speak more fluently and with a far better accent than either the Chinese or Japanese They have the Oriental vices of suspicion, cunning, and untruthfulness and trust between man and man is unknown. Women are secluded, and occupy a very inferior position.

There is no natioual religion. Confucianism is the official cult, and the teachings of Confucius are the rule of Korean morality Buddhism once powerful, but "disestablished" three centuries ago, is to be met with chiefly in mountainous districts, and far from the main roads. Spirit worship, a species of shamanism, prevails all over the kingdom, and holds the uneducated masses and the women of all classes in complete boundage.

Christian missions, chiefly carried on by Americans, are beginning to produce both direct and indirect effects in Korea.

1. A Korean Bride.
2. Odd Headgear of Northern Tribes.
3. A Middle Class Woman.
4. Some of the Nobility.
5. Dressed for the Street.
6. Ready for the Ride.

Stuttering Employer (writing a letter). "B-b-b-boy, hand me a b-b-b-bl-bl-bl—"

Office Boy. "A blotter, sir, do you wish?"

Stuttering Employer. "Never mind n-n-n-now; the ink has d-d-d-dried."

Over the Demi-Tasse

"The Euaminer, I see, has taken up the movement to preserve the Big Basin," remarked a newspaper man at the Bohemian Club the other night. "I wonder how many of the promoters of the movement know why it was that the Examiner kept away from the project so long. It shows on what small things great matters hinge and how serious are some jokes.

"When the movement was first started a committee of prominent people, San Franciscans some and others from Stanford, Berkeley, San Jose and the towns about,went into the Basin to see for themselves how far the destruction of the redwoods was being carried. The proposed excursion was advertised before-hand and the Chronicle and Call sent in reporters from here. Somehow the Examiner overlooked it until the day after the party started, so they had to rustle in the nearest correspondent to the encampment. This happened to be a young lady who handles the Examiner stuff at Santa Cruz, a bright girl and capable.

"Andrew P. Hill, a photographer at San Jose and one of the hard workers in the Big Basin project, had gone with the committee and had also arranged with the Chronicle to furnish photos for their correspondent. It was an exclusive deal, his pictures to be given to no other paper.

"When Miss Blank at Santa Cruz got the Examiner's wire to join encampment near Boulder Creek and do press and pictures, she loaded up a 4x5 kodak and thought she was prepared for anything. When she got into the encampment and found Hill with his 10x14 looking after the Chronicle's wants in the picture line, she realized that she had made a mistake and was going to be scooped to death. So she opened operations on a new line and commenced a quiet campaign to capture some of the Chronicle's big plates. She made up to Hill and tried to bambozzle him out of his negatives, but while Hill is good natured, he is a long while in the business, and knows what exclusive means. Then, besides, he is married.

"Convinced that she was making no headway here, she planted her batteries in front of Henry Middleton, the jolly proprietor of the Boulder Creek hotel where she was stopping, who drove her to and from the encampment each day. She told Middleton her troubles and begged him to steal several of the photographer's plate holders with the exposed negativcs. She explained that Mr. Hill would be delighted after it was done but couldn't give them to her on account of his compact with the Chronicle.

"Middleton capitulated and promised, rather than see the young lady weep. The next day he brought her a bundle securely wrapped up and tied. 'Here are the plates,' he said. 'I stole them. They are undeveloped and you must be careful that they are not opened until they get into the dark room.'

" 'I'll mark the package;' said Miss Blank, 'so they won't open them at the Examiner by mistake,' and she wrote in big letters upon the bundle, 'Plates—Not developed—Open only in dark room.'

"That package went up to the Examiner by the next mail. It contained two old china dinner plates stolen by Middleton from the camp table. What remarks were made in the Examiner dark room when it was opened, I don't know, but Miss Blank's long story of the excursion sent with the plates was not printed. Neither was there anything regarding the Big Basin published for several months. The telegram she received was short and to the point.

" 'Miss Blank,Examiner Correspondent Boulder Creek,

We did not want dinner plates; wanted pictures. Go back to Santa Cruz.

Examiner.' "

The Christmas Tennis Tournament.

The Christmas tournament at the California Club courts undoubtedly brought forth the best tennis San Francisco has witnessed this year. All the local cracks, attracted by the handsome trophies, as well as the dubs, spurred on by the liberal handicaps allotted them, affixed their signatures to the entry list which footed up an even twenty, only four names short of the championship list, by the way.

In the preliminary rounds the greatest interest centered upon the matches in which Weihe and Adams, the old "pony team," now of Stanford University, and Rosenberg and Hodgkinson, who will represent the Lowell High School in the next Academic League tournament, were to appear. The former were a disappointment, Weihe defaulting to David Painter, and Adams showing up very poorly in his match with young McGavin. He probably played way below form, but at the same time it is doubtful if at his best he could discount the beautiful game essayed by his clever opponent.

Throughout the tournament Drummond McGavin played the game of his life. His strokes were the prettiest, and they were effective, too, until he met Grant Smith in the semi-finals. It was in this match that headwork began to tell. This is a department of the game in which McGavin at times seems woefully deficient On the other hand, Smith, in whom the talent see a future champion, lays no claim to pretty playing. But tennis is a game where quick thought and speed are requisites, and in these he is not lacking.

Grant Smith Winner of the Christmas Tournament.

Al. Rosenberg's defeat of Robt. Whitney, though he was slightly aided by a small handicap, was the surprise of the first day's play. Whitney seldom plays his best game in a handicap event, and the shots of the high school crack seemed even more accurate than usual. But he in turn succumbed to Smith's vigorous onslaughts.

Hodgkinson was lucky in drawing as an opponent for the first round one who proved easy game. In the second round he met his match in Drummond McGavin, the U. C. man winning what proved to be the hardest contest of the day.

Crowell played unusually well until he reached the final. Here he collapsed entirely, Smith winning an almost featureless contest. In the earlier rounds, to the surprise of many, Johnson was taken into camp by Crowell, though allotted a small handicap.

Collier, like Bob Whitney, seems unable to win out in a handicap event. Of late, too, his game, instead of improving, has deteriorated considerably. His strokes seem entirely devoid of speed.

As a whole the Christmas event was one of the most successful tournaments ever played at the local courts. All eyes are now fixed upon Smith. He is generally conceded as ranking well ahead of any other local second class player, and probably belongs in a class of his own just below Robert N. Whitney He has natural qualifications such as no other tennis devotee of prominence on the coast possesses.

He Wouldn't Say Good-bye.

One of them didn't care and the other one did not know that they were seen. Otherwise it would have been different.

It was in an office building last Monday afternoon. The first man, call him Jack—came up in the elevator carrying his ante-Christmas package. It was a beautiful bundle and would have filled several bottles if it had not been placed in another receptacle.

Jack lurched into the outer office of the law firm of never mind who—and asked in a tremulous voice for one of his partners;—call him Ed. Ed who came out of the private office noticed Jack's condition and took him out in the hall. The greeting was effusive.

"Ed, ol' chum! dear, dear boy! s'happish to meet you. Merry Chrismash, Ed! Le's have a drink—I'm broke."

Ed put a coin into Jack's palm. "Busy and can,t, Jack. Sorry."

"Come 'long, ol' man. Have a drink on me."

"I'm busy, Jack, or I would. I must get right back. Man waiting."

"You wouldn't leave your ol' friend, would you Ed, ol' boy? Don't you know I love you; allus love you?"

"Yes,Jack,of course; but go on away now old fellow. I'm busy."

"Not till you kiss me, Ed. Not till you say good bye an' kissh me!"

"Go along, Jack. Don't bother me now."

"Kissh me an' I'll go 'long all right. Jes' show me you love me shame's ever."

Ed took a glance around. There was no one in sight. Jack was hanging on his neck and wailing. "Not till 'y kish me!" There was an explosive smack.

"Good bye, Jack."

" 'Bye, Ed. Love me' shame's ever!" and the man with the package rang the elevator bell.

Mr. and Mrs. Georg Henschel, the well known vocalists, arrived in New York this week from Europe and in a few days will start out on their last American tour, as they intend to return to Europe for an indefinite period. San Francisco is to hear these incomparable aetists once again, arrangements having been made for a number of concerts to be given at the Metropolitan Temple in February. Owing to the many requests sent in, the manager of the Henschels has decided to open the sale of season tickets on January 7 at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s music store, Kearny and Sutted streets. Season tickets will be transferable.

In the Sun Room at the Children's Hospital.

Before the Footlights.

Minnie Myers at the Tivoli.

"When the gnat stings don't scratch; and when you are annoyed, don't worry." Excellent advice, bestowed by the jovial landlady of the White Horse on a irritable lodger and singularly applicable to the White Horse audience. For the poor things are undoubtably annoyed and it requires all Jesepha's philosophy to prevent their "worrying." Who would not be annoyed at the waste of talent in the White Horse Tavern production? Admirable acting, graphic character sketches are thrown away on a flimsy plot of threadbare antiquity, too impossible for realism,too realistic for farce. We are supposed to be at a comedy and yet the exceeding clever King and Norcross company can scarce raise a laugh at their own expense; if people do not yawn throughout the performance it is because most of the pretty women and convincing mena re so attractive in their own personality that the authors are forgiven and forgotten.

Minerva Dorr, in a peasant costume calculated to make female city hearts throb with envy,makes a saucy,winsome landlady Josepha who has set her heart too high,namely on a yearly lodger for whom her best room and her best dishes are always reserved; this attitude is naturally resented by Lepold, head waiter, devoted admirer,and aspirant for the vacated shoes of the late Mr. Josepha;and on Frank Norcross devolves the duty of suffering from divers jealousies and palpitations till the situation is properly evolved. Fred Mower makes the best of the chief comic character, the protesting traveller who hates moving on, who is deep in a lifelong lawsuit, and who wants to arrange a marriage between the opposing families. Then we have a lawyer making love in earnest while supposed to do it by proxy,a timid young man who has to fortify himself extensively while lovemaking,an old professor—a genuine character study—who is eloquent on the joys of poverty, all excellently played by Messrs. Hitchcock, Chester and Fenton; while there never was a more bewitchingly gauche ingenue than lisping Ottilie as played by Miss Louise Randolph, and Miss Bernice Norcross makes a pretty Clara who consents to marry when she finds the right man. There are numberless minor parts among which may be singled out Lulie Lane's piquante female postman and Mae Burkney's Resi, the picturesque beggar girl who sings the "Kiss" song on which the piece is supposed to turn. The nicest thing one can say to the performers is that everybody hopes to see them in a play more worthy of their talents.

At the Orpheum.

The Orpheum will start the New Century with one of the strongest bills ever presented in San Francisco. Although the Orpheum road Show remains, the clever people composing that organization, will give an entire change of program. Cressy will present a new sketch, one of his own but in quite another vein, "In the Key of C." Severus Schaffer will introduce his new juggling feat which he declares to be better than anything he has ever done. Louise Dresser, Jack Norworth and Bertie Fowler will all change their acts and Johnson, Davenport and Lorello have another knockabout act. That in itself wonld be a big bill anywhere but the Orpheum management has still more. The Hawthorne Sisters, probably the most popular brace of soubrettes in America and big favorites in San Francisco, will head the new element in the bill. The girls are prettier than ever and are prepared with a lot of new material, to deserve the welcome their past success in San Francisco will insure them. William Cahill Davis, song writer, singer and Irish comedian; he calls himself "the man from Ireland;" will be another addition to the program. After laying off for a week the Biograph will resume its place on the bill with a new series of pictures. There will be a special matinee on New Year's Day.

At the Alcazar.

"Naughty Anthony," which is now holding the Alcazar boards, is only naughty to those who look at things with unclean eyes. The play is full of ginger, decidedly snappy and semi-suggestive; it calls for good smart work on the part of quite a large cast of players, in which are included a bevy of pretty girls in natty attire. Miss Convere, the hosiery model, is very apt in her role, and her coquetry in displaying a well shaped limb clothed in a countless array of pretty stockings is filling the "bald-head" rows at the Alcazar at every performance. The play is running to the capacity of the theater, and as it is down for a second week, is sure to do one of the largest two weeks' business done at that theater this season.

Comedy is certainly the fort of the Alcazar players. Cast them as you will they show up to better advantage when manufacturing fun than in any other phase of the drama, and "Naughty Anthony" is somehow quite breezy enough and full of the fluffy texture which good comedy material is made up of, and enables them to revel with ease in the brightest fun-producing play the Alcazar management has offered the public in many a long day.

Editorial "Den" of J. S. Halstead, Press Agent, Alcazar

Eduard Strauss at the California.

At the California.

An engagement of the greatest musical importance is that of Eduard Strauss, who comes with his Vienna orchestra to the California Theatre for the week beginning Saturday night. Eduard Strauss is the third son of the distinguished Strauss family of Vienna of whom Johann is the most widely known. The father organized the Strauss orchestra in Vienna in 1823, and the organization has existed ever since. The sons are Johann, Josef and Eduard, the latter being a recognized composer as well as conductor. The present is his second visit to the United States, the first being in 1890, when he achieved a great success with his orchestral concerts. Naturally, there have been advancements made since that time, and today Eduard Strauss and his organization aremore effective than then. Manager Rudolph Aronson secured him for an American tour, which extends across the continent and through Canada. The prices for the engagement are as follows: Box and loge seats, $2.50; orchestra, first twelve rows, $1.50; first four rows balcony, $1.50, and remaining rows, $1; gallery, reserved, 75 cents, and unreserved, 50 cents.

The programmes, which will be interesting in the extreme, will be changed at every performance, and a special matinee will be given on New Year's Day.

"Human Hearts," an idyll of the Arkansas hills, will follow Strauss.

From all appearances a fashionable crush will be in evidence at the concerts to be given at the Columbia Theater shortly by Mlle. Dolores (Antoinette Trebelli), there being already an incessant inquiry for seats by our best people. Trebelli was a great card here on the occasion of her former appearance in concert, she having created the most pronounced individual success of any songstress that has been heard here in years. She has no peer in concert work and as she returns with an exceptionally strong repertoire for this engagement, the outlook is for a series of unusually fine musical events. It will be remembered that her exquisite rendition of the laughing song from Manon Lessaut was so charming as to make it the great request number of her concerts, and already her admirers are asking for its rendition at the coming concerts. Clarence Newell a pianist of exceptional ability is to be the songstress' accompanist.

The management of Mdlle. Antonia Dolores (Antoinette Trebelli) announces a limited tour of the Pacific Coast of that eminent lyric artist. A series of concerts will be given in this city under the management of Gottlob, Marx & Co., and the vast number of Trebelli's admirers in this city may therefore look forward to an early opportunity of attending a musical treat much out of the ordinary.

Camera Club Doings.

Members of the Camera Club and amateur photographers generally are interested in the San Francisco Photographic Salon, which opens at Hopkins Institute on January 17. Under the joint management of the Institute and the Camera Club, this exhibition of photographic art promises to be the finest thing of the kind ever attempted in San Francisco. A first and second certificate of merit and a first and second medal are to be awarded in each of the following classes:

Class I, Landscapes; Class II, Marine; Class III, Genre; Class IV, Portraiture; Class V, Still Life; Class VI, Animal Studies; Class VII, Architecture and Interiors.

The rules regarding the contest are as follows:

All pictures submitted for exhibition must be framed or matted under glass. They must also be addressed: "Photographic Salon, Mark Hopkins Institute of Art, San Francisco, California," forwarded at owner's risk, charges prepaid, and delivered at the Institute not later than January 1, 1901. Pictures to be returned at owner's expense. No charge will be made to exhibitors for space.

The title, the exhibitor's name and address, and if for sale, the price, must be upon the back of all pictures submitted. Nothing shall appear upon the front of the picture except its title and the maker's name. Pictures exhibited must bear the name of the maker, and not the names of firms or galleries.

If any pictures are sold while on exhibition, ten per cent of the price will be deducted by the Institute.

Every work for exhibition must be submitted to a duly elected jury for a decision as to its acceptance or rejection; the hanging and placing of all accepted work will be under the exclusive control of the jury, and no changes will be made in the arrangement, nor can any work be withdrawn before the final closing of the exhibition.

Each exhibitor will be furnished with a catalogue, which will be the official notification of acceptance.

The management will use all possible care to prevent, but will not be responsible for, any loss or damage that may occur.

On Thursday, December 20, the California Camera Club gave a Hy-jon-e-kin and auction of prints at the club rooms, which was a social as well as a financial success. Prints were donated by the members and the proceeds are to be used in meeting the expenses of the Photographic Salon. A Christmas tree, music, and refreshments added to the social pleasures.

Frank A. Coxhead lectured Friday evening, December 21, on Maoriland, at the Metropolitan Temple, for the Camera Club. The lecture was illustrated with stereopticon views of the subject.

The Social Calendar.

At Home.

Mrs. J. H. Williams, 515 Jones, first and third Thursdays.

mrs. Jonathan Curtis, 907 Eddy, first Wednesdays.

Mrs. James W. Edwards, Occidental, first and third Mondays.

Mrs. Maurice Casey and Miss Dillon, third and fourth Tuesdays.

Mrs. Augustus Taylor, 2266 Franklin street, third and fourth Wednesdays.

Mrs. Follis, Fridays, 3 to 6.

Mrs. W. R. Wheeler, Pleasanton, first and last Thursdays.

Mrs. J. A. Noah, 336 Post, Thursdays.

Mrs. Jacques Blum, 2201 Buchanan, last Wednesdays.

Mrs. Herman Schoenholz, 1704 Larkin, last Fridays.

Mrs. Henry Payot, Palace Hotel, first and third Mondays.

Mrs. T. J. Gosliner, The Stewart, Wednesdays.

Miss Tillie Loewenthal, 1773 Post, third Tuesdays.

Mrs. J. A. Lyons, The Stewart, Wednesdays.

Mrs. Henrietta Newman, 1731 Broadway, Fridays.

Mrs. Florence T. Buyer, 1510 Octavia, second Tuesdays.

Mrs. Victor R. Ulman, 1816 Baker, first and second Thursdays.

Mrs. Oscar Hoffman, Hotel Montrose, first and third Mondays.

Mrs. Clement Wilder, Hotel Oliver, first Tuesday.

Mrs. Wallace A. Wise, 1560 Fulton street, first Tuesday.

Mrs. I. Maguire and Mrs. S. S. Rau, 1482 Page, first Wednesday.

Weddings Past.

The wedding of Miss Jessie McDonald, a young society belle of Ventura, a sister-in-law of Congressman Barlow of San Luis Obispo, and James Cashin of the firm of Grant Bros., railroad contractors of San Francisco and Los Angeles, took place last Monday morning in Ventura.

December 23.—A double wedding was celebrated in the French Church on Bush street last Sunday evening when Antoine M. Labarthe and Miss Ingrace Isaacq, and Jacques Lamanet and Miss Anna Etchart were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Father Guibert. A banquet followed at one of the down-town restaurants.

December 20.—Miss Alice Beatrice Connelly and Franklin Civouer Smith, at the home of the bride's mother. Rev. Edgar J. Lyon officiated.

November 28.—Miss Elizabeth G. Curran and Arthur T. McGinty, in Holy Cross Church, by the Rev. John F. McGinty, brother of the groom.

December 27.—Miss Vesta Louise Jordan and Abbott Atherton Hanks at First Unitarian Church.

December 23.—Miss Virginia de Shields and Henry E. Diggles; Palace Hotel.

December 22.—Katie Rehm and Charles Mitchell; 608 Lombard street.

Engagements.

Miss Ethel Lichtig to Herman Wiener.

Miss Belle Hersher of Cincinnati, niece of Mrs. E. Hersher, to A. Greenfield of Pinole.

Miss Gertrude Forsythe Bagnall, daughter of Mrs. T. A. Bagnall, to George Allis Yocum.

Miss Freda E. Mersing, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Mersing, to Dr. George G. Stanford.

Miss Ceil Prager to Louis Ryder Plechner of St. Paul, Minn.

Miss Ruth Muriel Sheldon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Sheldon, to S. Penfield Taylor.

Miss Rose Cohen, daughter of Mrs. Julius Cohen, to Louis S. Gosliner.

Miss Elsa Priber, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Priber, to L. Jockers.

The Travelers.

J. W. Griffiths and Mrs. Griffiths have returned from a six months' trip in Europe.

Miss Amy Steinman has returned from the North, and is at 1404 O'Farrell street.

Mrs. John Dickerson left for a trip abroad recently. She will remain away several months.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard E. Queen are still in Europe. When last heard from the party were in Paris.

Early in January Mr. and Mrs. James Stewart leave for Coronado. They will remain away two months.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Smith, Miss Marion Smith, Miss Florence Nightingale and Miss Sperry have returned from an eastern visit to their home in Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Berthold Hinterman have returned from a ten months' tour through Switzerland, Germany and France.

George Wesley Davis of Butte City, Montana, is at the Pleasanton.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Haigh of Logansport, Ind., are spending a month here. They will make a tour of the southern part of the State.

Mrs. M. W. Walsh of 230 Hyde street has left for Los Angeles to spend the holidays with her daughter, Mrs. F. Eva Goldman.

Mrs Edwin W. Joy has returned from a three months' sojourn in New York and Washington, and is at 1506 California street.

Miss Annie Hawes of 321 Lyon street has returned after an extended visit to relatives and friends in Calaveras county.

Mrs. Horace Smyth, Mr. and Mrs. I. R. Davis Grubb and D. Hanson Grubb have gone south to spend the holidays.

Mrs. M. E. Pettis has returned from Stockton, where she was on a visit to her nephew, Elmer E. Hall.

Howard M. Block is at present in Berlin.

Harry Brown and Frank Elliott have gone to their home in Newport, Ky., for the holidays.

Miss Carrie Petersen is the guest of friends in Redlands. Miss Petersen will remain in the south until after the new year.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Jacob and children of Portland, Or., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Myerfeld of 2731 Clay street.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Herrman of Portland, Oregon, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rosenblatt of 1911 Pacific avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Loewe have returned from their eastern trip and are stopping at 1509 Gough street.

Mrs. Charles Higby of Salt Lake City is visiting the Misses Johann and Wanda Hadenfeldt at 1332 Page street.

Mrs. H. P. Gale of Rutland, Vermont, has arrived in this city, where she will spend the winter with her sister, Mrs. Henry L. Dodge.

Mr. and Mrs. William Cluff have left for New York to spend the holidays with their daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Van Wyck and the Misses Gertrude and Edna Van Wyck arrived at their Steiner street residence on Saturday last.

W. F. Whittier has left for the East to remain until after the holidays as the guest of his daughter, Mrs. Weir.

H. Braumschwesger has returned from a years tour of Europe. He spent the past few months at the Paris Exposition

Balls, Receptions, Etc., Past.

December 16—A dinner and reception were given to Miss Rose Leiser in honor of her engagement to Samuel Schneider.

December 15.—The second cotillion of Los Amigos Club was held at Golden Gate Hall.

December 21.—The third assembly and german of the Entre Nous Cotillion was given at the Palace Hotel.

December 20.—Les Bon Ami Club gave its second assembly at the Maple Room and Marble Hall of the Palace Hotel.

December 27.—Eschscholtzias gave a dancing party at Mission Parlor Hall.

December 22.—The Theta Sigma Kappa Sorority had their annual social gathering at 1207 Gough street.

December 22.—Miss Maye Colburn entertained at her home.

December 23.—Reception and sixty-fifth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Gendar at 545 Stevenson street.

Weddings Future.

January 1.—Miss Clara Heyman to Joseph L. Emanuel; California Hotel.

January 3.—Miss Mabel Hopps to W. J. Shimans.

January 9.—Miss Lilian Mary Follis to Frank Wood Griffin; Follis residence.

January 2.—Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, niece of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Willey, to Roland Mears Kelley; Trinity Church.

Balls, Receptions, Etc., Future.

January 3.—Yale Glee and Banjo Club ball at the Palace Hotel.

January 9.—Burlingame Club ball at Palace Hotel.

January 1.—The engagement reception of Miss Hattie Peters and I. J. Klarmet will be held from 2 to 5 o'clock at 1142 Golden Gate avenue.

January 2.—The Unknowns will hold their eighth annual masquerade ball at Golden Gate Hall.

January 9.—The Mendota Club will hold its second assembly in Mission Opera Hall.

The Blood-Red Moon

From the French.

All by herself, with her face red and round as a drunkard's, yet seemingly scared into reflection by some awful mystery, perhaps only the dread of her own nothingness!—the Moon is beginning, in a sort of desperation, her tremendous journey across the heavens, which now seem double the width of the plain below; for this Moon is she who lives upon the woes of womanhood!

Below, the wide heath, which glowed with roseate tints by day, is now drearily brown as if it, too, had been struck by a mortal terror of its own silence. See! Where yonder it unrolls its loose waves of hair, which seem cut midway by the livid strip of pathway that leads back, slantwise, to the very sky, it's end lost in the radiance of that great round face at the horizon's edge.

What an exquisite night! What utter peace! What absolute silence, that nothing may ever disturb! Far or near, not a creature. No large peasant hut; no larger peasant rooftree. Nobody in sight, unless we may call the Moon somebody.

Dominating the scene she imperiously arises, opening broadly into the deeper gulfs of heaven like a well of gold, through which exhales all sighs and stirring breezes; into which is drawn all night's delicate aromas. Slowly, lazily, she lifts her head higher, sucking into her splendor the myriad things which live in her beams, but in such a silence as makes one's head whirl in bewildered expectancy.

An hour rolls slowly and solemnly by, sixty distinct minutes, during which nothing seems to change; but up there the great, red face, which once died in sheer terror of its own emptiness, slowly advances on her vampire flight, mute as fate, but watching, watching!

Yes, watching; for see how she bends above the plain! She is drunk—oh yes!—but she longs to drink again. She draws in her breath luxuriously. She sucks up all shadows and all shining things into her golden well of a mouth, and takes into herself everything, whether it be of spirit or of flesh and blood.

Look! Down there near the livid pathway a tiny speck can be seen. It may be an insect at first glance; perhaps an ant erect; but no! it is a snake now, undulating amid the shadows—or is it a bird with drooping wings? Ah! at last, it is plainly a woman. A very young one, too, with a face a trifle pale, but childishly round, and shut in primly by a close black velvet hood, like those worn by imbeciles in the hospitals reserved for paupers. A few blonde locks escape in shining coils from their strait prison of confining bands, with an attempt at freedom. Her figure, also rebellious in its luxuriant curves, is closely held by the round plain skirt which binds her limbs, and even her feet seem to protest against the clumsy wooden sabots, in which they nestle. But her hands, little starry satellites to the round moon of her curving form, lay at rest against it, folded demurely upon the gleaming white folds of her apron She is a beautiful Breton girl with eyes clear as crystal, which open widely, yet see not all there is to see.

And she walks on, not knowing where she is going, her work-stiffened limbs heavy with weariness. She looks at the Moon, and the Moon may be looking at her. Its face, now like that of a consumptive close to death, has grown somber, and its red seems like putrid blood, congested suddenly by some terrible thought that still enshadows the vast. expressionless face of the golden monster.

The little peasant seats herself upon the heather, quite worn out, her breasts scratched and bleeding from the rude caresses of the nettles she has met and clasped along the way.

She is seeking some remedy for her trouble; is there none? When the old grandmother bade her to "walk! walk!" did she know the reason why she must walk? Yet one might sleep nicely upon the heather at this hour, when the cricket stops singing. One might sleep so well—and she stretches herself out, so weary that her eyes shut in spite of her endeavor to keep them open, for what is her will against those evil spirits which———

She is fifteen years old, and for three nights she has dreamed that she must eat of the dust of the earth. She is filled with a strange sickness, and no one can tell her its name. The imbecile old grandmother, the only one left to whom she can cling, declares it is the Moon which causes it, and with her withered arm pointing, seeress-like, to the great ocean which laps the edge of this great desert of heather, cries weirdly:

"Yes, it is she who makes the tides ebb and the woman——" but as the old creature is deaf, she does not hear the child's incredulous laughter.

With her arm rigidly extended and her eyes fixed, she gazes up at her enemy—that blonde head of the sky which eternally drinks the blood of her sex, and which has left her a wrinkled, wasted hag.

"March!" she cries with sudden fury. Go! Keep on walking, walking! It is the Moon that is the cause of it all!"

She shakes her doubled fist in fury—does she mean it for the Moon, or the Maid?—and the little one goes slowly away, all laughter frightened out of her by the evil terrors of the hour.

And now, weary and young, she can not struggle against the blessed drowsiness that overtakes her. She sleeps. This time she dreams that the Moon caresses her, but it has a dreadful mouth! "It is she who makes the tide ebb; do you hear, Maid Mary?"

When the poor child awakens, the night is black about her, and she weeps all alone, torn with the doubts and terrors of her virgin soul. She weeps because the Moon no longer lightens her path, because she feels lost thus thrust out into the big world, and above all because no one loves her.

Drearily she turns back, a mere shadow now along the narrow path. As she turns she begins to weep sadly, but away up there, hidden behind the pall of the sky, the Moon sneers at her sorrow, for this Moon is a fiery flower, and she glows and thrives upon the blood of womanhood

"Hello, Maid Mary!"

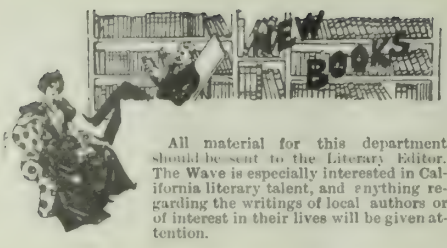
"Hello, Johnny-boy!"

Their arms saw the air a minute, too aimless to find anything to grasp. He is nearly eighteen; she is fifteen, and her gown can scarcely contain her swelling figure, developed early, and held more proudly as she suddenly is conscious of her youth and beauty. He wears a hat with a wide, flapping brim which has descended from some remote ancestor and which dwarfs the head beneath it. His face is a purplish brown, and his eyes are supposed to be alive, but see only a little way.

They walk along together, taking the path that crosses the plain towards the right, both listening to the crickets. The Moon is still rising. From the low horizon she watches them, her level gaze close to the serge and herbage of the heath, and mustachioed over with sprigs, resembling a great cat lying in wait for two unconscious mice.

"Oh, see the Moon!" cries Johnny-boy.

Continued on page 13.



All material for this department should be sent to the Literary Editor. The Wave is especially interested in California literary talent, and anything regarding the writings of local authors or of interest in their lives will be given attention.

The Story of Nineteenth Century Science.

(By HENRY SMITH WILLIAMS.)

From the title of this book one would be led to believe it one of the numerous pieces of hack work turned out in one of the many libraries whose uniformity of binding seems to impose a fascination upon the uncritical public. The contents form an agreeable disappointment. Under this modest heading Dr. Henry Smith Williams has written a careful and thoughtful work of comparative scientific history which has both timeliness and permanent value. The field covered is so wide that it hardly seems that one man could acquire an acquaintance with it so broad and yet so intimate as the author possesses. Nevertheless one cannot fail to be impressed upon a careful reading of the book that the Doctor has written it con amore and not con scissors and paste pot.

With a style that is picturesque and graphic and a manner that entertains without ever tiring, he traces the century's progress in astronomy, paleontology, geology, meteorology, physics, chemistry, biology, anatomy, medicine and psychology, and does not fail to impress upon the mind with telling effect the enormous strides that science has made in all departments in these hundred years.

So familiar have we become with the elementary notions of science that we can hardly realize, for instance, that in 1801 science regarded heat as a substance and light as an emission of corpuscles from the luminous body. In those days they believed that meteorites were thrown up by volcanoes. Chemistry still considered earth, air, fire, and water as the four elements constituting the foundation of all chemical philosophy and asserted the existence of "phlogiston" and the so-called "vital force." Biology had not come into existence at all, but the natural historians were still struggling to prevent the multiplication of newly discovered species from over populating the already crowded ark of Noah. Lunatics were still chained to their beds and treated as criminals possessed with devils, and the connection between lunacy and disease of the brain was still unrecognized.

These serve to show where science found itself one hundred years ago. To trace how the plot of the story of nature was gradually unwoven by Young, Helmholz, Lyell, Dalton, Davy, Lamarack, Darwin and the rest has been the purpose of Dr. Williams. That he has succeeded admirably no one will gainsay.

In his final chapter he "adumbrates" some of the problems of the twentieth century.

What is the cause of the sun's heat?

What is gravitation?

What is the cause of evolution from the "non-vital" to the vital?

One cannot help wishing that the author would make his book the basis of a larger and more exhaustive general history of science. His logical method of presentation and his happy style will qualify him to succeed the immortal Whewell.

"Sharps and Flats" by Eugene Field.

Semi-editorial newspaper work is seldom worthy of collation into other book form than the scrapbook. The greatness of the Eugene Field cult is shown by the fact that his "Sharps and Flats," first printed in a column, so headed, in the Chicago Daily News and afterwards the Chicago Record, have been collected, collated and published. Six days of the week for twelve years Eugene Field wrote an even column, to a line, of "leaded agate," which appeared almost invariably in the last column of the editorial page. It averaged 2000 words. The product for the twelve years is a total of over 7,000,000 words of literature, ranging all the way from the most ephemeral paragraph on a passing event to as exquisite bits of prose and verse as ever illumined the pages of a newspaper.

The note of warning against Russia which Kipling struck so vigorously in his notable poem, "The Truce of the Bear," and which he has so often sounded significantly in his tales, is prominent in "The Half-Hearted," a story of Anglo-Indian life by John Buchan, generally thought to be the foremost of the younger set of English literary men,—a set upon whom, apparently, the importance of Imperial unity and world politics seem to have descended gravely, though their sense of its urgency is generally expressed in politico-romantic novels. Throughout the course of "The Half-Hearted," interwoven with its delightful pictures of life in the Scottish Highlands and its unusual love story, moves this thread of vague unrest and all too certain sense of discomfort in the Foreign Office, the veiled anxiety as to what Russia may be up to on the other side of the supposedly impassable mountain barrier that guards India on the Kashmir frontier; and it all forms very pretty reading and, for him that hath ears to hear, a significant warning. A reviewer in Blackwood's says of the novel " The pages in which Lewis Haystoun thwarts the schemes of a Russian plotter, checks single-handed the advance of an invading army,and thereby saves India, make as pretty and spirited a tale of high courage and gallant adventure as any need care to read." Houghton, Mifflin and Company have bought out the American edition.

Gilbert Parker, author of "The Battle of the Strong," which has now reached 40,000 impressions,has been elected a member of Parliament from Gravesend, an old town lying across the Thames from Tilbury, in London. Hildebrand Harmsworth, one of Harmsworth Bros., the publishers of a dozen or so magazines and periodicals, was his Liberal opponent; but the novelist denounced the Boers, called for a strong government in the Transvaal, rebuked the anti-imperialists, and won by a handsome majority. "The Battle of the Strong" has been dramatized, and is now "on tour," Miss Marie Burroughs taking the part of Guida. The novel has been continuously successful since its publication.

The chief feature of the Holiday Number of the Smart Set is the novelette that won the $2,000 prize in the magazine's recent story competition. It is entitled "The Congressman's Wife," and is by John D. Barry. It is a realistic and fascinating story of political and social life in New York and Washington, and narrates the career of a brilliant young member of Congress and his beautiful wife, who become involved in political scandals and themselves estranged.

The number in addition contains graceful and witty short stories and poems by such writers as Julian Gordon (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger), Elizabeth Duer, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Barry Pain, Gwendolen Overton, Henry Gallup Paine and Paul Laurence Dunbar.

The impression gains ground that Jack London is a coming author,—that "it is merely a matter of a few years when he will be recognized as a writer as forceful as Kipling, as finished and discerning as Lafcadio Hearn;" and that "what Kipling has done for India, and Lafcadio Hearn for Japan, Jack London has done for the Arctic." So writes Howard V. Sutherland in Impressions, of San Francisco, in taking up for the second time London's "The Son of the Wolf." "It is only a matter of time," he concludes, "when he will take his place among the few writers of really international reputation."

Seventy-five thousand copies of F. Marion Crawford's new novel, "In the Palace of the King," have been sold since its publication four weeks ago.

Books Received.

"Sharps and Flats," by Eugene Field. Collated by Slason Thompson (Chas. Scribner's Sons). 2 volumes, $2.50.

"When Rogues Fall Out," by Joseph Hatton (J. B. Lippincott & Co.); paper, 50c.

What Motherhood Means

Motherhood means either happiness or misery. There is scant happiness for the mother, who in pain and weakness brings into the world a weakling babe which she can neither nurse nor nourish.

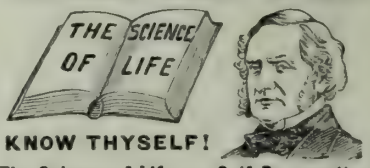
Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription fits women for motherhood. It strengthens the maternal organism. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and brings refreshing sleep. It makes the birth hour practially painless and gives the mother the nourishment to give her child.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription," and it is absolutely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"Words cannot express how grateful I am for your kind advice and your 'Favorite Prescription.'" writes Mrs. D. B. Barricks, of Perrows, Campbell Co., Va. "I feel that it has cured me. I had been in poor health for four years. Suffered greatly with my right side, also with bearing-down pains, and my nerves were in a dreadful state. After using four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' I am now well. I am the mother of two children. With the first child I suffered twenty-eight hours, and with the second I used your medicine and was sick only three hours. I believe Dr. Pierce's Favorite Presciption to be the best medicine in the world for suffering females. I wish you great success, and hope that God will bless you in your noble work."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Strength, Vitality, Manhood, THE CHIEF GLORY OF MAN



KNOW THYSELF!

The Science of Life, or Self Preservation,

A Great Medical Book for Every Man—The Million Embossed cloth, full gilt, elegant Library edition, ONLY $1.00. In paper covers, ONLY 25c. Get the best. It contains 370 pp., with engravings, 125 prescriptions for Acute and Chronic Diseases, and is the Gold Medal Prize Treatise on Aptitude and Inaptitude for Wedded Happiness, Premature Decline, Nervous and Physical Debility, Exhausted Vitality, Manhood, Varicocele, Atrophy (wasting) and ALL DISEASES and WEAKNESSES OF MEN, from whatever cause arising. The distinguished author and Nervo specialist graduated from Harvard Medical College in 1864 and has been the Chief Consulting Physician to The Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch St. (opposite Revere House) Boston, Mass., during the past thirty years. Know Thyself Manual, a Vade Mecum Pamphlet, Free to every male reader of this paper; 6 cents for postage. Write for these books to-day. They are the keys to health, vigor, manhood and happiness. Address as above. Consultation by letter or in person from 9 to 6. Sundays 10 to 1. Expert treatment and positive cure.

☞The Peabody Medical Institute is a fixed fact in the medical phenomena of this country, and it will remain so.—Boston Journal.

☞The Peabody Medical Institute has many imitators, but no equals.—Boston Herald.

A TONIC

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

Half a teaspoon in half a glass of water, refreshes and invigorates the entire system. A wholesome tonic.

Genuine bears name HORSFORD'S on wrapper.

MRS. SAHCT'S

HAIR RESTORER

A Pure and Harmless Vegetable Compound

For Baldness, Dandruff, Gray and Faded Hair, Scaly and Itching Scalp and all Diseases of the Hair and Scalp.

This marvelous compound has been used for years as a remedy in the family of Mrs. Sacht. Its wonderful curative properties became known to her friends and it is now offered to the public as a safe and sure remedy for disfiguring baldness. A reference to the front label of this bottle will show the growth of hair produced for Mrs. Sacht, who, although sixty years of age, has a long soft, heavy growth of hair of natural color.

Price 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

DIRECTIONS.—Apply to the scalp once or twice a day, rubbing it very gently to avoid injury to new young hair. Wash the hair only once or twice a month, and then only with pure castile soap and as hot water as you can stand. Rinse with cold water.

MRS. M. K. SACHT
Hair Restorer.

425 Cedar Ave., off Laguna St.

Can be had at the following Hair Dressers:
Mrs. J. S. Goldschmidt
708 Polk Street Bet. Ellis and Eddy Sts.
Telephone Polk 1321
Carl Anderson, 417 Geary Street.
J. Isacson, Pharmacist, cor. Geary and Octavia sts.
Phone E. 280

THE SAN FRANCISCO JOCKEY CLUB

TANFORAN PARK

Second Meeting, Monday, December 17th, to Saturday, December 29th, Inclusive.

SIX OR MORE RACES EACH WEEK DAY.

Six Stake Events, One Hurdle Race and Two Steeplechases First Two Weeks

First Race of the Day at 2:10 P. M.

Trains leave Third and Townsend streets for Tanforan Park at 7, 10:40, 11:30 a. m., 1, 1:30 and 2 p. m., following after the last race at intervals of a few minutes by several specials. Rear cars reserved for ladies and their escorts.

Admission to the course, including railroad fare $1.25

D. LYNCH PRINGLE, Secretary.
RALPH H. TOZER, Racing Secretary.

Going to San Jose?

"The Stanford"

is one of the most centrally located rooming houses in San Jose. It is especially desirable for traveling men and tourists. Everything clean and first class and rates are reasonable.

MRS. McCUNE, Prop.
192 South 1st St., San Jose, Cal.

The Blood-Red Moon.

Continued from page 11.

"Yes, the Moon!" returns Maid Mary.

She looks up thoughtfully. There is a secret between her and the Moon, but it does not concern Johnny-boy. They stroll onward, swinging their arms.

An hour slips by. The Moon is mounting, mounting, like an amber globe, in which a heart is burning; like an alabaster urn, filled with glowing cinders. She is smaller and paler now, but more coquettish, half obscured as she is by a mountain of white clouds, beneath which she peers out, greatly softened in splendor, her pearly tints like the pale clusters of the hortensia. She mounts higher, and again shines out with sudden beauty, like the head of a bride when the vail drops away.

"Yes, the Moon!" says Johnny-boy, pensive in his turn.

"Oh, the Moon!" cries Maid Mary, at the same instant, in a quick and joyous accent.

They stand still in the middle of the path, holding hands in a breathless silence which intoxicates them, and even the cricket respects their ecstasy.

"You have cheeks just like roses!" risks Johnny-boy tentatively.

"You have cheeks like the sun!" replies Maid Mary. "But you haven't any beard as a man should have; you look like our cure!" and she cannot keep from laughing.

She laughs and laughs again, then shouts, then rolls about in her merriment, dragging Johnny-boy down upon the heather. He has to laugh, too, though it's no fun to be compared to a beardless priest! The Moon, up above there, seems as if grinning in the same forced way, the sneering smile caught between two shadowy cloudlets that have come peeping to the surface, like two leaves of the water-lily on the surface of a yellow lake.

When they have ended their outbursts of aimless laughter they silently clasp each other in a long embrace and their lips meet is a passionate kiss.

* * * *

Clouds now gallop across the sky, as if caught in a sudden squall, and behind these devils' steeds certain flashes of moonlight gleam out against their cruppers like golden spurs.

They race so low that they seem almost to touch the plain with silent hoofs, leaving it brown and somber in splotches like bloody footprints. The wind in its dreary sweep suggests the flapping of grave-clothes—indeed, all the dead seem to rise up in protest tonight, till their tears pour in torrents, as they weep for the crimes of the long-buried, and of those just waking from sleep.

For poor little Maid Mary was driven out by her grandmother who, as she shook her fist skyward, commanded—

"Walk! Walk, I say! It is your evil fate to walk with the night!"

So, ever and again pushed out of doors by the imbecile grandmother, Maid Mary goes to and fro hiding herself beneath the wild unkempt hair she no longer cares to braid and cover. She wonders vaguely if she must always be walking, walking. Sometimes, she even feels that she is pursued and must run—but she is so tired! She wonders, too, why there is no remedy for her peculiar trouble—why she cannot turn to the right about? But she can only go stumbling on. The clouds roll along faster than she, and heap themselves into fantastic masses, climbing and writhing, then flying

To Cure a Cold in one Day.

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Grove's signature is on each box. 25 cents.

POODLE DOG RESTAURANT.—Northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets. Private dining and banquet rooms. Telephone, Main 429. BLANCO & BRUN, Proprietors.

Hotel St. Nicholas, corner Market, Hayes, Larkin and Ninth. American or European plan. Ira R. and James H. Doolittle.

Yosemite Engraving Company.

Makers of High Grade Printing Plates.
Half-Tone a Specialty.
24 Montgomery St., S. F. Cal.

Germea

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST DISH

Bank of California

SAN FRANCISCO

Capital $2,000,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits, Oct. 1, 1900 $3,514,095.87

William Alvord, President, Charles R. Bishop, Vice-President; Thomas Brown, Cashier; S. Pentiss Smith, Assistant Cashier; Irving F. Moulton, Second Assistant Cashier; Allen M. Clay, Secretary.

New York, Messrs. Ladlaw & Co., The Bank of New York, N. B. A.; Baltimore, The National Exchange Bank; Boston, The Tremont National Bank; Chicago, Illinois Trust and Savings Bank; First National Bank; Philadelphia, Philadelphia National Bank; St. Louis, Boatmen's Bank; Virginia City, Nev., Agency of the Bank of California; London Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons; Paris, Messrs. De Rothschild Freres; Berlin, Direction der Disconto Gesellschaft; China, Japan and East Indies;-Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China-Australia and New Zealand, The Union Bank of Australia, Ltd., and Bank of New Zealand.

LETTERS OF CREDIT ISSUED AVAILABLE IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

THE GERMAN

Savings and Loan Society

526 California Street

Guaranteed Capital and Surplus.....$2,238,372.45
Capital Actually Paid Up in Cash..... 1,000,000.00
Deposits, July 30, 1900.....28,938,395.02

President.....B. A. Becker
First Vice-President.....Daniel Meyer
Second Vice-President....H. Horstmann
Cashier.....A. H. R. Schmidt
Assistant Cashier.....Wm. Hermann
Secretary.....George Tourney
Assistant Secretary.....A. H. Muller

DIRECTORS

B. A. Becker, Daniel Meyer, H. Horstmann
Ign. Steinhart, Emil. Hohte, I. N. Walker,
H. B. Russ, N. Ohlandt, John Lloyd,

General Attorney, W. S. Goodfellow

San Francisco Savings Union

532 CALIFORNIA STREET

Deposits, July 1, 1900.....$26,952,875
Reserve Fund..... 218,093
Paid Up Capital..... 1,000,000
Contingent Fund..... 439,608

E. P. Pond, Pres.; W. C. B. de Premery, Vice-Pres.; Lovell White, Cashier; R. M. Welch, Asst. Cashier.
Henry F. Allen, Robert Watt, Thomas Magee, George C. Boardman, W. C. B. de Fremery, Daniel E. Martin, C. O. G. Miller, Jacob Barth, E. B. Pond.

Loans upon San Francisco and Oakland Real Estate and Farms and Farming Lands in the country.

Receives deposits. Country remittances may be made in checks payable in San Francisco, Postoffice or Wells, Fargo & Co's Money Orders, or coin by Express, but the responsibility of this bank commences only with the receipt of the money.

No charge is made for pass books or entrance fee.

Office Hours: 9 a. m. to 3 p. m. and Saturday evenings, for receipt of deposits only, 6:30 to 8 o'clock.

PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU.—Main office, 510 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Dealers in all kinds of Newspaper information. Advance Reports on all Contract Work. Phone, Main 1042

A. K. DAGGETT.—Drawing of deeds and all legal papers a specialty. Notary Public. 14 Montgomery street, San Francisco. Telephone 305.

swiftly in all directions. None remain now, except some grey tufts, soft and wooly bits of eider down floating over the cleared field above, through which the Moon is seen, small and far, resting for an instant, like a brilliant gem, upon the head of the unseen spinner

But Maid Mary does not understand the web that is woven about her. She is hurt, bruised, broken. She is no longer trim and fair, but the shadow of her shame lies large across her way. For three days past she has suffered, suffered, without daring to cry out. Ah! there is no softness in the heather this wintry night. Yet rest she must. At last she finds a bed. It is a damp hollow in the midst of the plain. The rains have fashioned it, the mud has cushioned it, and the sorceress up there has blessed it.

No matter! Maid Mary tries to make her nest within it, and as she does so, suddeniy breaks out into wild laughter—or are they shouts and yells of horror? Her teeth click together, she rolls about and calls upon all bad angels to help her now in this, her dire extremity——

And out of her mad ravings the deliverer comes, but now she is mad indeed! She seizes him by the throat, vaguely noticing in her blind fury that he is very small—but are not all the worst imps mere pygmies? She clutches his throat in a death-grip, and when he lies limp and still she breathes more freely, though there is no strength lett in her. But, ah! she does not know that he who would have been her deliverer is her own man-child!

She rises from the dreadful blood-stained ditch at last, but her garments are defiled forever, and her life cut in twain by an irreparable calamity. She has grown old all at once; her beauty is gone, her innocence is lost in the dust of the heather. Like her imbecile grandmother she, too, stands in the dark night and shakes her fist towards the sky——

And the Moon? Like Victory incarnate, beneath her black standards of death that sweep in review beneath her eye, she scintillates and burns, flinging out her cold, cheerless flame which is pure—pure as the waxen taper before a shrine. Oh, yes! the Moon shines on, a fiery flower, the blood-red blossom that thrives upon the woes of womanhood!

THE NICKEL PLATE ROAD,(N. Y.C. & St.L. R.R.) offers Eastern passengers three elegantly appointed vestibuled express trains daily between Chicago and New York and Chicago and Boston. For sleeping car reservations and full information address JAY W. ADAMS, Pac. Coast Pass. Agt. 37 Crocker Bldg., San Francisco, Cal.

Holiday Notes. Give Presents that are useful and will be appreciated

Opera Glasses, Race and Field Glasses. Binoculars, Lorgnettes, Gold Spectacles and Eyeglasses, Graphoscopes, Thermometers.

Prices Within Reach of Everyone

Geo. H. Kahn. OPTICIAN. 201 KEARNY ST., CORNER OF SUTTER

Kodaks and Cameras, Photo Supplies.

KODAK AGENCY—PHOTO SUPPLIES

Occidental Hotel

For those who appreciate Comfort and Attention A Quiet Home . . . . Centrally Located . . San Francisco, California

WM. B. HOOPER, - - MANAGER.

BLAKE, MOFFITT & TOWNE

Tel. Main 199

DEALERS IN Paper

55, 57, 59, 61 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Blake, Moffitt & Towne Los Angeles

Blake, McFall Co. Portland, Or.

Orpheum

THE ORPHEUM ROAD SHOW
Direction of Martin Beck

Severus Schaffer; Will, Cressy and Blanche. Dayne; Johnson; Davenport and Lorello; Louise Dresser; Jack Norworth; Bertie Fowler; all in conjunction with The Hawtorne Sisters, William Cahill Davis and the Great American Biograph.

Reserved Seats 25c.; Balcony 10c.; Opera Chairs and Box Seats 50c. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday. Special Matinee New Year's Day.

California THE POPULAR HOUSE

Commencing Sunday Afternoon, Dec. 30th. and for One Week Only.

Messrs. S. H. Friedlander & Co., have the honor to announce for 7 nights and 2 matinees, New Year's and Saturday

EDUARD STRAUSS
Court Ball Director of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor and King of Austra and his VIENNA ORCHESTRA

Special prices for the engagement

Orchestra $2, last 7 rows $1.50, Balcony first 4 rows $1.50, balance balcony $1, Gallery reserved 75 cents, Gallery unreserved 50 cents, Box and Loge seats $2.50

CHANGE OF PROGRAM NIGHTLY

Next Hal Reid's Delightful Idyll of the Arkansas Hills, "HUMAN HEARTS."

Alcazar Theatre

Fred Belasco and Mark Thall, Managers
Phone Main 254

Week of Dec. 31. Matinee New Years Day

Second and positively the last week of David Belasco's laughing his of the season

Naughty Anthony

Do not attend unless prepared to laugh throughout the entire evening.

Regular matinee Saturday and Sunday.

Prices—Reserved six days in advance 15, 25,35 and 50c

In Preparation—"Sweet Lavender"

FREE ELECTRIC BELT OFFER

WITH TEN DAY'S FREE WEARING TRIAL in your own home, we furnish the genuine and only HEIDELBERG ALTERNATING CURRENT ELECTRIC BELTS to any reader of this paper. No money in advance; very low cost; positive guarantee. COSTS ALMOST NOTHING compared with most all other treatments. Cures when all other electric belts, appliances and remedies fail. QUICK CURE for more than 50 ailments. ONLY SURE CURE for all nervous diseases, weaknesses and disorders. For complete sealed confidential catalogue, cut this ad out and mail to us.

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., Chicago.

FIGPRUNE CEREAL

A Perfect Food Beverage

54% Fruit
46% Grains
100 - and nothing else

A Substitute for Coffee. Nourishing and Invigorating. YOUR GROCER SELLS IT.

TTORNEYS AT LAW.

MILTON J. GREEN, Attorney at Law.—Referee in Bankruptcy in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Office, Room 94 Chronicle bldg

THE CLUB COCKTAILS

$500.00 Reward

We have advertised for nine years that a cocktail made of the same materials and proportions and aged is better than one that is made as wanted. To more strongly impress the public with our statement and to remove such little, unjust prejudices as may exist against the "Club Cocktails," we now offer $500.00 to any party who will prove our assertion to be untrue. We contend that a cocktail is a blend of different liquors and that all blends improve with age. If you think we are wrong, prove it and get the $500.00.

AVOID IMITATIONS.

For Sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., Sole Props.,
29 Broadway, N. Y., Hartford, Conn., 20 Piccadilly, W. London, Eng.

PACIFIC COAST AGENTS
SHERWOOD & SHERWOOD,
Los Angeles San Francisco Portland

Sunset Limited

For th Season of 1900=1901

Tri=Weekly

Leave SAN FRANCISCO	Leave LOS ANGELES
Mondays	Tuesdays
Wednesdays	Thursdays
Fridays	Saturdays
5:00 P. M.	8:00 A. M.

ARRIVE NEW ORLEANS, 7:20 P. M. MONDAYS, THURSDAYS, SATURDAYS.

MORE BRILLIANT THAN EVER
NEW EQUIPMENT
IMPROVED SERVICE

Secure Time Tables and any desired information from Any S. P. Co's Agent.

Pacific Coast Steamship Co.

STEAMERS LEAVE BROADway wharf, San Francisco:

For Alaskan ports, 11 a. m., Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27, Jan. 1, change to company's steamers at Seattle.

For Victoria, Vancouver, B. C. Port Townsend, Seattle, Tacoma, Everett, Anacortes and New Whatcom, Wash., 11 a. m. Dec. 2, 7, 12, 17, 22, 27. Jan. 1, and every fifth day thereafter. Change at Seattle for this company's steamers for Alaska and G. N. Ry.; at Seattle or Tacoma to N. P. Ry.; at Vancouver to C. P. Ry.

For Eureka (Humboldt Bay): 2 p. m. Dec. 4, 9, 14, 19, 24, 29, Jan. 3, and every fifth day thereafter.

For San Diego, stopping only at Santa Barbara, Port Los Angeles and Redondo (Los Angeles)—Steamer Queen, Wed. 9a. m. seamer Santa Rosa, Sun. 9 a.m.

For Santa Cruz, Monteyey, San Simeon Cayucos Port Hartford (San Luis Obispo), Gaviota, Santa Barbarba, Ventura, Hueneme, San Pedro (Los Angeles) and Newport—Steamea Corona, Fripays, 9 a. m. steamer Bonita, Tuesdays, 9 a. m.

For Ensenada, Magdalena Bay, San Sose del Cabo, Mazatlin, Altata, La Paz, Santa Rosalia and Guaymas, Mexico, 10 a. m. 7th of each month.

For further information obtain company's folder.

The company reserves the right to change steamers, sailing dates and hours of sailing, without previous notice.

TICKET OFFICE—4 New Montgomery street (Palace Hotel).

GOODALL, PERKINS & CO., General Agents.
10 Market street, San Francisco.

OCEANIC Steamship Company

Hawaii
Samoa
New Zealand
Australia

S.S. Alameda for Honolulu Samoa, Auckland, and Sydney, Wed. Jan. 2, 9 p. m.

S. S. Australia, for Tahiti, Sunday .Jan 6, 4 p.m.

S.S. Zealandia for HONOLULU only, Wednesday, Jan. 16, 2. p. m.

Line to Coolgardie, Australia, and Capetown, South Africa.

TICKET OFFICE. 643 MARKET STREET.
FREIGHT OFFICE. 327 MARKET STREET

J. D. SPRECKELS & BROS. CO.
GENERAL AGENTS

Mining Notes.

Cheering mining news comes from Pike City, Sierra county. It is learned that an Idaho corporation has begun extensive preparations for the working of one of the ancient channels for which that part of California is justly celebrated.

The long and bitter war that was successfully waged against hydraulic mining by the agricultural interests of California so completely paralyzed the county that it has never wholly recovered, and many millions of gold lay unclaimed in formerly active districts. Pike City mining district was one of these sufferers. The first blow drove from the district capital and enterprise. Those who remained have grown old, dwelling on the memories of the past, without the spirit to meet the present.

The Idaho company, known as the California-Idaho Mining Co., Ltd., slipped in quietly, got hold, at a reasonable figure, of some ground of almost fabulous richness, and immediately began the erection of bunk-houses, boarding-house, blacksmith shops, and other necessary mine buildings, and are now vigorously prosecuting a long tunnel to tap an old river channel that has, where opened at other places, produced wonders of the yellow metal.

It is to be hoped that this company, bringing with it the experience and enterprise that have made the Northwest one of the great mining regions of the world, will give its attention to other properties in this district that but wait the master's hand.

Get Into the Game.

(Sauk Center, Minn., Avalanche.)

We see that the Minneapolis Times has inaugurated a beauty contest, offering $25 in gold to the winner, ladies of Minnesota and several other northwestern states being eligible to enter. There are at least a dozen Sauk Center girls of our acquaintance, any one of whom could win that prize, hands down, and we should like to send in the pictures of a few. But the three or four young ladies we have talked with on the matter refuse to let us have their photos for the purpose. Possibly they think we are a cigarette factory agent in disguise; but we are not; we mean business. You had better get in the game, girls, for you could all beat some of the pictures so far published. The Times prints a page full every Saturday. No names are given, but the town from which the picture comes is printed under the half-tone.

Sturtevant House

Broadway and 29th Sts,,
New York. . . . .
American and European Plan
WILLIAM T. BANG, Pro.

STRAWBERRY COLD CREAM For a Perfect Complexion
Made from the pure fruit juice at
GREENBAUM'S,
200 Post Street, Corner Grant Ave. Sent anywhere on receipt of 25 cents

Don't Borrow a Home!

BUY IT. Your rent payments for the borrowed home will do it through the aid of the
CONTINENTAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA.
WM. CORBIN, Secretary and General Manager,
Home Office, 222 Sansome St., - - San Francisco

Sutter Street Hammam

A. O. LINDSTROM AL. JOHNSON
[Phone Main 5178]
TURKISH RUSSIAN BATHS
Open Day and ght for Gentlemen
For Ladies from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.
415 Sutter St., bet. Stockton and Powell

Churingia Insurance Co.

Capital, $2,250,000
Assets, $10,984,248
OF ERFURT, GERMANY
PACIFIC COAST DEPARTMENT 204-208 Sansome St., S.F.
VOSS, CONRAD & CO. General Agents

Cotton Sail Ducks

Twenty two-inch, in all numbers. Medium, Soft and Hard, also Heavy Naught, Wagon and Draper Ducks from 30 to 120 inches wide. Monumental and Imperial Ounce Ducks. Manufactured by Mount Vernon Co., Baltimore.
Murphy, Grant & Co.

Biograph Vibration Conquered.

The incessant vibration of the shutter in the biograph, necessary to impart the essential life-like veracity to the movements on the film, has been entirely obviated by a clever invention of a gentleman in London, Mr. Walter Gibbons, and his device is being employed in connection with the biograph at the London Hippodrome. By this new mechanism there will be no further irritation to the eyes of the audience, a drawback which is very painful after staring for some time at an abnormally long film.

$100 Reward $100

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The Old Government the perfection of Whisky.
BOTTLED AT THE DISTILLERY
PURE-AGED-WHOLESOME.
Used in the Medical Departments of the U.S. ARMY & NAVY SERVICE
WILLIAM WOLFF & CO.
SAN FRANCISCO, DISTRIBUTORS.
Beware of Imitations or refilled Bottles

OAK VALLEY DISTILLING CO

BRAUNSCHWEIGER & CO.
5 & 7 DRUMM STREET
San Francisco, Cal.

Brushes for barbers, bakers, hoothlacks, bath-houses, billiard tables, brewers, bookbinders, candy makers, dyers, flour mills, foundries, laundries, paper hangers, printers, painters, shoe factories, stablemen, tar roofers, tanners, tailors, etc.

BUCHANAN BROS., Brush Mfrs.,

TEL. 5610 609 Sacramento St

Famous FOR ITS Purity

SEATTLE, U. S. A.

Byron Mauzy Pianos

308-312 POST STREET

SOHMER Satisfactory to the Eye and Ear. PIANO AGENCY

Repsold Select Vintage Wines

FOR YOUR HOME DINNER

REPSOLD REGISTERED BRAND SELECT VINTAGE

This brand of Wine is served at all first class clubs, hotels and restaurants

Office, 416 Pine St. A. REPSOLD & CO.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP Has been used for over sixty years by millions of mothers for their children while teething with perfect success. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain; cures wind colic and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Sold by Druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

BAJA CALIFORNIA

Damiana Bitters "Damiana" is a powerful aphrodisiac and special tonic for the sexual and urinary organs of both sexes, and a great remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. For weak nerves these bitters are invaluable, and leading physicians recommend them as the greatest invigorator known. Long-winded testimonials are not necessary. "Damiana" Bitters are known on their merits. Send for Circular.

Naber, Alfs & Brune, Agents,

323-325 MARKET STREET. S. F., CAL.

DIVIDEND NOTICE. San Francisco Savings Union, 532 California Street, corner Webb. For the half year ending with the 31st day of December, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate per annum of three and six-tenths (3,6-10) per cent. On term deposits and three (3) per cent. on ordinary deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1901.

LOVELL WHITE, Cashier.

DIVIDEND NOTICE. The German Savings and Loan Society, 526 California Street. For the half year ending with December 31, 1900, a dividend has been declared at the rate of three and one quarter (3¼) per cent per annum on all deposits, free of taxes, payable on and after Wednesday, January 2, 1901.

GEO. TOURNY, Secretary.

HOTEL DEL MONTE

MONTEREY CAL

THIS CHARMING RESORT

is wholly distinct and unique: There is no basis of comparison by which its attractions can be measured. None other in the world has such a climate; none is planned on such a vast and elaborate scale, none so absolutely exempt from every annoyance and inconvenience, nor so easily within the reach of those whose refinement of taste enables them to appreciate its charms.

x x x x

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

transplanted to the shores of the "Western Sea."

There is but one Hotel del Monte.

Send for Souvenirs and other information to

W. A. JUNKER, Manager,

Monterey California